1 Could you pass a 6th-grade exam? What is the tallest mountain in the United States? Which American colony did Roger Williams establish? Who discovered the Pacific Ocean? . . . If you think your kids have it easy at school, here's a chance to test yourself on 10 questions they have to answer.

2 20-page book condensation: "Tiger of the Snows." "It has been a long road to the top of Everest," says the Asian native who conquered the world's highest summit. "From a ragged coolie to a wearer of medals who rides in planes and worries about income tax." Thrilling story of Sherpa Tenzing, and how he climbed to the top of the world.

3 Lure that hooks fishermen. Why on earth do folks stand in ice-cold water for hours just to catch a few panfish, when chances are they'll only catch a cold? Philip Wylie shows what 40 million Americans are really after when they fish: the happiness that comes from being alone with one's inner self.

4 Beware of hitchhikers! One hiker wore a GI uniform—but he was really a madman who stabbed the driver, stole his car. Another looked like a college boy—but he killed the driver, tried to hack off his head. Here's a warning against picking up "harmless" hitchhikers—who may rob, shoot, kill you.

5 You CAN be a stockholder. It used to be that almost all investors in common stocks were wealthy. But today thousands of wage earners are buying stocks on time, same as autos and refrigerators. Story of the Monthly Investment Plan: new way to own a share of American industry—for as little as $3 a week.

6 They're inventing the drudgery out of farm life. One machine milks a hundred cows in 2½ hours flat. Another scoops up eggs the minute hens lay 'em. There's even one that doles out feed to cattle, blows a horn to tell the critters to come and get it! Amazing peek at new labor savers down on the farm.

7 Don't drown! Do you know the safest time of day to swim? . . . what to do if you get a sudden leg cramp? . . . how to stay afloat even if you can't swim a stroke? . . . how to give the new method of artificial respiration that the Red Cross recommends? Here are eight simple rules that can save your life.

8 Do European women make better wives? Why are our servicemen marrying them at the rate of 500 a month? Why do these marriages outlast those to U. S. girls by 3 to one? Here, in their own words, are the reasons why so many of our GIs are picking European brides instead of the girls at home.

9 My most unforgettable character. Princeton's Dean Gauss would berate a boy in class, then spend all night solving his troubles. He'd end a riot with a word, brave a hurricane to watch football . . . and, best of all, he taught you to think. Here's the prof who gave his students hell—and made 'em love it.

10 Are A-bombs poisoning our atmosphere? You've heard that radioactive clouds from A-bomb tests are contaminating people, upsetting the weather, possibly deforming unborn children. But evidence shows these reports have no basis in truth. Here are reassuring facts behind the sensational scare stories.

11 The Poles among us. They landed here 12 years before the Mayflower; they saved our first colony from collapse. They've given us musicians like Stokowski, patriots like Pulaski, sports champs like Musial. Story of 6 million Americans with a capacity for hard work—and a flaming love of freedom.

12 I took off 150 pounds! "A year ago, I weighed 337 pounds. I couldn't cross my legs; I needed help getting my shoelaces tied. But today I weigh only 187—and almost anyone can accomplish the same thing." Here, to inspire anyone who's overweight, is Mac Tarnoff's own story of how he shed 150 pounds.

13 My adopted Japanese brother. It began when Yashichiro wrote the Wm. Jennings Bryans: "I come to America, be your son?" The Bryans declined—but one night he stood bowing at the door: "My parents, I am come to your feet." Poignant story of how the lad won a place in their home—and hearts.

14 Red pipeline into our uranium supply. If you saw raw material for A-bombs being dug at the biggest mine on the continent, you'd feel protected from our enemies—till you learned the men who dig it are Communist-led. How Reds seized a key union thru which they can cripple our defense.

15 Drama in real life. Suppose you had a 3-year-old daughter. Then suppose you discovered that the hospital had given you the wrong baby—and she wasn't yours. Could you bring yourself to give her up in exchange for your real child? True story of a couple who faced just such a shattering choice.

16 Golden rogue: Benvenuto Cellini. The touchiest swordsman in 16th-century Italy, he made enemies pay with their lives; took women as he pleased—and battle only brought laughter to his lips. Yet this swaggerer created some of our most exquisite gold treasures. Adventures of the world's greatest goldsmith.

17 Artificial insemination. Today, thousands of women with sterile husbands have babies this way. What is the technique? Does a woman feel guilty, bearing the child of a man she has never seen, can never know? Does a father accept a child not his own? Revealing report on a hotly debated procedure.

18 Private enterprise for public purposes. Most of us expect rivers to be controlled and "improved" by public authority. But Wisconsin has turned one over to a private company. Here's how it controls floods, gives free trees to farmers, teaches soil conservation—without charging taxpayers a cent.

19 Angel of the madhouse. From the day in 1841 when she saw four insane people chained in a frozen, filthy cell, this Boston spinster vowed she'd have the mentally ill treated as human beings. Story of Dorothea Dix, one of the most distinguished (and forgotten) women America has ever produced.

20 Radio City Music Hall. Did you know that GIs, mothers-to-be are whisked inside when lines are long? That each Rockette gets a week off a month? That an operatic film—which the manager feared would be a bore—proved an all-time money maker? Behind the scenes at the world's most fabulous theater.

21 Ike's narrow escape. In '44 a hundred Nazis sneaked across enemy lines into France. Their mission: to trap Eisenhower on the road to Paris and kill him. Exciting story of how Ike sped closer and closer to death—and how a strange and wonderful act of Providence saved him in the nick of time.

22 Do-It-Yourself? Not me! Build your own boat? Fix your own drainpipes? Why not? It's fun! It's easy! And it's cheap—just 25¢ for plans. (Of course, you'll have to mortgage the baby for tools, materials, plus the doctor's fee for that mashed thumb.) Corey Ford rebels against the Do-It-Yourself craze.

23 Are you a delinquent parent? "The main cause of juvenile delinquency," says Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, "is delinquent parents." The spiritual leader shows why your child's behavior depends greatly on the way you behave; names 3 types of parents who are a bad influence on their children.

24 What organized labor wants. Says the president of the AFL: "Years ago, when union leader Samuel Gompers was asked what labor wanted, he merely said, 'More.' The answer is the same today." George Meany (leader of 10 million workers) tells what labor means by "more," and how it plans to get it.

25 How to grow old and like it. Your chances of living to a happy old age depend not only on your state of health, but also on your state of mind. A noted medical authority poses 7 searching questions to help you judge your mental outlook . . . and suggests definite ways you can add years to your life.

26 What is a Mormon? He believes the Second Coming has already taken place. But he's not a "Mormon" (it's just a nickname for members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints)—and he doesn't practice polygamy. Answers to the questions most asked about a faith that's over a million strong.

27 The sun: tomorrow's power plant? Sunlight has already been harnessed to light electric bulbs, run broadcasting sets—and the day may come when it will heat our homes, cook our meals, run our factories. Here's how this boundless source of power works, and why it may revolutionize our future.

28 Bringing the antibiotics up to date. Today, penicillin and other antibiotics have saved more lives than all other remedies put together. But their helter-skelter use has led to disappointments and disasters. Paul de Kruif tells of hopeful new possibilities—and dangers—of so-called "miracle drugs."

29 It pays to increase your word power. Does "glutted" mean glued together, lascivious, disemboweled, or filled to excess? Adding new words to your vocabulary increases your self-confidence, your prestige—even your earning power. Here's a word quiz that's fun to do, and may pay you dividends.

30 I like pigs. Dirty? You never have to housebreak 'em. Greedy? Feed 'em right, and they'll eat only what they need. Stupid? One porker, maddened by fever, meekly gulped magnesia 'cause she knew it'd do her good! Alice Haines tells why she's hog-wild over the barnyard citizen who supplies half our meat.

Saltonstall Terms U.S. Military Policies 'Inadequate'

Calls College-Age Manpower 'Asset'

"The tension on Quemoy, Matsu and Formosa," said Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (R-Mass.) here last night, "reminds us sharply that the military and reserve policies which we have been following are completely inadequate for our present needs."

The Republican Senator from Massachusetts was brought to the University by the Carolina Forum, non-partisan Student Government agency. Joel Fleishman, Forum president, presided. Senator Saltonstall was introduced by Dr. James King, associate professor of history and social science.

The veteran politician, who served 14 years in the Massachusetts House and as Commonwealth governor for three consecutive terms, said in his opinion, the present military program must be drastically overhauled at top speed.

IKE'S PLAN SOUND

"The plan President Eisenhower has recommended is sound in its fundamentals. Our job is to put it into effect," Saltonstall told his audience. "The Federal Government must do everything in its power to establish a crystal-clear sound manpower policy . . . one that will meet our military service and reserve needs while at the same time giving the country's young men a program on which they can rely as they try to plan their own future."

Saltonstall's experience in the political realm places him on firm ground to discuss the military problems that face the United States today. His committee assignments include the chairmanship of the Appropriations, Republican Policy, Small Business and Armed Forces Committees. He is a veteran of World War I, four of his children have served in the Armed Forces, and one of his sons, Peter, was killed in action while serving with the Marine Corps.

"Simultaneously, we must be as fair as possible to these young men whom we call upon to serve. Only a clear-cut military and reserve policy and program will make it possible for them to plan their high school, college or working years in a way that makes sense for them personally while serving the nation's needs. A strong well-trained reserve is absolutely essential to our country's defense. Congress must see to its establishment and our people throughout the United States must give us their full support in this endeavor."

COLLEGE RESEARCH

Senator Saltonstall emphasized the significance of the research that is now being conducted in colleges under the auspices of both government and private business firms. He explained that while many of these programs were being carried out for our greater defense in time of emergency. They also were being conducted to help us in times of peace to improve our standard of living and the health and economic security of all people, he said.

"President Eisenhower's great speech before the United Nations in December of 1953, which has been since entitled his 'Atoms for Peace' plan, is a magnificent illustration of just this objective. It is our job now to devote ourselves and our resources to these ends: Maximum defense against potential aggressors at the least possible cost in blood and treasure for ourselves, and a great offensive through modern science toward greater security and improved living standards for all our people."

Y Leaders Leave For Meeting

Three student delegates and Mrs. Kirsten Milbrath, director of the UNC YWCA, left Chapel Hill yesterday afternoon to spend four days at the National Centennial Convention of Community and Student YWCAs in New York City.

The convention, 20th of its kind, begins today and will continue through next Wednesday.

Misses Marietta Everett, Nancy Whisnant and Joan Palmer will arrive today, after an overnight stay in Washington, D. C., and will return to Chapel Hill on Sunday.

During the convention, delegates will hear addresses by well known speakers, and will witness a dramatic presentation of YWCA history. They will also participate in discussion groups, worship services and group singing.

The address at the opening session this afternoon will be delivered by Dr. Henry Steele Commager, historian of Columbia University. Other speakers will

Phi Wins Debate On Merits Of Mistresses

By EBBA FREUND

The Phi, speaking for the "natural order" of the American wife system, won out over the Di, arguing for the continental wife-mistress combination, in Tuesday night's annual Di-Phi debate.

The Di claimed the combination system, in which a man has both wife and mistress, is "valuable to the liberal spirit."

Senator Stan Shaw, speaking for the Dialectic combination wife-mistress system, said, "The continental wives like the wife-mistress system," and the system is "valuable to the liberal spirit."

Speaking for the Philanthropic Assembly, Roy Taylor upheld the "natural order" of the American system because "marriage is more than an erotic union."

Jim Turner Di explaining the wife-mistress system, said "the mistress assumes the role of sex partner and confidante while the wife is the mother and official escort." Turner emphasized that the Di was not advocating free love or adultery. The wife-mistress system, asserted Turner, will alleviate " the frustration which grips the American people."

Miss Pat McBane, arguing the negative for the Phi, based her argument on "social norms." Citing from sociolgy and marriage books, she brought out the fact that nearly every society has strict marriage regulations.

FAMOUS MEN

Larry McElroy (Di) listed Abraham, Jacob, Solomon, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Thaddeus Stevens, Grover Cleveland and Warren Harding as men who had mistresses.

Emphasizing the "Golden Rule," Charlie Katzenstein (Phi) said the wife-mistress system in America could not support a mistress. He asked what would become of either morally or economically. the "injured" parties — illegitimate children.

Citing the Kinsey report, Dimember Bob Harrington said a "lot of women are cold."

Bill Moore said the Di wanted to change the American wife system into "a stud-farm system." Harold Downing, also speaking for the Phi, asked, considering the almost even ration of men to women in this country, "where would we go for our mistresses? Import them from the Scandanavian countries?"

Panty Raiders Face Trial In Town, UNC Courts; Coeds Not Yet Known

By DELAINE BRADSHER

As a result of the panty raid Tuesday night eight boys have been booked by Chapel Hill police for unlawful assembly and investigation of riot and will be tried by civil authorities.

The boys will also be tried by Interdormitory Council Court or Men's Honor Council.

Girls who threw panties to the boys are not known but the matter is being turned over to the student government.

The panty raid started in Lower Quad shortly before 11 p.m. McIver women's dorm was the first stop for the mob of around 1,200. From McIver the group went to Carr.

The Police Dept. said yesterday names of the students booked would be released in a "day or two."

Student Jim Turner said he, Don Fowler and Norwood Bryan went to the police station to get police to turn the students over to the Honor Council. Then the three went to Carr and got Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies to help them, Turner said. Police turned the eight boys over to Jefferies after booking them.

Wednesday morning a meeting was held with the following people present: Chief W. T. Sloan, Capt. W. D. Blake and Sgt. C. E. Durham of the city police; Roy Holsteon and Jefferies of the administration; Manning Muntzing, Lewis Brumfield, Shelton Alexander, Herb Browne and Don Fowler of student government.

Muntzing issued the following statement about the meeting:

"Representatives of student

'...Under The Jailhouse'

"We must stay calm" about pantie raids," Brumfield, Interdormitory council president, told a gathering of dormitory presidents yesterday.

Brumfield stressed that he thought the raid might not have happened if the dormitories had not been experiencing a "lax" period in their social program. Brumfield attributed the lax period to the change of IDC administrations, and to the lack of time for the new officials to get started in their work.

The IDC is now starting an excelerated social program, the president assured the group.

Brumfield said Tuesday night's raid started in the vicinity of Mangum Dormitory.

As a possible solution to the raid rash, Brumfield suggested dormitory presidents break up any "congregations" and see that "no damage is done."

"If any person is found premeditating a raid, he will be put under the jailhouse," Brumfield assured the group.

Regarding the eight dormitory residents who were arrested Tuesday night for "participating in mob violence," Brumfield said they faced possible expulsion from University residences for the rest of their college career.

Profs To Talk About Lippmann Book Here

WCUNC-TV's first round table discussion, to be televised Monday at 9 p.m., will feature four University professors discussing Walter Lippmann's latest book, The Public Philosophy.

The program will be sponsored by Pi Sigma Alpha, national honorary political science fraternity.

The panel will consist of Doctors Alexander Heard (moderator), William H. Poteat, James L. Godfrey and Lt. Col. Mark T. Orr.

Dr. Heard said, "Mr. Lippmann's writings have been widely used for several decades by political scientists. Many students of contemporary American politics will disagree deeply, however, with the thesis of his latest book, The Public Philosophy, and with the assumptions that seem to underlie it."

Dr. Poteat, of the Dept. of Philosphy, was born and raised in China and has recently returned from two conferences abroad.

Dr. Godfrey, Dept. of History is a specialist on the British Labor party movement and the government of Clement Atlee. He has published numerous articles in this country and abroad.

Lt. Col. Orr, professor of Air Science, AFROTC, is a native of North Carolina. He received his Ph.D. degree from the University in political science. He was chief of the educational program in Japan under MacArthur.

Dr. Heard, author of Two Party South, served with the State Department in Ecuador and is on the faculty of the Dept. of Political Science. At present his is doing research on money in politics under a grant from the Edgar Stern Family Fund.

The Round Table will be televised live from the studios of WUNC-TV.

Smith Act Trial In Second Week

GREENSBORO, April 20—Two UNC professors and a Chapel Hill pastor today pictured Junius Scales as "sincere but misguided" in his convictions as a Communist.

Professors Fletcher M. Green, chairman of the UNC History Dept., and Raymond W. Adams, acting head of the English Dept., joined Rev. Charles M. Jones, pastor of the Chapel Hill Community Church, in tabbing Scales as sincere but misguided.

Scales, 35-year-old confessed Communist, is on trial in Federal Court here for allegedly violating the Smith Act.

Professor Green said Scales was one of his former students adding that he and his colleagues at Carolina regarded him as a "sincere, honest, but misguided young man." Professor Adams and Reverend Jones echoed the same feelings.

All three said they knew Scales casually from his student days at Carolina. They said they had never discussed Communist doctrines with Scales.

GOVERNMENT RESTS CASE

The trial, now nearing the half way point of its second week yesterday saw the government rest its case after a week's testimony by three witnesses, one being Charles B. Childs, UNC student who joined the Communists as an undercover agent for the FBI.

The defense also has issued a subpoena for a Duke University law professor, Dr. Douglas B. Maggs. Maggs first came up in the trial when a government witness said the Duke professor had expressed a willingness to help with the defense of Scales if he was ever arrested. Maggs later denied making such an offer of aid.

In other testimony today, a Connecticut philosophy and physics professor gave the Scales jury a classroom lecture on Marxism and Leninism.

Scales mother, Mrs. A. M. Scales, also testified today.

Two Win Quarterly Recognition

Ralph Dennis, freshman, and Miss Claire Russell, senior, have been announced as first and second prize winners respectively in the Carolina Quarterly Fiction Contest.

The winners were announced by Mrs. Doris Betts and John Ehle, judges.

Dennis won first prize for his story entitled "Region of Innocence." He has had poetry published in the Virginia Quarterly Review and in Poetry Awards.

Miss Russell, senior in radio and television, won second prize for her "Josie," a psychological portrayal of a little girl. She is at present working on a series of radio dramas for the State Board of Health.

Honorable mention was awarded to Alexander Blackburn, Durham, for his story "Pale Arms and The Lover."

Applications for the editorship of next year's Carolina Quarterly are now being accepted by Miss Jessie Rehder, chairman of the Quarterly's Faculty Advisory Board, in Bingham Hall.

Dunn also said that all those subscribers who have not paid their Quarterly bill within two week of today will not receive a copy of the third issue.

GRAY WILL SPEAK:

GM Anniversary Next Week

A week of celebration, including a speech by President Gordon Gray, a blanket party and the second presentation by Sound and Fury, will mark the 23rd birthday of Graham Memorial Student Union next week.

A blanket party at 8 p.m. Monday on the lawn in front of GM will begin the week's activities. The party will feature a Negro combo playing Dixieland and jazz.

President Gordon Gray will speak on "The University and Its Responsibilities" at 8 p.m. Tuesday in the main lounge of Graham Memorial. An informal discussion and reception will be held following President Gray's speech.

At 9 p. m. Tuesday, Harvey, staring James Stewart and Peggy Dow, will be shown free of charge in Carroll Hall.

A "wear-your-Bermuda-shorts-or - old - clothes - and - bring a - blanket" party and community sing are scheduled for 8 o'clock Wednesday night on the GM lawn. Music and refreshments will be provided. In case of rain, the party will be held in the Student Union building.

Sound and Fury's second presentation of the year, Satan's Saints, will be sponsored by Graham Memorial on Thursday and Friday at 8 p.m. The presentation will be in Memorial Hall, and admission will be 50 cents.

The Eternal Mask, a GMAB Film Series movie, will be shown on Thursday at 9 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

The final event of Graham Memorial's "Birthday Week" will be an informal dance from 9 until midnight on Saturday. Jim Crisp and his 12 piece combo will play. The place will be announced later, said the GM spokesman.

The Bloomer Lobby

Petty moralistic objections to panty raids we consider infantile. Boys will be boys, as the saying goes; likewise, asses will be asses.

But we would have the ears of the panty-raiders for just one tip: When the state legislators wrestling with a crucial University budget in crucial times opened their newspapers yesterday morning we doubt that the staring headlines about a panty raid in Chapel Hill did our cause any good. Lace-frill bloomer chasing is not a good lobby for the University's budget.

If the panty-raiders would use their pent-up energies to steam up a march on Raleigh to plead for the school's fiscal neds, we all would be better served.

So, gentlemen (?), please hold the raids under wraps till we get a budget. Who knows—Maybe the Raleigh folks will give us enough money to give every Carolina male a free pair of panties.

How Not To Fight A Mushroom

The bill to increase out-of-state tuition in state-supported colleges continues to bounce around the State Legislature. This week it bounced into the chambers of the House Committee on Higher Education.

Representative William W. Taylor of Warren, the devil's advocate (and apparently a lot of devils back him up) is mightily disturbed about where dormitory space for 4,000 new out-of-state students anticipated in the next 15 years is to come from. In hinging his argument for increased out-of-state tuition ($810 per year, which would not apply to those now enrolled) on the expected lack of space, he has removed all doubt in our minds that the measure is a prohibitive measure—just as surely as a protective tariff is a prohibitive measure.

We think that a drastic discriminatory raise at this time would seriously puncture University vitality and we oppose it. Ultimately, we foresee sectionalism and stunted outlook if the Legislature chooses to tax a special group for increased revenue.

Legislative steps should be taken to assure the University of a minimum percentage of out-of-state students. True, the out-of-staters should bear the brunt of any increase in tuition; but, we maintain, the in-state students and the taxpayers of North Carolina, given the broad picture, given the dangers of a prohibitive tuition raise, should be willing to bear some of the cost of an expanding University.

And let the Legislature make no mistake: The University is going to mushroom. The laws of growth cannot be turned away, shunned, or ameliorated by short-visioned and discriminatory tuition raises.

Let Them Talk Of The Ghosts

Students from all phases of campus life, faculty members, and administrators will sit down this weekend to take a closer look at themselves and the University.

Officially, this two-day session in introspection (or bull session, if you want to be frank) will be called the second All-Campus Conference. Actually, this conference will consist merely of a number of the three species of Carolina inhabitants—students, professors, and administrators—talking over their main job, the pursuit of learning.

The Daily Tar Heel hails this meeting, urges participants to talk about the real problems of Carolina. Last year's initial All-Campus conference, after the duties of politeness were performed between the three groups, turned into a frank, informal discussion of what is wrong (and right) about the University.

The All-Campus Conference decided last year, among other things, that students don't study enough, faculty members don't teach interestingly enough, and administrators administrate too much.

We hope this weekend's conference will tackle the husky problems that loom ghost-like over campus life—the rigors of implementing the Supreme Court's segregation decree, the lack of student leadership, and the need for an intellectual leader in the administration to point out the purposes of the University to undergraduates.

If candid conversation among leaders assembled deals with these, and other vital problems, the ghosts will vanish like bad dreams.

The Ugly Head Of Crime—1 Murky Doings

——— J. A. C. Dunn

A MERE 48 hours ago in the Pine Room, we overheard the following conversation conducted sotto voce between a pair of spectacles, a crew cut, and a tan sweater;

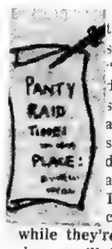
The spectacle led off by remarking that this was the season for panty raids. "This is the season for panty raids," he said, and the other two quite agreed with him. "I've always wanted to see one organized on a commando basis," Spectacles went on. "Only a minimum of men, no shouting, yelling horde, and every man assigned a specific job. An inside job, of course."

"Fine idea," said the sweater, "but you have to have someone on the inside before you can pull an inside job." Spectacles said he could arrange that if they picked the right dorm.

"The main trouble with all the panty raids I've ever seen," said the crew cut with a voice of experience, "is that the girls always have complete control of the dorm. Now if we could get two or three men into the basement of a dorm at the very outset and cut the main light switch . . ."

"There's always the telephone if they get desperate," broke in Sweater.

"Well, the telephone wire would have to be cut, too."



"Let's say there are three floors to a dorm, 30 men to the floor and ten more for odd jobs and emergencies makes a hundred men," said Spectacles.

"That's about right," agreed Sweater.

"Alright, I know a girl who'd be the inside man," said Spectacles, and he mentioned the name of a dorm. "Let's say on a Friday night she sneaks down and opens the door at 1:15. Then only three men go in, the rest wait outside. Those three head for the basement and cut the main light switch. As soon as the lights go, the rest come in. Someone will have had to already cut the telephone wires. Every man would wear a stocking over his face and carry a flashlight. Each group of thirty covers its floor . . ."

Sweater stared thoughtfully into his coffee cup and said, "Y'-know, the cops always seem to catch on to these things. What if they came and there we were trapped inside the dorm?"

"Diversionary action," said Spectacles, snapping his fingers. "Get about three hundred more men all shouting and yelling and carrying on at some other dorm, but don't cut the lights and telephone there. Then someone will call the cops and while they're taking care of one dorm we'll be cleaning out another."

"Have to pick these men carefully," said Crew Cut. "Don't want anyone giving the show away."

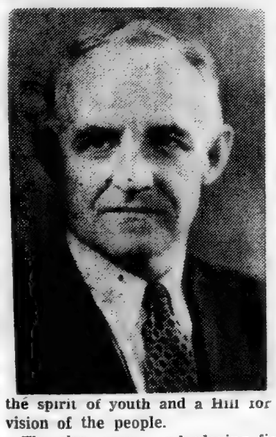
AT THIS POINT we left. However, we heard enough to convince most people that these boys were no fools. We report this incident partly because we think it amusing, and partly because we have always had a hankering for a medal to be awarded to us on CU day for "sagacity above and beyond the call of Arts and Sciences." President Gray, what'-shisname with the harmonica, and Dean Carmichael please take notice.



I REMEMBER CHAPEL HILL:

The Hill: From Immortal Dead To Eternal Youth

By Dr. Frank P. Graham

(The Daily Tar Heel is proud to present Dr. Frank Porter Graham's remaniscences about life in Chapel Hill. Dr. Graham, beloved former president of the University, has done as much as any person of any generation to mold the shape of its present and future. At present, he is contributing his unfailing energies to creation of East-West understanding in the United Nations.—Editors)

Chapel Hill, in the midst of primeval forests, hills and streams, as the beautiful seat of the original University of the people and as the lovely village home of a friendly folk, is rich in both its historic heritage and its humane hopes. The strategic little University village has been for more than a century and three score years the center and symbol of struggles, advances, frustrations and struggles again. The words denote a Chapel for deepening heightening the vision of the people.

The class rooms and playing fields, the historic buildings from other centuries, the moss-covered rock walls, the ancient oaks, the memorial bell tower and cupolas, the monumental library, reading rooms and carrels, modern laboratories, herbarium arboretum, planetarium, Institutes, Graduate and Professional Schools, Memorial Hospital, Extension Division and Communications Center, discussion forums, music hall, theatre and art galleries, dormitories and fraternity houses, village homes, flower gardens, streets and a store, campus walks vivid with students on the way to classes and gathering places for zestful youthful talk before and after the hour, the bells ringing early in the morning and youth singing in the evening, the alumni returning for the renewal of associations and fealties to alma mater beyond price in the brotherhood of the University, past, present and yet to be-all these are a part of the connotations of the life and spirit of Carolina.

Inherent in the place are the liberty and learning of the self-governing community of teachers and scholars, the tested wisdom of the ages and the venture-some idealism of youth in the campus democracy. On-going with old and recurring problems for fresh and zestful mastery, student self-government develops the self-discipline of defeat, without bitterness, and of victory, without vainglory, in the common duties and civic sense of the general life, on the way from the campus to the commonwealth, as old as the University and as fresh as the hopes of youth.

Under Shadeful Trees

Under its shadeful trees, within its ivy-clad halls, and under its steepled towers, religion, without cant would undergrid, and learning, without bias, would enlighten young men and women in their quest for truth, goodness and beauty. It is in the tradition and hope of the college that youth win freedom without license, find and publish facts without fear, organize knowledge logically, interpret the truth clearly without soanting, develop democracy without vulgarity, achieve excellence without pride, strengthen lasting friendships and high loyalties above all vicissitudes, serve private and public causes without patronage or bending, become leaders of the people without demagoguery, and grow in reverence in the way and spirit of Him who, under the Fatherhood of God, would have us all become more truly the children of one God and the brothers of all people.

'I Now Recall . . .'

Above many scenes, faces and events which now come to mind in belated response to your request, I now recall an episode which expresses the sense of the oneness of the University Community and still shines through the shadows of a dark time.

The Great Depression had brought in its train foreclosed farms, bankrupt enterprises, closed banks, the mounting state deficits, increasing legions of unemployed, desperate and almost defeated men and women. Mothers and fathers all over the land communicated their anxieties to the children of the Depression. The State of North Carolina made heavy cuts in the state budgets and hodizontal slashes in the low salaries and wages of the staffs of all state institutions.

In the midst of emergency pressures and cruel adjustments an invitation came from the Janitor's Association requesting the University president to attend their appointed meeting. He gladly went and expected to hear a justifiable petition that the janitors, if possible, should not be cut the full amount of the horizontal cut.

A decision had been made, with the advice and approval of the faculty's own elected Advisory Committee, to make the cut less in the lowest brackets and to absorb the difference in the larger cuts to be made in the highest brackets. This policy had not yet been announced and was then unknown to the janitors. We were thus prepared to tell this to the janitors for whatever little value it might have in their hard-pressed situation.

The meeting opened with the regular procedures and characteristic dignity of the Association. A chosen spokesman was recognized to state the case for the janitors. He spoke not a word about their own difficult situation. The concern spoken eloquently by him and others was only for the plight of the students caught short of funds by the closing of all banks. They had heard that the Student Loan Fund was running out and that the students were unable to pay the University and other creditors. Therefore, to help out as much as they were able to do, the spokesman said that the janitors had raised a small fund to put in the Loan Fund for students and hoped it would, when added to such other funds, help both the students and the University to come through the hard times.

Sacrifice And Loyalty

This example of sacrifice and sense of common loyalty, had its moving part in helping to raise in alumni meetings and other conferences approximately $150,000 in cash for the Student Loan Fund at the bottom of the depression. The students borrowed from the Loan Fund and paid the University. The University, stricken by heavy cuts and blows, came through to better days. The janitors revealed the living Biblical truth that those with the least in income can give the most in spirit. They made deep and personal the fact that we are members of one University family.

In the fellowship of learning and struggle, the University teaches us that we are one community in heritage and hope, loyalty and sacrifice. The ties that bind us all reach from the Old East Building to the Morehead-Patterson Memorial Bell Tower, from Davie Poplar to Kenan Stadium, from Battle Forest to Hill Hall, from libraries to laboratories, teachers to students, janitors to Kenan Professors, from centuries gone to centuries yet to come, from the immortal dead to eternal youth, in the light, liberty and brotherhood of the University of the people by whom it was given birth and for whom it lives to serve in spirit and in truth from generation to generation.

Passing Remark

A Report On The Raid And Its Participants

——— Ron Levin

HE TILTED his black cap back as he spoke and tapped his hand with the night stick. A half sneer formed on his face, and it made the night seem like a bad dream instead of spring.

"If one of them stoodents lays a hand on me, I'll knock his God . . . head off."

The other one nodded agreement, and they stood there watching the group of yelling students disperse from the steps of Carr Dorm.

Cries went up from the crowd, as the figure of Manning Muntzing appeared in a blue blazer with a feeble smile trying to show itself.

The cries became louder.

"We want Muntzing . . . We want Muntzing."

Muntzing walked slowly toward the crowd, and they backed up even more slowly giving ground to the campus politico.

"All right. Here I am. Who wants me?"

No one said anything, but you could hear cries running through the group of "We want Muntzing's pants."

A COP came up to one fellow clad only in pajama bottoms.

"All right, fella, let's move it along now. Let's all go home."

"I'm just standing here watching . . . that's all."

"You'd better move it along just the same."

The student in pajamas moved off slowly muttering to himself, as he was slowly swallowed up in the crowd.

Suddenly a new shout arose, and the crowd surged forward to where two policemen ushered a small student off in the direction of the street.

"They got one . . . They got one!"

Yes, they had one for sure. The student looked like a lifer with the dejected expression on his face. The crowd closed in menacingly around the policemen, and the two burly figures tapped the night sticks in a more convincing manner, and the crowd retreated slightly giving the trio a little room.

Then the tide flowed over to the street between Old East and New East. Manning Muntzing was arguing in a most convincing manner with one of the cops, and then I heard some say behind me.

"They took him down to jail, and Ray Jefferies is going down to get him out."

A few small groups of students started uptown for late coffee at the Mouza and Tar Heel Sandwich Shop. Others lingered talking in furtive whispers, until the policemen finally left assured that the raid was finally at an end.

YES, THE raid was at an end. Like a hurricane brewing up at sea at no definite locus in space or time, the raid had ended as suddenly as it had begun as everyone knew it would in the first place.

Carr Dorm was the only dorm entered, and that glory was short lived, for the local gendarmes appeared from out of nowhere to cut the pilgrimage short.

One student forced his way through the front doors of Smith Dorm only to come flying back out with a feminine fist of rather large dimensions being thrust in his surprised face.

Down in front of Old West, another nocturnal adventure was proudly displaying a pair of black lacy unmentionables that had been thrown from a window in Smith.

The raid was over. The campus suddenly became quiet, and lights went out one by one in dorm rooms throughout the lower and upper quads.

It was morning on the campus, Wednesday, April 20th, and thoughts of another raid turned slowly into snores and finally dreams.

Reader Is 'Disgusted' With Cut In Daily Tar Heel Days

Editors:

Being extremely disgusted with the student Legislature's attitude toward The Daily Tar Heel, which recently vented itself in the matter of appropriations for the coming year, I have written the following.

Once again student legislators have axed The Daily Tar Heel appropriations for the sum of $5,000. For the second year in succession, this campus will have only a five-day paper after football season, instead of the usual six-day issue. I think the student body deserves at least a plausible explanation for this ridiculous practice. From the trend of the recent McCarthy-like investigations of the paper, the solons seem out to get the Tar Heel.

Perhaps the budget slashers are the repercussions of the Student Party's give-away plan of a year and a half a go which left student funds rather depleted. Or again it might be a slight draft from the ill wind that roared through the state capital when the state legislature was making up the budget for the coming year.

Whatever the cause, it seems unnecessary to reduce what is one of the best services afforded the students on this campus. Unlike the IWC and the Debate Council, which serve the interest of very limited groups, The Daily Tar Heel touches every student. And as such its services should not be any more limited than they are now. The paper has enough problems without adding one of a financial nature.

I do not feel that the Legislature was acting in the interest of their constituency and I venture to say that if the matter were left up to a vote of he student body, the legislators' decision would be revoked.

Are They Kissing On Both Cheeks?

WASHINGTON — Former President Truman, in his remarks at the Rayburn testimonial dinner, revived his attacks on the press. Principally, he grumbled about the "cloak of protection" thrown about the present Administration by "so much of the press." But when he talked with friends in his Mayflower Hotel suite Sunday, he got at the real meat of the coconut.

"I have got tired a long time ago," he said, "of some mealy-mouthed Senators who kiss Ike on both cheeks."

It is, of course, manifestly impossible for the press to advertise charges against President Eisenhower and his Administration which Democrats do not make. When they get around to mentioning just why they think the man they admired as a general of the armies is an incompetent President, their remarks will be printed exactly as Mr. Truman's were.

The difficulty with which Democrats have learned to say "I don't like Ike" has been a political phenomenon. Few presidents have ever had so long a honeymoon by grace of so powerful an opposition.

The Democratic leaders in Congress are concededly expert political technicians. If they had to rate the President as administrator of the great bureaucratic complex here they would flunk him. Their public bashfulness about saying so was initially influenced, of course, by the fact that the President was demonstrably popular with the people. They also seem to retain a feeling of proprietorship in him, since Democratic Presidents gave him the great military positions that started him on the road to the White House.

The fact is, before he became a candidate for President, Eisenhower's relations with Democrats were beautifully harmonious. If he had any political criticisms of them, in the best tradition of the U. S. armed services he kept quiet. Democrats also have a heritage through 20 years of deep resentmnt against the personal attacks and ridicule which some Republicans heaped on Presidents Roosevelt and Truman. Having been so resentful, they were reluctant to appear to emulate the men and women whose behavior disgusted them.

Resentment which Mr. Truman voiced against the "mealy-mouthed" is large shared by Democratic governors and others outside Congress. There will be increasing pressure on Senate Majority Leader Johnson and Speaker Rayburn to hammer Eisenhower and show that party spirit which appeared last week in the tributes to Roosevelt on the tenth anniversary of his death.

While the press cannot report what does not happen, it is true that the majority of newspapers in this country are Republican and naturally like Ike. Their watch over him is more relaxed than that maintained over Roosevelt and certainly over Truman.

To mention one example, very little has been said about "Mamie's cottage," the house built near the Augusta golf course for the Eisenhowers by friends. It is not sumptuous but it represents a very substantial gift. Had Truman accepted one of like proportions from, say, his friends among labor leaders, there would have been an immense outcry.

Nor has much been said about the fact that about 80 per cent of the President's guests at his famous stag dinners come from the top level of the business community. Had Truman given such dinners weighted to anything like that degree with labor spokesmen he would have been in trouble.

CUFF NOTES

By BERNIE WEISS

Wilbur Jones, president of the Monogram Club and a member of the lacrosse team, has offered an explanation why the team was not permitted to fill its committments on the six-game northern trip scheduled this week.

It seems that a lack of funds was not going to keep the squad from touring New England. The boys expected to pay their own way and that the trip would cost them each about $25. They figured only on meals and travel expenses, and were hoping to stay overnight at the various schools' field houses and fraternities.

What prevented the trip was their not being able to get excused from classes. Representatives of the team, said Jones, went to O. K. Cornwell, Chairman of the Department of Physical Education, who promised the trip providing the team got an okay from South Building.

That was the next stop. Permission to be excused was granted by Fred Weaver, Dean of Student Affairs, and Roy Holsten, Director of Student Activities. Jones said the news was then relayed back to Cornwell.

Here they ran into trouble. Cornwell, it is reported, backed out of his promise by saying that the lacrosse team, not officially recognized by either the Carolina Athletic Association or the Atlantic Coast Conference, is not an official student function either. It is not classified in the same category as is the band, or glee club, or any similar organization.

So, not being recognized as anything at all, but merely existing, the club (if it may be called that) had its trip cancelled.

Six schools up north now have the opinion that Carolina does not fulfill its agreements. The Mass. Institute of Technology, University of New Hampshire, University of Mass., Trinity, Williams and Stevens Tech are left with open dates on their schedules as a result of Carolina's not having a sanctioned lacrosse "team."

Lacrosse was officially recognized as an intercollegiate sport here from 1949 through last year. It is not being sanctioned this year because a coach cannot be found. Last year's mentor, I have been told, "resigned," and because no one has been found to take the job this season, lacrosse is not officially recognized.

That is a poor excuse.

Track coaches Dale Ranson and Joe Hilton, as usual, are having their troubles finding officials and timers for home meets.

They have resorted to the distributing of hand-bills calling for persons who would be willing to lend them some time; such handbills are now in circulation asking for help for Saturday's meet here against South Carolina.

Those interested can find Ranson and Hilton at 5491.

Track Entries Due Today By 5 O'clock

Deadline for entries in intramural track is today at 5 o'clock, the intramural board has announced. The meet is scheduled for next Wednesday. Next Friday the finals will be held.

The campus horseshoe tournament finals are slated for tonight at 7 o'clock. This is the dormitory and fraternity championship event, with the campus title to be put at stake at a later date.

Duke Leads UNC, 4-3; 2 Matches Postponed

Only Bradford And Kerdasha Win Singles

Remaining Doubles On Today At 3 O'clock

By DAVE LIEBERMAN

Carolina's varsity tennis team was stymied yesterday for the first time of the season.

Two matches were postponed on account of darkness, but when the day's total had been added up, Duke's Blue Devils had the upper hand, 4-3, by virtue of taking four of the six singles matches. UNC won the only doubles match played.

The two remaining doubles contests are scheduled today at 3 o'clock on the varsity courts.

The only Tar Heel winners in singles yesterday were Tommy Bradford and Ronnie Kerdasha, as Herb Browne, Bobby Payne, Pete Green, and Don Thompson went down before the racquets of the Blue Devils. Two of these four singles losses went three sets, and it was because of this that the No. 2 and 3 doubles matches had to be postponed.

BRADFORD, playing the No. 3 position against Sonny McCord, who should have rightfully been in the sixth position for Duke, blasted the Dukester off the court in 25 minutes, 6-0, 6-0. Duke, yesterday juggling its lineup so that it would have an even chance in the last three singles matches, moved McCord up to third position and shoved the third, fourth, and fifth men down to fourth, fifth, and sixth positions. This move payed off, as the Blue Devils won two of these last three matches, Kerdasha being the only Carolina man to break through with a win over Leif Beck, 6-3, 6-3.

Herb Browne, in the No. 1 singles match, down 2-5 in the second set after having lost the first, 4-6, gave Carolina fans some hope in taking a love game on the service against Buzzy Hettleman. This made it 3-5. But that was all he could do as Hettleman won the next game to take the set, 6-3.

PAYNE, PLAYING beautiful tennis in spots, lost to Green of Duke in a hard match that went three sets. It was the first time this season that Payne was forced to play more than two sets, but it looked as though he might come through with a win after all when his booming cannonball serves started hitting. It was all Green, who is Pete Green of the Tar Heels' cousin, could do to get his racquet on the ball, but Payne could not break through Green's softer service to win the second set. Finally, Payne faltered, Green broke through to win Payne's serve and then took his own to win the second set, 12-10. Then he took the third without too much trouble, 6-3. This was Payne's first loss in the 13 matches played thus far this season.

In the No. 4 singles match, Pete Green lost to Dave Schimmel in three sets in a match that went three hours and ten minutes. Green lost the first set but came back to win the second; and in the third, he looked as though he might have had the weaker-hitting Schimmel with his back to the wall, but Schimmel's consistency finally paid off—he beat Green, 6-4, 5-7, 9-7.

IN THE ONLY doubles match played this afternoon, Browne and Bradford easily took Hettleman and Johnny Kopf, 6-2, 6-3. It is expected that Carolina will take the remaining two doubles matches this afternoon without too much trouble, and thus win the match, 5-4.

The summaries:

Singles: Hettleman (D) defeated Browne, 6-4, 6-3; Green (D) defeated Payne, 2-6, 12-10, 6-3. Bradford, (UNC) defeated McCord, 6-0, 6-0; Schimmel (D) defeated Green, 6-4, 5-7, 9-7; Kerdasha (UNC) defeated Beck, 6-3, 6-3; Kopf (D) defeated Thompson, 7-5, 8-6.

Doubles: Browne and Bradford (UNC) defeated Hettleman and Kopf, 6-2, 6-3.

One, Two Runs Make Difference, As UNC Diamond Record Shows

North Carolina baseball coaches Bunn Hearn and Walter Rabb, whose Tar Heels play host to South Carolina Friday and Clemson Saturday, are gentlemen fully aware of the difference that one or two runs can make. The Tar Teels just haven't been able to come up with an offense to match their defense and as a result have been dropping the close ones.

Through the first 13 games, North Carolina had a record of 3-10. However, a look at the statistical side of the picture showed the Tar Heels to be a little closer to their opponents than the record indicates.

Of those first 10 losses, the Tar Heels dropped three of them by one run and six by two. The 10th defeat was by a margin of only three tallies. Overall, North Carolina came up with 44 runs in its first 13 outings, with the opposition getting only 46.

In the few games where the Tar Heels have been hitting, they have won by comfortble margins. Michigan State fell to North Carolina, 4-1, Ohio, 6-1, and Maryland, 10-5.

OUTFIELDER CONNIE Gravitte and first sacker Will Frye have accumulated most of the team's hits. Gravitte's average after the first 13 tilts stood at .341 and put him far out front as the club's top hitter. Frye's .297 figure ranked him second.

Gravitte and Frye have also been supplying most of the team's slugging. Frye has one homer and three doubles, and Gravitte two homers and two doubles.

Both the South Carolina and Clemson tilts will be Atlantic Coast Conference games for the Tar Heels and will give them a chance to pull up their sagging league record. However, both opponents have outstanding clubs and are expected to give North Carolina stiff competition.

Although the Tar Heels have faced six conference foes to date, it will be their first outings against the Gamecocks and Tigers.

THE TWO-DAY invasion of conference teams signals the beginning of a long line of intra-conference contests for the Tar Heels. After the South Carolina and Clemson games, the Tar Heels must wade their way through nine straight Atlantic Coast Conference tilts.

Friday's game with South Carolina will get under way at 3:30, and the Saturday contest at 3 p.m.

In The Majors:

Former Brooks Give Orioles First Victory

NEW YORK, April 20, (AP)—Erv Palica, who fretted in the Brooklyn doghouse for years, gave Baltimore its first victory of the season after six defeats today by beating the New York Yankees 6-3 with relief help from Ray Moore, another former Dodger.

Hal Smith, highly-touted rookie catcher who was traded to the Orioles in the Bob Turley deal, helped ruin his old owners with a two-run homer off reliefer Art Schallock in the fifth. Smith drove in half the Oriole runs.

Bob Grim failed to last two innings and required 55 pitches to retire four men. It was the second straight loss for the right-hander who won 20 to become Rookie of the Year in 1954.

PALICA lasted the longest of any Baltimore pitcher this year before he finally was replaced after Irv Noren walked and Andy Carey singled in the eight. The longest previous tour by any Baltimore pitcher was 5 1-3 innigs. The pair of former Brooks held the Yanks to six hits.

Freshman Blues Whip Varsity Whites, 72-68; Quigg Tallies 28, Rosenbluth 24, Kearns 15

By BERNIE WEISS

A preview of things to come next basketball season was held last night in Woollen Gym when spring cage practices came to a rousing climax. A Blue team composed mostly of rising sophomores, ably assisted by Jerry Vayda, held off the White team, composed mostly of last year's varsity members, and won 72-68 in the tropical heat with mosquitoes to match.

Lenny Rosenbluth led the faltering White squad with 24 points, but he was out-scored by the man who is expected to do great things for the Tar Heels next winter—Joe Quigg. Quigg had 28. Tommy Kearns, of the Blues, had 15, and White guard Tony Radovich scored 14.

Coach Frank McGuire was "satisfied" with the outcome, but he made no further comment.

IT WAS A ROUGH affair, with a total of 57 fouls being called by three referees. It was feared that the heat might have gotten to one or more, so the arbiters alternated with each other, working short stints.

The game was so rough that five players fouled out. For the final 15 seconds the Blue team played with a trio, the bench having been wiped clean.

OTHER SIDELIGHTS: The Blues led most of the way. For a brief period in the second half, the Whites had a one-point lead, but never more than that. . . . Play under the backboards was exceptional, with good organization of plays. Radovich, Pete Brennan and Quigg dominated rebounds. . . . Rosenbluth had four fouls at intermission, played the second half errorless. . . . Kenny Rosemond, the Navy veteran making his first appearance before Tar Heel fans, drew praise from the crowd of about 900. He showed a defensive ability to stay with the shifty Kearns and also demonstrated talent offensively with hooks and drives. . . . Bob Cunningham looked good with a nifty pair of hands. He intercepted many a pass.

The passing, incidentally, was quick and fast, as was the general all-around play. Frank Goodwin appeared to be slightly bewildered at times, the ball was moving so fast. . . . Kearns was up to his old freshman tricks, driving in under the basket and flipping up the ball underhanded. Bob Young and Radovich were caught fouling him twice. . . . The game was played with 12-foot foul lanes, this rule going into effect next season.

MOST INTERESTING part of the evening: The half-time show between local grammar school boys. The sixth grade at Chapel Hill school won over the fifth grade, 10-2, with football-baseball UNC star Tom Maultsby refereeing the hilarious affair.

LOVE IN REVERSE

They were at the campus swimming pool. She was standing on the diving board—lithe, young, vibrant. He came swimming over. "Hey," he called, climbing up on the board, "was it you who made that dive a minute ago?"

She nodded—lithe, young, vibrant.

"Whew!" he whistled. "That was some dive! A back jackknife two and a half twist full gainer swan. Where did you learn to dive like that?"

"I fell off the board," she explained.

"Oh," he said. He looked at her—lithe, young, vibrant. "Let's go steady," he said.

"But I don't know anything about you," she said.

"What's there to know?" he said. "I'm a typical American college man—young, healthy, and broke."

"That's good enough for me," she said, "for I am not interested in money. I am a girl of simple tastes—lithe, young, vibrant."

"Did!" he whispered.

"Crazy!" she breathed.

Their lips met. Their arms twined. They fell off the board.

"If you only knew," he said later, as he applied artificial respiration, "how long I have been looking for a lithe, young, vibrant girl of simple tastes, for though my heart is large and full of love, my purse is lean and meagre. My cruel father sends me an allowance barely large enough to support life. So I have been looking high and low for a girl of simple tastes."

"Search no more," she said. "My tastes are simple; my wants are few. Just take me riding in a long, sleek, new yellow convertible, and I am content."

"Goodbye," he said and ran away as fast as his chubby little legs could carry him, for he knew this girl was not for the likes of him. He had neither convertible nor hardtop, nor the money to buy one, nor the means to get the money, short of picking up his stingy father by the ankles and shaking him till his wallet fell out. No, there was nothing for it except to forget this girl.

But lying on his pallet at the dormitory, he could not get her out of his mind and finally he knew that whatever the expense, he had to have her—lithe, young, vibrant.

So he sold a few things—his textbooks, his overcoat, his Hi-Y pin, his roommate's truss—and soon he had accumulated a goodly sum. He went to a place that sold automobiles. "How much does it cost," he said, "to buy a yellow convertible automobile?"

The man told him. He collapsed in a gibbering heap.

After a while he stirred and shambled home. But on the way he passed a place with a big sign that said: RENT A CAR—DRIVE YOURSELF. Hope came into our hero's eyes. He went inside. "How much does it cost," he said, "to rent a yellow convertible automobile?"

"Ten dollars a day, plus seven cents a mile," said the man.

"Done and done," said our hero, and soon he drove away in a long, sleek, new, yellow convertible.

"Oh, goody!" said the lithe, young, vibrant girl when she saw the car. "This suits my simple tastes to a T. Come, let us speed over rolling highways and through bosky dells."

And away they went. They drove north, they drove south, they drove fast, they drove slow, they drove east, they drove west, they drove and drove and drove and, finally, tired but happy, they parked high on a windswept hill.

"Philip Morris?" he said.

"Yum, yum!" she said.

They lit up. She snuggled against him. "You know," he said, "you are like a Philip Morris—mild and fresh and relaxing."

"But there is a big difference between me and Philip Morris," said she. "They're available in king-size and regular, and I am only available in regular."

They laughed. They kissed. He screamed.

"What is it, dear man?" cried she, alarmed.

"The speedometer," he said. "I just noticed. We put on 200 miles tonight, and this car costs seven cents a mile, and I have only $14 left."

"But that's exactly enough," she said.

"Yes," he said, "but we still have to drive home, and that will put a lot more miles on the car. Where will I get the money to pay for that?"

"Gee, I don't know," said she.

"Me neither," he said glumly. He started the motor and backed out of the parking place.

"Hey, look!" said the girl. "The speedometer doesn't move when you're backing up."

He looked. It was true. Mileage only registered when the car was moving forward—not in reverse. "Eureka!" he said. "That's it!"

"Do you mean—" said she.

"Exactly!" said he. "I will drive home in reverse. Then no more miles will register and I'll have enough money to pay!"

"I think that's a George idea!" she cried, and she was right. Because today our hero is in the county jail where food, clothes, and lodging are provided free of charge, and his allowance is piling up fast. By the time his sentence is ended, he should have enough to take his girl out riding again.

UP-Run Student Legislature Takes Over Tonight

Tennyson Set Here Today

The great grandson of the Victorian poet laureate, Alfred Lord Tennyson, will speak here today at 4:30 p.m. in the Library assembly room.

Hallam Tennyson will speak under auspices of the English department on "Family Reminiscences of Alfred Lord Tennyson."

Tennyson will also speak at a 12:45 luncheon meeting today in south room of Lenoir Hall on "Mind of Asia." The talk will be open to the public.

The speaker's literary work began at the age of 11, when he wrote his first play. His second, written at the age of 17, was performed by the Oxford niversity Dramatic Society. His first short story was written at the age of 22 and published in Horizon. A book of short stories, entitled The Wall of Dust, by Tennyson was published in 1948, although he had written it some time before.

His later work includes Minds in Movement, a study of relations between Asia an dthe West, Tito Lifts the Curtain and Saint on the March, the story of Vinoba Bhave, Gandhi's successor.

During the Blitz of World War II, Tennyson worked in the East End Rest Centres and then with Dalmatian refugees in Egypt. He also worked with the rehabilitation of Jewish communities of central and southern Italy and rebuilding villages destroyed by the Germans in the Abruzzi Mountains.

While in India under the auspices of AFXC and FSC in 1946, Tennyson orgainized Pipha-Raghabpur village project. During that time he met Gandhi.

At present he is writing a novel about India, in addition to frequent articles for The Manchester Guardian, Spectator, New Statesman and other publications.

government, administration and police met this morning to discuss the situation of the panty raid the preceding night.

"At that time it was agreed by those present that the eight people arrested last night would be subject both to civil court action and action by the Inter-dormitory Council Court or Men's Honor Council.

"The charge on the civil case will be one of unlawful assembly and instigation of riot, which is a misdemeanor with a maximum penalty of two years in jail, but with a likely penalty of a fine.

"All persons living in dorms that were arrested will be tried on the charge of breaking of quite hours by the IDC Court with a maximum penalty of removal from all University residence halls for the duration of their college career.

"All persons involved not living in dorms will be tried by the Men's Honor Court on the charge of conduct unbecoming to gentlemen, with a maximum penalty of expulsion from school, but with a likely penalty of probation. The IDC Court will also refer cases they deem necessary to the Men's Honor Council on the same charge.

"The committee also discussed means of preventing such future incidents, which cast a bad light on the University throughout the state. It was hoped that if the situation ever arose again, individual students would arise (sic) to the occasion in helping to maintain order."

Mrs. Florene Cooke, housemother for McIver, said a house meeting last night would decide what to do. "It is being turned over to the student government and the girls," Mrs. Cook said.

"I don't know who the girls (who threw panties out the window) were, but I know what room they came from," she said.

Fowler Will Be Sworn In

By NEIL BASS

The new University Party-run student Legislature will take over tonight shortly after the body convenes at 7:30.

There are several formalities that the body must go through first, but it shouldn't take long for Jim Exum and company to take things in their own hands.

The agenda for the session will include swearing in new student body officers and inaugural address of new President Don Fowler.

There has been some question as to just what the majority in the Legislature will be for the 19th Assembly.

It was claimed at first by Jim Turner, members of the Student Party, that the plurality should rightfully be 28-22. This would have made the Legislature an exact reverse from the majority the SP had last assembly.

There was no question that the UP had the top hand, and the UP would probably be out to pass some of the bills the SP defeated last assembly.

After several inquiries, it was learned that the legislature member in question (on which the 28-22 or 29-21 plurality higned), Miss Jackie Wilkins, is for the UP.

Thus the majority is 29-21 with the UP swinging the top hand.

The new party bosses are expected to be top spokesmen for their respective parties are floorleaders Jim Exum (UP) and Bill Baum (SP). However it is expected that the SP will elect a new floorleader as its caucus tonight. Baum was only a temporary chief spokesman.

Press Club Competition Deadline Set Saturday

Students who wish to enter the Press Club's annual writing contest must have their entries by Saturday, announced Miss Hazel Crawford and Clinton Andrews, contest co-chairman, yesterday.

The entries may be turned in to Mrs. Mary Scroggs, secretary to the School of Journalism in Bynum Hall; Miss Hazel Crawford, 206 Alderman, or Clinton Andrews, 16 Old West.

Awards will be given by the Press Club in straight news writing, feature writing, sports writing and editorial and column writing divisions. They will consist of certificates of merit and subscriptions of Time magazine.

Entries should be pasted on white sheets of paper with name of writer, writer's address, the name of publication using the article and date of publication written on the back. The entries must be in published form.

OVERTHROW OF THE GOVERNMENT——

JURY FINDS JUNIUS I. SCALES GUILTY

GREENSBORO, N. C., April 21 (AP)—Junius Irving Scales, 35, was convicted tonight of advocating violent overthrow of the U. S. government through his position as Communist party chairman in the Carolinas.

He will be sentenced tomorrow when court convenes at 11 a.m.

The jury of three women and nine men deliberated from 7:35 p.m. until 9 p.m.

JUNIUS I. SCALES
. . . guilty

The foreman, Paul C. Edgerton, Greensboro real estate man, announced the verdict. The jury then was polled individually.

The maximum penalty is 10 years or $10,000 fine or both.

At the close of the nine-day trial, Scales said in an interview "I reiterate my innocense." His lawyer said the verdict will be appealed to the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

"My party has never advocated force and violence." Scales told newsmen. "I have never advocated force or violence. The current activity of my party is devoted especially toward avoiding the force and violence involved in an atomic war, on Formosa or anywhere else.

"I think my attorney conducted a magnificent case and a case in which I will be utlimately cleared.

"I was sorely tempted to go on the stand because of the kind of slander I have been sitting here listening to for days. One of the main factors that influenced me not to go on the stand is that to my knowledge without any exception every Smith Act defendant who has taken the stand in his own behalf has received an additional sentence as considerable as three years because they refused to name persons as communists who would suffer as a result. The other reason is that I think the government completely failed to make a case."

Scales has been free under $35,000 bond posted by his mother last Dec. 21, a little more than one month after his arrest at Memphis, Tenn. Over defense

Annual Tennis Ball Slated For Tonight

Dancing under the stars will get under way at 9 o'clock tonight as the annual Tennis Ball gets underway on the asphalt tennis courts behind Cobb Dormitory, announced Co-chairman Ted Kemp yesterday.

Tables and chairs arranged cabaret style will surround Roy Cole's orchestra. The tennis courts will be decorated with colored lights and Japanese lanterns, said Kemp.

The Tennis Ball, an annual affair, will be sponsored jointly by the Interdormitory Council and the Women's Residence Council. Dress according to co-chairmen, will be "very informal."

A car parade at four o'clock this afternoon will prologue the tennis ball, according to Ed Gaines, chairman of the parade.

Gaines urged all entrants to have their cars in front of Woollen Gym by 3:45 p.m. at the latest. The parade will start from Woollen and then go up Franklin by way of the girls' dormitories. The parade will then go to big Fraternity Court and then by South Building, where cars will be judged.

Entries will be judged on the basis of originality, said Gaines. Gaines also asked that no car bear the name of the organization which it represents.

Legislature's 30 Trustees Named

RALEIGH, April 21 (AP)—A slate of 30 trustees for the Consolidated University of North Carolina has been unanimously approved at a joint House and Senate session.

The trustees elected were picked last week by the Joint Committee on University Trustees. The slate included 10 present members of the board who were re-elected, and 20 newcomers.

In its nominations the joint committee unseated 11 trustees, some of whom had served for many years. Two prominent members who were not re-elected were Dr. Clarence Poe of Raleigh and L. P. McLendon of Greensboro.

The formal vote today on the election of trutees was 34-0 among senators and 100-0 among House members.

Trustees re-elected were: Rep. John W. Umstead, Chapel Hill; Sen. John H. Kerr, Warrenton; John G. H. Geitner, Hickory; O. Max Gardner Jr., Shelby; Ben E. Fountain, Rocky Mount; H. D. Bateman, Wilson; Mark C. Lassiter, Snow Hill; Spencer Love, Greensboro; Rudolph I. Mintz, Wilmington; Mrs. B. C. Parker, Albemarle.

Face Trial

Nine UNC students yesterday were charged and face trial for taking part in Tuesday night's panty raid.

They were charged and will face trial with unlawfully and wilfully disturbing women students, which is in violation of a state law.

One student, freshman H. H. Murray of Raleigh, was arrested and booked on an open charge during the raid.

The [illegible]ight facing trial in Chapel Hill recorder's court include: Edward C. Ross of Augusta, Ga., George T. Eanes of Thomasville, Robert D. Lynch of Raleigh, Donald Strayhorn of Wilmington, Joseph Eugene Bartholomew of Raleigh, Grady Lee Wells of Charlotte, William C. Latham of Bethel and Bob Brame of North Wilkesboro.

Statesman Beverly Lake To Talk Today

Dr. I. Beverly Lake, assistant attorney general of North Carolina, will speak tonight at the Delta Theta Phi law fraternity bi-weekly dinner meeting.

Dr. Blake, who last week presented the official North Carolina position with regard to desegregation of the state's public schools to the United States Supreme Court, will speak on that subject.

The meeting will be at 7 o'clock at The Pines. A question and answer period will follow the talk.

Ragsdale To Head Tarnation

Bill Ragsdale, junior from Atlanta, was yesterday appointed editor of Tarnation, campus humor magazine.

Other new members of the staff, named yesterday by outgoing editor Rueben Leonard and student body President Tom Creasy are: Stan Shaw, managing editor; Bob Stapleton, business manager, and John Comer, contributing editor.

Ragsdale said yesterday he hopes to build Tarnation into a magazine that "all the students will read and subscribe to." He said he hopes to increase its circulation on other North Carolina college campuses.

Tarnation's present subscription list numbers over 2,000, with mail subscriptions in 40 states.

On giving up the reins, Editor Leonard announced the results of a Tarnation poll of advertisers and publishers of college humor which ranked Tarnation among the top 10 [illegible] humor magazines.

No Alcohol Whatsoever Allowed At W. & Mary

The "possession and consumption" of any alcoholic beverages on campus will be prohibited beginning next fall at the College of William and Mary, Wiliamsburg, Va., according to a story appearing in the April 19 edition of the student newspaper there.

The Flat Hat story also said that the presence of an administration-approved chaperone will be required in all fraternity lodges during social hours.

The new regulation was announced by the William and Mary administration on April 18, according to the story.

The new regulation was made by the Board of Visitors, "apparently . . . at its April 2 meeting in Norfolk," said the story. The regulation also includes a provision for "a paid advisor to publications and requires regular consultation between advisors and staffs of the publications," said The Flat Hat story.

The William and Mary Board of Visitors had earlier appointed a five-member special investigating committee to study a list of grievances which the student body had presented to it. The story said that the April 2 board meeting had been held to hear recommendations of the investigating committee.

The statement of the board prohibits the "possession or consumption of any kind of alcoholic content anywhere on the campus or in any college building, sorority house or fraternity lodge . . ." It also prohibits the same "at any dance or social function given in the name of the College or sponsored by any college student, organization or group."

University Party Captures Important Legislature Jobs; Fowler Wants 'Cooperation'

Fowler Makes 4 Points

Newly-elected student body President Don Fowler stressed four major points in his inaugural address last night.

Fowler gave his stand before the first session of the 19th student Legislature Assembly on the proposed fee raise, segregation, panty raids and cooperation with the administration.

'FEE RAISE . . . ENCOURAGE GROWTH'

On the fee raise that will come before the student body in referendum form soon, Fowler said, "Our student union has taken great strides during the past year . . . This growth should be encouraged by all the student body." If the student body passes the fee raise, Graham Memorial will receive $3 of the raise per student per year.

ON SEGREGATION

Announcing his view on segregation, Fowler, who ran for the presidency independently, said, "Last spring's decision of the Supreme Court placed North Carolina and the rest of the South in a position of no longer avoiding the issue . . . I want to make it clear from the outset that I have faith in the wisdom of the officials and the governor of our state . . . I, for one, will give them my full support when their decision is made known."

PANTY RAIDS

Fowler accented in his address that "Administration officials, local police, and you and I will have to work together to solve this problem" (panty raids).

"Although no serious damage was incurred, the University suffered a loss in reputation . . . it is up to us, as student government officials, to take the responsibility of preventing any such future events," the new president said.

'JUNIOR PARTNER'

Regarding the student-administration relationship, Fowler said, "The recent campus election showed clearly that the students are concerned with the future role of student government . . . They are anxious to join hands with the administration and become, in reality, a junior partner in the day by

UP Control Gets Posts; SP Smarts

By NEIL BASS

The new student Legislature was sworn in last night, and immediately the 29-21 University Party majority assumed almost complete domination.

The Student Party had to have a dynamic appeal by Bill Baum and a reminding of political protocol and manners by Tom Lambeth to snare a minority of the elected offices.

It was sweet revenge for the UP. It had been the underdog, plurality-wise, for more than four assemblies until an overwhelming trend in this year's elections swept the SP control out the window.

Continually SP legislators made direct appeals to the UP for support. Bob Harrington (SP) even asked for support for the sergeant-at-arms post "on bended knees" but to no avail as Jerry Martin won by a 21-19 plurality.

MONTEITH SPEAKER PRO TEM

The UP control began to show top hand with the first election — that of naming speaker pro tempore. Jim Monteith (UP) took the spot 22-17 over Bob Young (SP).

Then the UP numerical control gave almost humiliating defeat to the SP without interuption until Bill Baum captured chairmanship of the Rules Committee. Tom Lambeth captured the other important post the SP got only after reminding the UP-run body that both parties were, according to custom, supposed to have representation on the Publications

NSA Spring Assembly Gets Underway Here

The Carolinas-Virginia Region of the National Students Association began its spring assembly here yesterday.

A conference of student body presidents was held from 2 until 5 p.m. yesterday with Misses Nancy Halton from Greensboro College and Deanie Chatham from Woman's College presiding. A film entitled Developing Leadership was shown.

Discussion groups were held on Developing Leadership and Student Government Organizations at 3 p.m.

Dr. Nicholas Demerath, professor of sociology, spoke to the Association on "Dynamics of the Group and Parliamentary Procedure" at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker.

Miss Mary Lou Vaughan presided at a regional executive committee meeting held at 7 p.m.

The opening plenary session was held at 8 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge at which Wally Longshore, national vice-president of the Association, spoke on "Defining the Role of the Student in the College Community." His speech was followed by a coffee hour held in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

The meeting will continue today with panel discussions on "The Role of the Student in the College Community," "The Responsibility of the Student," and "The Role of the Student in Student Government Affairs."

Informal coffee break, movie, banquet and social hour are scheduled tonight.

No Integration Now, Creasy Tells Confab

Tom Creasy, Carolina's representative at an integration conference at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said yesterday he feels "we are not ready for integration right now."

The subject of the conference was selectivity in regard to discriminatory practices in colleges and universities in the United States.

Creasy said all areas of the country were represented with some 200 representatives from 90 different colleges and universities. The conference lasted four days.

"It was not a conference to try to propagandize integration, but solely to bring all sections of the country together to discuss sectional beliefs and attitudes in regard to the very serious problem of integration today," Creasy said.

The outgoing president of the student body said, "I tried to present the feelings of the Southern people." Creasy ended his term of office last night.

Creasy said he told the conference "the Southern people are not opposed to equal opportunities for the minority races, but simply feel that we are not ready for integration between the races at this time."

He said, "I found that (integration) was also a problem in the North today and that they are far from setting the problem themselves."

On the conference he said, "No big resolutions were presnted, but it seemed to me that the consensus . . . of the conference was that integration should evolve through evolution rather than revolution.

All-Campus Conference Starts Today

The second All-Campus Conference will begin today with an address by Dr. C. Hugh Holman, chairman of the College of Arts and Sciences, at 2 p.m. in 105 Gardner.

The place of Dr. Holman's speech was changed to Gardner after the announcement in Tuesday's paper that it would be in Carroll Hall.

Dr. Holman will speak on education and will deal with the two main questions of the conference, "What Does the University Have A Right To Expect of the Students?" and "What Do the Students Have A Right To Expect of the University?"

GROUP MEETING

Following the speech, the group will adjourn to small group meetings to begin discussion of the conference questions. Under the question, "What Does the University Have A Right To Expect of Students?" the groups will discuss the responsibilities of a student and the question of whether the students are fulfilling their responsibilities. Under the question, "What Does the Student Have A Right To Expect of the University?" the groups will discuss the meaning and aim of education, what the University is preparing students for after graduation, the value of extra-curricular activities, how well Carolina meets the requirements of education, what students must have from Carolina to attain this education and how Carolina may better provide this education.

The conference will continue tomorrow with more group discussions at 2 p.m. It will close with a dinner in the north room of Lenoir Hall. The dinner will be at 6:30. Dr. Harris Purks, University provost, will be the dinner speaker.

DR. HUGH HOLMAN

SECOND GROUP

The second group, moderated by Miss Ruth Conner, will meet in 307 Library. The members are David Burrows, Joel Fleishman, Jim Martin, Miss Luanne Thornton, Bob Young,

Graham Rights, Zeb Keever, David Reid, Miss Joan Purser, Scotty Hester, Jim Exum,

Bill Wiatt will moderate the third group, which will meet in 323 Library. The members are Miss Bebe Baumann, Bob Harrington, Louis Kraar, Manning Muntzing, Miss Alex Thacker,

Jim Monteith, Miss Marilyn Zager, Jack Mraz, Miss Lynne Zimmerman, Miss Joan Palmer,

Gerald Mayo, Dr. E. A. Cameron, Dr. H. K. Russell, Dr. David Monroe and Dr. Preston Epps.

The fourth group will meet in 101 Hanes Hall and will be moderated by Horace Stacy. The members are Miss Jane Cocke, Jack Hudson, Ed Lipman, David Mundy, Miss Shirley Thomas,

Sam Wells, Ed Yoder, Gene Whitehead, Ray Long, Miss Donna Ashcraft,

Dr. W. D. Perry, Dr. William Poteat, Dr. Robert McKee and Dr. William Wells.

FIFTH GROUP

The fifth group will be moderated by Ralph Bowden and will meet in 101 Gardner. The members are Charlie Dean, T. Kepley, Miss Ruth Jones, Larry McElroy, Rollie Tillman,

Miss Peggy Ward, Miss Isabel Masterton, Stan Shaw, Miss Susie Roberts, Norwood Bryan,

Dr. James Godfrey, Lt. Robert A. Gray and Dr. J. W. Lasley.

Dr. Harry W. Chase

Former President Harry Woodburn Chase whose death came Wednesday night in Sarasota, Florida, ushered in a new era for the University.

After serving as Dean of the College and chairman of the faculty, Dr. Chase became president in June, 1919. His administration, stretching through the year 1930, saw this school grow from a college into a major university. Enrollment went through a post-World War I upsurge; buildings, including the Library, Murphy, Manning and Saunders went up; new departments, music and commerce among them, came into being; and the University gained membership in the American Association of Colleges and Universities.

Dr. Chase established a new realm for higher education in North Carolina.

The Daily Tar Heel and the University community are grateful for his service and saddened at his passing.

Justice Goes On

"It seems to me that liberties for those we most dislike are the most crucial ones to defend," said Prof. Robert Sonne Cohen of Connecticut Wesleyan as the Scales defense opened Wednesday in Greensboro.

The Daily Tar Heel concurs with that idea. We commend Professor Cohen; and we commend in particular Professors Fletcher Green of history, Raymond Adams of English and The Reverend Charles Jones for demonstrating that they, too, subscribe to that rudiment of Anglo-Saxon justice. Professors Green and Adams and Mr. Jones, in their brief, unemotional, and concise testimony in behalf of Junius Scales' sincerity, restored some dignity to the trial now wearing through its second week.

It is next to impossible for a Communist to be tried justly today in the United States. The web of hysteria has been spun too thick. The fear of Russian power to the East, the tattered but still flapping ensign of McCarthy, and public ignorance as to the nature and real threat of Communism throw cases like the Scales affair out of kilter. In the Greensboro trial, a long troup of excited witnesses, paid performers, spies, and incompetent press reporting have made the outcome, as the informed expected, all but inevitable.

To be sure, mean, ill-founded criticism will fly at the professors and the minister. But it will be the offspring of ignorance and will come from those who do not see the basic conservatism of what they did. Civil liberties, most of them, cost hundreds of years of revolution, abuse, slaughter and regicide. When those who believe in them are pilloried, it speaks poorly for our appreciation.

Justice goes on, fortunately; and we can thank those like the men from Chapel Hill that it does.

A Word For Wheels

The wheels of student government fortune—about 100 of them—will be turning on campus this weekend, as student leaders from the Carolinas and Virginia gather for the spring National Student Association Regional Assembly.

Student body presidents and other wheels from the three states will attempt everything from "defending the role of the student in the college community" to studying the mystical-sounding "dynamics of the group and parliamentary proceedure," with some socializing sandwiched in between, no doubt.

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes the wheels to Carolina. The work being performed nationally and internationally by the National Student Association should inspire them to serious thought and a stimulating exchange of ideas. We hope they can turn their weekend workshop into a vibrant marketplace of ideas on student government.

Of Spring And Youth & Love's Sweet Whatnot

J. A. C. Dunn

"IT IS! It is! It's Really Truly Spring!," as the Intimate Bookshop so elatedly remarks in its right hand front show window. Being of a tractable nature, we are inclined to agree with them. It is spring. Fine.

When we think of spring, however, we think not only of books (as the Intimate does), or of "flowers that bloom in the etc. (as Gilbert and Sullivan do), but also of young men's fancies, which, we are told, have an alarming tendency to turn like worms as soon as cords and pedal-pushers pop up from under every newly-thawed stone.

Quite recently we ran across two young men, drunk on spring, whose fancies had turned to poetry. We here present their deathless (and anonymous) verse in all its poetic radiance.

THE FIRST POEM is more malicious than anything else, and is untitled except for a notation: "With apologies to New Faces of 1952."

Love is a simple thing;
Love is a scorpion's sting,
Vicious as a moray ell,
Painful as a torture wheel,
Sharp as an assin's tool,
Quick as a pirana school;
Love is a simple thing.

Love is a mad dog's bite,
Deadly as Medusa's sight,
Toxic as wood alchohol,
Chilling as a banshee's call,
Damning as a voodoo curse,
Morbid as a loaded hearse;
Love is a simple thing.

THE SECOND POEM is a bit more sincere, and is slightly reminiscent of the poetry of Porcupine, Walt Kelly's misanthropic Okeefenokee character. We asked why the author used "we" instead of "I", and he replied that he was writing in honor of Editors who had to sit in hot offices on hot spring days. Evidently he was once an Editor himself and knows first hand.

WE

The heartsung song somewhere sung for us
Is sung in the heart of you, we hope.
The windblown soul that is whisked along
Like a leaf, is blown toward us, we hope.
The starlit face questing, light-house-like, for a mirror
Reflects in our face, we hope.
The sun-bright smile meant to warm and soothe
Is aimed at the person of us, we hope.

The song of the soul is the smile of the face;
The face is the soul of the smile.
And the smile in the song is the face of the soul,
The soul is the face of the song.
The windblown heart is lit by the stars,
The sun-bright wind is warm.
And the leaf, the mirror the lighthouse, all
Are aimed at a whisk around us, we hope.

WHERE THEY GO

Three thousand five hundred teachers in Pennsylvania will be leaving this year for a variety of reasons. These include: 6 percent — marriage or family, 11 percent—going to other states, 18 percent—entering other types of employment, 20 percent — miscellaneous other reasons, and 45 percent—retirement for old age or disability.

ALL INCLUDED

Deep sea and Gulf Stream, sound and inland fishing are all included in the North Carolina central coastal area, from vast Pamlico Sound to Bogue village on the sound of the same name.

THE STRAIGHT SCOOP:

He Pahked His Cah In Hahvahd Yahd

J. B. Severance
Harvard, '58

(The following is the substance of a letter written by a Harvard freshman to a friend of his giving an impression of Harvard after eight months of residence there. Maybe our readers can find parallels.—Editors)

I have it straight from a fine arts lecture that in pre-Revolutionary days Cambridge was intended to be governmental city for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and when Boston got the job instead, the authorities founded Harvard in Cambridge as a sort of compensation. Be that as it may, the institution grew and all the New England social elite attended it.

At one time the standing of a student in his class was determined by the social prominence of his family rather than by the student's brilliance. However, the situation has changed a good deal since then and though the Groton-Harvard type still exists (there are some in the freshman class today), the University now strives for what it calls "even geographical distribution." The Great Plains area must still be pretty sparsely populated because some of the types from west of the Mississippi strongly resemble the American Bison, at least mentally, and in many cases physically. I don't say that this holds for all of them since I happen to room with a broad-minded Texan.

THE YARD:

Harvard Yard is the center of the University and the original area of the place. Among its many features are the freshman dorms, Offices of the President and Fellows, University Hall (the administration building in which lurk many smiling deans and polite secretaries), a statue of John Harvard (which is very inappropriate since the date on it is three years off, Old John was not the real founder, and it's not a statue of the real John Harvard anyway), three libraries, an old water pump about which old grads are supposed to be very nostalgic, and Sever Hall, now a classroom building, which is considered to be one of the most important architectural achievements of the nineteenth century but which makes me wonder what else the nineteenth century produced.

THE SQUARE:

There are a number of merchants on the Square who claim to have been serving Harvard men for generations. All I can say is that the experience they have gained has been put to good uses —most of their prices are almost half again as much as they are elsewhere. However, I have to admit that there are a good many worthwhile institutions in and around the Square.

The University Theatre, a grim looking movie house, has a good show about once a month on the average. The Harvard Cooperative Society claims that it gives the member a 10% markup. It is handy for stationery and ugly little necessities, but no one in his right mind ever buys clothing or sporting equipment there. The store on the corner next to the Coop (I can't recall its name) sells cigars, fresh fruit (at exhorbitant prices), newspapers and almost and brand of cigarettes you can name (i. e. Benson & Hedges, Player's, or even Murads). It is a rather nice little hole.

The Brattle Theatre is a very worthy institution which shows good revivals and foreign films for twenty cents more than anywhere else. The Wursthaus, a German delicatessen and bar, has mediocre food at mediocre prices and fairly drips with atmosphere. Next to the Wursthaus is a very tiny and modern snack joint known as the Tastee Sandwich shop, which, though it is new this year, is fast becoming an institution. It has the best hamburgers on the Square and the cheapest ones.

Next to this joint, which is known as Charley's (Charley runs it) or "The Armpit," is the shadiest business establishment I have ever seen: The Varsity Liquor Store. The drinking age in Massachusetts is twenty-one, but even the most juvenile-looking freshman can get into the place and make a purchase with no questions asked. There is a strong possibility that it has police protection since there is a traffic cop's stand in front of the store and there are always two or three cops warming themselves up in the store on a cold day. I had it from one freshman that as he was leaving the store with an armload of various bottles a cop in full dress and brass buttons held the door open for him.

The local dive is Cronin's. It is full of atmosphere, but even through the dim smokyess of the room Jim Cronin can guess your age with surprising accuracy. The best tailor in the vicinity is Duncan MacAndrew. Here one can have a sports jacket made of the best imported tweeds for forty dollars. Duncan MacAndrews sports a Bongo Board with which customers supposedly amuse themselves while waiting for a clerk, but it seems to be monopolized by the woman who runs the tailoring room.

RADCLIFFE:

What slim pickin's there are are really not so bad as rumor would have it.

THE GREY FLANNEL SUIT:

The Grey Flannel suit is, as everyone knows, the Ivy League uniform. It is predominant at Harvard and may be bought anywhere on the Square. There is also an unsavory element around the Yard which leans toward the zoot suit and the flashy silk tie. Individuals in this class purchase their unlobely purple shirts at Leopold Morse next to the UT. The really discriminating Harvard man buys tailor made tweed suits at Duncan MacAndrew's. In general, though it can be said that the Grey Flannel suit is the dress of the average Harvard man.

PUBLICATIONS:

The Harvard Crimson has taken advantage of the fact that the Boston papers are revoltingly unreadable, and is consequently one of the better college newspapers in the country. Unfortunately it is fully aware of this fact and rather conceited. Since it has such an iron grip on affairs it can get away with the most outrageous slander and misquoting imaginable and frequently does.

The Harvard Advocate is run by a very serious-minded group of writers, and is a quite readable magazine. Recently they had a monopoly on stories involving people with neuroses and odd frustrations, but it is now on the up and up and even has some rather able poets.

The Cambridge Review, a splinter from the Advocate, is a bit smart-alec, but passable.

The Harvard Lampoon is at present riding on a very good reputation. Unfortunately for the past three years it has been dominated by a very able writer who now works for the New Yorker. The result of his ability was that it stifled everybody else's and no wthe Lampoon is a cheap pamphlet of forced humor. Many Harvard men prefer to get their humour reading the Yale Record, which, in view of the facts, is extremely broad-minded of them.

328 DRINKING DRIVERS

Under the heading "driver's condition" the Motor Vehicles Department summary of last year's fatal traffic accidents lists 328 drivers who had been drinking. Other driver defects—eyesight, hearing, fatigue, illness, and sleepiness affected only 83 drivers involved in fatal accidents. In all there were 880 death dealing traffic mishaps which produced 991 fatalities during the year.

Harry, Ike, And Ulysses Grant

Ralph McGill
Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON—As time goes on more and more persons are realizing that whatever may have been his failures, Harry S. Truman was a strong President.

I like a tough fighter. So, coming down on the elevator in the Mayflower Hotel with Sen. Walter George and Miss Lucy, his wife, on the way to the Sam Rayburn dinner I got off at the fifth floor. The reason I go off was that when the elevator stopped at that floor I saw Truman and his wife there with some friends. I went up to him and put my arms around him and said that it made me feel wonderful to see him looking so good.

Now, we come down to the real story for which the foregoing is a sort of preamble.

Two veteran senators, who have been around for a long, long time, talked freely, though not for attribution, about President Eisenhower. They like him. What they have to say is not said in hostility or rancor. They think, as do all of us, that he is a good, decent, honorable man.

THEY LIKE IKE

But this, in essence, is their summary of him as a President. "Ike,' they said, "is a lot like Gen. Grant when he was President. Grant had won a war. The people felt he was a strong man, able to make decisions. Actually, as we know, he was not. He was a good man but not at all aware of how to govern. His Cabinet was not able and some members were corrupt. The Republican Congress was a pliant tool of special privilege, as is a majority of the present Republican House and Senate. The worst of the Republican party hid behind the shield of Grant's personal integrity.

The people came to know this, but they almost nominated Grant for a third term. In a sense, President Eisenhower is like that. War threatens. The people look to a general.

They say what has become well known; namely, that Ike, the good, decent man, is not skilled enough in politics to know what is going on.

"He doesn't seem to realize how transparent he is. He keeps trying to run away from the presidency," said one of the veteran senators. "But you can't run away from it. Wherever the President goes, there is the presidency. When Ike plays golf with Dr. Cary Middlecoff the presidency is right there with them.

There is a story going around Washington.

There was a conference with congressional leaders about the Asian situation. It was not reassuring. The chiefs of staff, who are the professionals, were divided.

"We all stood there," said the congressman who told me about it, "and we felt sad and blue. There had been no leadership, only indecision. As we stood, waiting for the President to go, he looked at his watch and said, 'Gee, I have time to get in nine holes of golf.' When we got outside another congressman said, 'Golfing while Rome burns.'"

FOIL FOR REDS

That, of course, is not quite fair, but it illustrates a lot of feeling here.

Sen. George, for example, thinks the administration has deceived the American people by making Quemoy and Matsu the major issue. "The Communists," he says, "are not ready or able to take Formosa, but they are about to take Indochina by default. Things are very crucial there. It looks as if Viet Nam is to be lost. And if it is, then Burma, Malaya, Laos, Cambodia and all southeastern Asia are endangered."

Sen. George also feels very strongly that the African-Asian meeting which began Monday in Bandung, Indonesia, should have had our blessing.

Harry Truman criticized the Republican press for "covering up "the administration's errors and failures. The one thing which privately dominates the press here is the great disappointment in Sec. Dulles. The Democratic senators and congressmen who know say that he is a timid, rabbit sort of a man who simply cannot stand against pressure. They think Ike gets a bad assist in a critical job.

Security Climax

Stewart Alsop

A showdown fight involving the government's whole loyalty-security system is now shaping up. The fight will center on a minor official in the International Monetary Fund, called William Henry Taylor.

Taylor was one of those named by Elizabeth Bentley, the famous former Communist espionage courier, as a member of the espionage group in the Treasury Department during the war. The Bentley charge was aired in substance before a Senate committee by Attorney General Herbert Brownell in 15, when he testified on the case of the late Harry Dexter White.

Taylor, who has never taken the Fifth Amendment, has repeatedly and flatly denied under oath that he was ever a Soviet agent or a Communist. He has now demanded, in letters to the members of the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, that his can be investigated publicly; that he be allowed to confront his chief accuser, Miss Bentley; and that his guilt or innocence be finally determined.

At the same time, he has asked the Loyalty Board which has been hearing his case to call Brownell and FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover to answer questions about what he alleges to be demonstrable falsehoods in Miss Bentley's testimony. In short Taylor and his lawyer, former Congressman Byron Scott, are now determined to force a public showdown.

HEAVY CLOUD OF DOUBT

One result of the showdown could be to prove that Taylor is guilty. Another result could be to clear his name. But if Taylor's name is cleared, a heavy cloud of doubt will be thrown over all Elizabeth Bentley's testimony, and indeed over the Justice Department's methods and the whole security system. It is easy to see why the Taylor case could start a major row.

Taylor's position is extraordinary. He has, after all, been named by the Attorney General of the United States as one who could be used by a "parallel of Soviet intelligence." Yet he still holds a public position, and part of his salary, at least, is paid by the United States Treasury.

Taylor is, in fact, the last of those named by Miss Bentley who still holds a public position. Very heavy pressure has been brought to bear on the Monetary Fund to get rid of him quietly. Among other high officials, both former Secretary of the Treasury John Snyder and his successor, George Humphrey, have written to the Fund urging that Taylor be fired.

CASE UP IN 1953

The Fund managers, however, have quite properly taken the position that the charges against Taylor should first be heard. His case was therefore assigned early in 1953 to the International Organization's Employees Loyalty Board.

This board has been holding intermittent hearings for a year and a half. During all this time, despite the statement of the Attorney General to the Senate committee, the board has been unable to establish that Taylor is guilty as charged, or even that the "reasonable doubt" required for firing as a security risk exists. Accordingly, Taylor still holds his job.

Taylor's defense before the board has been simply to challenge the veracity of his accuser, Miss Bentley, not only in his own case, but in the case of Harry Dexter White and others. In a public showdown, he will make the same defense.

Taylor and his lawyer have prepared a dossier of more than 100 pages, which purports to demonstrate that Miss Bentley's testimony is a morass of contradictions. Some of the contradictions cited in this remarkable document are trivial, the sort of small mistakes any human being makes. But some do not seem trivial. For example, according to the dossier, Miss Bentley at one point testified that Taylor passed her documents, and at another point she testified that she had never met Taylor.

THE JUSTICE DEPT. AT FAULT

Miss Bentley's testimony may of course prove substantially entirely accurate, and Taylor guilty as charged. There is no doubt that Communist spy nets did indeed operate in the government during the war. Because ex-Communist informers like Miss Bentley have been useful in establishing this fact, there are fierce pressures to suppress all challenges to their veracity.

Justice Department officials, including Brownell, have come precious close to taking the ridiculous and profoundly un-American position that anyone who would cast doubt on the word of an ex-Communist must be part of a Communist plot. The best commentary on this nonsense was supplied by Brownell's own action last week, in firing the Justice Department's whole collection of professional full-time informers. But just because Miss Bentley's testimony has been so important, and because Brownell himself is committed on Taylor's guilt, the pressures will be particularly fierce in this case.

Yet surely Taylor should have a chance to prove, one way or another, once and for all, whether he took part in espionage, and thus betrayed his country.

It is monstrous and intolerable that a man branded as Taylor has been branded should be denied a chance to clear his name.

Memorable Words From Doctor Einstein

Albert Einstein on education:

It is in fact nothing short of a miracle that the modern methods of instruction have not entirely strangled the holy curiosity of inquiry; for this delicate little plant, aside from stimulation, stands mainly in need of freedom. Without this it goes to wreck (sic) and ruin.

On war:

War seems to me to be a mean, contemptible thing. I would rather be hacked to pieces than take part in such an abominable business.

On Relativity:

When a man sits with a pretty girl for an hour, it seems like a minute. But let him sit on a hot stove for a minute—and it's longer than any hour. That's relativity.

On his profession, if he had to do it over again: I would not try to become a scientist or scholar or teacher. I would rather choose to be a plumber or a peddler in the hope to find that modest degree of independence still available under present circumstances.

For A Full Measure Of Spring Laughter Bring The Biddy Browsing At Our Humor Table

The Intimate Bookshop

205 E. FRANKLIN ST.

Open Evenings

On some of these recent otherwise pleasant and beautiful afternoons, there has been an extremely dejected figure in our midst. That's Walter Rabb, the popular and efficient director of intramurals at UNC who doubles as baseball coach in the spring.

Baseball is a great and fervent love of the old State Colletcher, who has been around here long enough now to be a devout Chapel Hillian with complete loyalty subscribed to the Tar Heels in all their athletic endeavors. A baseball defeat to his team, especially when the boys play poorly or indiferently, really kills his joy, to use an old and noble expression. And recently too many have come to a regiment which in many ways looked handsome when the blue birds first appeared a few weeks ago before the big bombing started.

Of a recent Wednesday morning he and other Tar Heel adherents were pained to have it emphasized in box score agate that not only had his boys dropped a decision to Wake Forest to round out a season's record of 4-11 which, reading from left to right, means four wins end eleven defeats, but in the process had committed eight errors. That was out of line with earlier conduct because most times the Tar Heels have shown considerable class on the field, with their chief impotency being at the plate. But there it was to make Rabb et al very unhappy.

Well, the Pirates and Orioles have lost a lot of games, too, and they are reputed big leaguers. Rabb, for all his current miseries, is not easy to down, and he and his sidekick, "Big Steam" Bunn Hearn are fond of their kids, believe they have potential and are confident they will do better from here out. When they employed no less than 17 of their hopefuls against the Deacons Rabb and Hearn indicated they do not intend to let anything stay put until they bring about a better order.

BRIGHTER THINGS! — On the other hand, there is joy unconfined here in the progress of an off-season sport which we will not see with the chips down until next winter. That's basketball, which recently concluded spring drills with a Blue-White game in which magnificent potential was shown.

Frank McGuire, the young man from Manhattan, was not able to be wtih his team very much during the spring work. He has been on an amazingly extensive banquet tour in the state, making wonderful talks night after night before athletic groups in many of the state's parishes. His big right arm, Buck Freeman, carried on.

At the risk of being too optimistic about a team which will be predominantly sophomore, we want to say that the Tar Heels definitely are on the rise in basketball with possibilities of magnificence. Joe Quigg, Pete Brennan, Bob Cunningham, Tommy Kearns and Roy Searcy are rising sophs to go with such artists as Lennie Rosenbluth, Jerry Vayda and Bob Young, to mention three of the holdovers.

Maybe we will not be quite there next season because of lack of experience but, as we have warned before, we are on the way.

Win Soars Tar Heel ACC Hopes

Coming back strong to win the last two doubles matches, postponed from Wednesday the university yesterday wrapped up its match from Duke 5-4, and apparently had a sure lock on the year's Atlantic Coast Conference tennis championship.

After Wednesday's matches, the Tar Heels trailed the Blue Devils by 3-4. The latter having won four singles matches against two singles and one doubles by North Carolina.

A large gallery gathered yesterday for the finish and saw Bobby Payne and Pete Green polish off Bobby Green and Leif Beck in the No. 2 doubles, 6-3, 6-2.

In an earlier finish, Ron Kerdasha and Ron Thompson of North Carolina toppled Dave Shiemmel and Sonny McCord, 6-0, 6-0.

It was North Carolina's 26th win in a row over two seasons.

All four of the Tar Heels played well in their blazing finish to win in straight sets. After their mates had won without dropping a game, Payne and Pete Green went to work on tougher foes. After taking the opening set handily, they carried on into the second and pulled off to a 4-1 lead before the Blue Devils came to life. They collaborated well at the net and in passing shots, but Beck and Bobby Green, Pete's cousin, pulled up to 4-2 and five of the games went to deuce.

The Tar Heels tightened to take the next two games, but in the finals, on Pete Green's service, the game went to duece five times. The Tar Heels had the advantage three times, but were deuced on costly errors, overhead smashes outside, before the win came on the fifth advantage.

The Tar Heels play Wake Forest tomorrow before going on their annual northern trip next week.

Game Today

Carolina's varsity baseball squad takes on the Gamecocks of South Carolina today at 3:30 p.m. on Emerson Field, in an attempt to better their 1-4 record against ACC foes. In the last Conference outing, the Tar Heels dropped their fourth consecutive game to N. C. State, 6-3.

Stickmen Ready For Generals

By AL KORSCHUN

Co-captains Toby Haynesworth and Steve Trimble will lead a vastly improved Tar Heel lacrosse team, currently riding high after its terrific upset victory over Duke on Wednesday, into battle against Washington & Lee's Generals on friendly Navy Field next Thursday.

The UNC stickmen racked up their first victory of the year by very impressively romping over the Duke Blue Devils, 9-3. It was easily the Tar Heels' best team performance of the season as they combined a high scoring offense with an air tight defense to very effectively humble the favored Dukesters, who — although playing without the services of their All-American midfielder, Dick Saunders — nevertheless were definitely outclassed by the harder fighting Tar Heels.

Weiss Quits

Sports Editor Bernie Weiss resigned yesterday.

Qualified students who would like to apply for this salaried position on The Tar Heel may come in person to the editors' Ed Yoder and Louis Kraar said.

Pastrano On Stage Tonight

CHICAGO, April 21 (AP)—Boxing's cutie from Dixie, 19-year-old Willie Pastrano, a smash hit in his first National TV showing, goes before the camera again tomorrow night against willing Willie Troy.

The 10round middleweight scrap at the Chicago Stadium 10 p.m., EST, is a stiff test for the fancy-boxing Pastrano, who is from New Orleans by way of Miami Beach, Fla., and seeks his 10th straight victory.

Pastrano has a 30-4-3 record despite his extreme youth, but his name in these parts was something confused with an Italian dish until he deftly upset rugged Al Andrews at the Chicago Stadium a month ago in his first TV appearance.

Off his clever showing against Andrews, Pastrano is rated an even choice, perhaps becoming a slight favorite by fight time, against the capable Troy, 30-3, a stablemate of heavyweight champ Rocky Marciano.

Troy, still pretty much of a kid himself at 22, is trying to rebound from a TKO by light heavy Floyd Patterson Jan. 7. That followed a four-bout winning streak after he was stopped by Joey Giardello. Troy had won 19 in a row before his first setback by Holly Mims.

A COACH WRITES:

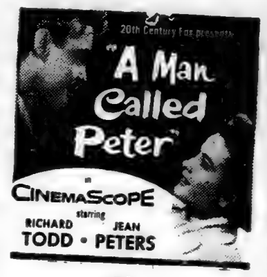
'...The Only Amature Sport'

(Editor's note: The writer of the following letter is coaching lacrosse here. He is not a paid instructor.)

April 21, 1955

EDITOR:

On Tuesday of this week, Sports Editor Bernie Weiss make several comments regarding a proposed road trip by the Carolina lacrosse team. Yesterday, he added to these comments in his daily column. The team members of the lacrosse club are indeed grateful for Bernie's interest and aid, but I should like to take this opportunity to clear up a few of the details concerning the lacrosse situation here at the University.



First, regarding the proposed trip to New England which was turned down by the Carolina Athletic Council: the lacrosse team was at no time promised a trip by the Athletic Association. An apology is certainly due Dr. Cornwell who acted only according to regulations set down by University officials. An unauthorized or unrecognized activity cannot receive class excuses under the present class-cut system.

The committments made by me were only tentative ones and were immediately cancelled by telegram as soon as the Athletic Association stated that the boys could not be excused from classes. The trip in itself was ideal. The played would have taken care of all expenses. The experience gained on the trip would have aided the team considerably. Interested fans must realize that most all of the lacrosse teams here in the South are much better than Carolina's team, therefore, to play teams on more even terms teams farther north must be scheduled.

The real answer to the problem lies not in financial support but in cooperation. Since the sport was revived here in 1949, cooperation from practically all sources was at a minus-figure. Bill Darden, a nephew of former athletic Director Bob Fetzer, was accorded the most support. His successor Alan Moore, was taken on unwillingly as soccer and lacrosse coach by the Athetic Department. The two years he spent at Chapel Hill as a qualified instructor and coach were probably two of the unhappiest of his life so far. Why? The same answer — lack of cooperation. Financially. Lacrosse could use less than $600 per year.

Aftsr working with the lacrosse team since 1949, both as a player and coach, I am certain that here is the only amatuer sport on the Carolina campus today. Without a doubt, it's one of the most enjoyable spectator sports being played. True, that Carolina's team needs a shot in the arm, but money is not the answer. I think by now you already know that. I personally think it took a large quantity of interest, guts and backbone for the 30-odd boys to continue to play as an informal club this year. Monograms were not important. If ever a boy wanted to find a sport that he liked well, "lacrosse is the greatest." These boys playing today are not seeking to compete with the other sports on campus but many of the Tar Heel coaches have resented the 'intrusion' of lacrosse.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

Here Ed Chandler reviews Long Distance facilities between Atlanta and Lincoln, Georgia. He is working from a layout that shows all Long Distance lines in the state.

"My classmates talked me out of a job"

Ed Chandler had a good job all lined up long before he graduated from Georgia Institute of Technology as an Industrial Engineer. But then he changed his mind . . .

"When I got out of college in '50, I was all set to go with a company I'd worked for during a previous summer.

"But then I got called up by the Army. During the next two years I heard a lot of good things from my Georgia Tech classmates who'd gone to work for the telephone company. As far as I was concerned this was the best recommendation any company could get.

"So when I got out of the Army I stopped in to talk with the telephone people. When I saw an outline of their development program, I was sold.

"My first year took me through every phase of handling and estimating costs on telephone equipment from warehouse to installation. I drew up plans for several projects, then went out in the field to see how they were carried out.

"Now I'm helping develop next year's multi-million-dollar construction program for Georgia. I've found it an interesting and rewarding job."

Former President Chase Dies

SARASOTA, Fla., April 21 (AP)—Retired educator Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, 72, died at his home here last night.

Funeral arrangements were incomplete pending arrival of a daughter from Pennsylvania.

He was president of the University of North Carolina from 1919 to 1930 and left North Carolina to become president of the University of Illinois. He later served as New York University chancellor.

North Carolina became a widely recognized university of liberal thought under his leadership.

A native of Groveland, Mass., he was graduated from Dartmouth College in 1903, and received his doctor's degree from Clark College at Worchester, Mass.

He came to the University of North Carolina as a faculty member in 1905 and succeeded to the presidency after the death of Dr. Edward K. Graham. In 1930 he became president of the University of Illinois and three years later became chancellor of New York University. He retired in 1950.

SOUND AND FURY AT WORK
. . . time's getting short
—Markham photo

Sound & Fury's Date Looms A Week Away

Although "everybody's getting kind of nervous" as Satan's Saints, the new Sound and Fury production, looms only a week away, "the show is going beautifully," said Miss Bo Bernadin, director.

The show, which will be part of GM week, goes on next Thursday and Friday.

When asked how the hot weather was affecting rehearsals Miss Bernadin gave a wilted smile and said, "Well, the orangeades help compensate for the weather."

"The whole cast is great," said Miss Bernadin, but the "group of eight boys and eight girls are exceptional in all 10 of their numbers."

Miss Bernadin was especially grateful to Graham Memorial for its help. "GM has gone all out in producing an extravaganza," she said.

protest, he was taken to the county jail to spend the night.

Judge Albert V. Bryan kept Federal Court in session until 6:10 p.m. to complete the lawyers' final arguments and his charge to the jury. Then, after a recess of about an hour, the jury returned to start its deliberations.

Much of the closing arguments had to do with the three government witnesses presented during the trial that started April 11. One was an ex-communist booted out of the party after 20 years membership. The others were communists for the FBI, paid undercover agents who said they joined the party to report on activities in the Carolinas district Scales headed.

Defense counsel David Rein implied that all three were interested mainly in money. He said John Lautner, expelled from the party in 1950, will keep his job as consultant on Communism for the Justice Department "only as long as his service is satisfactory. His function is to obtain a conviction."

Referring to the others, Ralph Clontz and Charles Childs, Rein drew laughter from the audience that overflowed the hot, humid courtroom by remarking that "apparently now it's the fashion to work your way through school by working for the FBI." Clontz was a Duke University law student and Childs a University of North Carolina physics student during all or part of their undercover careers.

District Atty. Edwin M. Stanley, closing out the government's case, once turned to Rein and shouted, "I resent with all my heart hearing boys like Clontz and Childs called liars and stool pigeons."

In an emotional appeal to the jury Stanley urged them not only to convict Scales but to "do it quickly so the whole world may know that this land we love so much shall forever be and remain the land of the free and the brave."

Osteen Elected President Of Law School Association

Bill Osteen, rising third year student from Greensboro, was elected president of the Law School Assn. for the 1955-56 school year in Wednesday's law school government elections.

He succeeds Bob Byrd, Morganton, in the top position. Osteen has previously held the positions of vice-president of the first year class, president of the second year class and intramural manager.

Walter Horton, rising third year student from Raleigh, won the race for vice-president of the Law School Assn. The winners of the offices of secretary and treasurer will be determined in today's run-off ballot. Candidates for secretary are Dub Graham, rising third year student from Jackson Springs, and Ham Wade, rising second year man from Chapel Hill. Paul Holt and Jack Ogburn, both rising second year students from Greensboro, are in the runoff for treasurer.

CHIEF JUSTICE

Chief Justice of the Law School Honor Court for next year will be Herbert Falk, rising third year student from Greensboro. Other justices elected are Bill Cameron of Wilmington and Ed Pullen of Winston-Salem. W. E. Rouse of Raleigh is a hold-over member of the court.

The presidency of next year's third year class officers will be decided in a runoff between Bill Brewer of Jamesville and Dick Thigpen of Charlotte. The victors in the other class officer races were Paul Guthery, Charlotte, vice-president; Sol Cherry, Roxobel, secretary, and Andre Evans, Ahoskie, treasurer. Chosen to fill the class's three positions in the Legislature were Dick Fountain, I. B. Hudson and Bill Zimtbaum.

RUNOFF

A runoff will be held for the office of president of next year's second class due to a three way tie between Kent Coward, Sylva, Jim Crews, Winston-Salem, and Bil Kuhn, Wilmington. Tom Johnston of Fayetteville was elected vice-president. Miss Harriet Holt of Chapel Hill was elected secretary, and Bob Thomas of Asheville was elected treasurer. The class' three representatives to the Legislature will be Rip Bernhardt, Andy McDaniel and Charlie White.

The Law School Legislature is composed of 19 members; four officers of the Law School Association, the president and vice president of each of the three classes and three representatives from each class.

Maryland Prof Talks Tonight To Rho Chi

Professor John C. Krantz Jr. of the University of Maryland School of Medicine will speak here tonight under the sponsorship of Rho Chi pharmaceutical honor society.

The professor of pharmacology will speak in Howell Hall at 8 o'clock on "The Simplicity To Wonder." The speaker will "define and trace the scientific attitude of mind through the leaders in the medical sciences and point out what the inductive method of reasoning has meant in the production of benefits to the human race." He will emphasize the discovery of new drugs.

Dr. Krantz received his B. S., M. S. and Ph.D. degrees at the University of Maryland. He is the author of Pharmacologic Principles of Medical Practice, a textbook, and the co-author of The Art of Eloquence.

The speaker has been director of research in pharmaceutical chemistry at Sharp and Dohme in Baltimore, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Maryland State Department of Health, consultant toxicologist to the United States Army service forces and a member of the Maryland governor's Commission on Poisonous Fumes.

He has also been a special consultant in research grants and fellowships to the U. S. Public Health Service.

Handicapped

All handicapped UNC students have been invited to attend the North Carolina Paraplegia Association meeting to be held Sunday at the Hillel House, 210 W. Cameron Ave.

The meeting will be held from 2:30 until 4:30 p.m.

According to a spokesman, the purpose of the meeting is to introduce handicapped people to the fields of activity open to them and to encourage independence in their daily living.

For further information Miss Jo Suddard may be called at 6961.

Carolinas-Virginia Meeting Of National Student Assn. Moved Into 2nd Day Here

The Carolina-Virginia regional meeting of the National Student Assn. moved into its second day of discussion and get-together here yesterday.

The NSA, a student group "created to serve the long-existing need for a representative intercollegiate organization designed to serve the American student community, and to promote students' interests and welfare," is currently holding its spring assembly on the UNC campus. Meetings started Thursday and will end today. Delegates are here from many North and South Carolina and Virginia schools.

Yesterday a panel discussion titled "The Role of the Student in the College Community" was held in Graham Memorial, focus point for the meeting. Delegates attending the discussion included Sidney Surratt, Winthrop College; Manning Muntzing, UNC; Dr. William Mueller, Woman's College; Don Hansen, Greensboro College, and Dr. Alfanzo Elder, president of North Carolina College.

After an informal coffee break four discussion groups tackled the question of "The Responsibility of the Student" in academic affairs and international affairs and student government (two groups).

A banquet in Lenior Hall was held last night.

The National Student Congress program was presented last night in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial, and social hour followed.

TODAY'S EVENTS

Today's events include more discussion group meetings; workshop for NSA coordinators; meeting with delegates from nonmember, observing schools; closing plenary session, with reports from discussion groups and election of new regional officers, and a regional executive committee meeting in the Grail Room this afternoon

Fowler Clarifies Stand On Proposed Fee Hike

"Personally I will vote against the fee raise," newly inaugurated student body President Don Fowler said yesterday.

Fowler's statement was an official reply to opinion that he advocated a fee raise in his inaugural address.

The inaugural address passage which evidently some persons took to mean Fowler wanted a fee raise was: "During the recent campaign I was opposed to a fee raise referendum . . . But the referendum is now before us . . . Our student union has taken great strides during the past year . . . This growth should be encouraged by all the student body."

If the student body passes the referendum, thus opening the student Constitution to a $5 fee raise; it is anticipated that $3 if this hike would go to the Student Union.

Fowler's statement in full was:

"In my campaign I was opposed to any fee raise, and my position has not changed. Personally I will vote against the fee raise. If my inaugural address indicated to anyone that I was in favor of a fee raise, they are mistaken.

"I only pointed out the advances Graham Memorial had made this year, in an effort to be fair to both sides."

University Library Now Exhibiting Jewish Art

The University Library, in collaboration with the Chapel Hill Hillel Foundation, is currently sponsoring an exhibition of Jewish art celebration of the 300th anniversary of the first Jewish settlement in North America.

The Commission of Synagogue Activities of the Union of America Hebrew Congregations has loaned the Library an exhibit of 43 prints depicting Jewish life by 19 Jewish artists.

There are also a number of ritual objects sent by North Carolina Jewish leaders to the Library for the occasion on display. The contributors of the objects are Rabbi Harold A. Friedman of Statesville, Chaplain Solomon M. Kaplan of Fort Bragg, Temple of Israel of Wilmington, Temple of Israel of Charlotte, Rabbi E. M. Rosenzweig of Chapel Hill and Marvin A. Kastenbaum of Chapel Hill.

Also on display for the first time is a book recently acquired by the Library, the Passover Haggadah, designed by Arthur Szyk and edited by Cecil Roth.

Smoking-Lung Cancer Relation To Be Talked

A symposium on the "Relation Between Smoking and Mortality from Lung Cancer" will be held here today as part of the joint session between the Institute of Mathematical Statistics and the Biometric Society.

The meeting will be held in Room 211, Gardner Hall, at 8:30 a.m.

"Since lung cancer is a major public health problem, the Dept. of Biostatistics in the School of Public Health is helping to sponsor the meeting," John Cassell, of the Public Health School, said in announcing arrangements for the symposium.

Dr. B. G. Greenberg professor and head of the Universiy Biostatistics Dept., will preside as chairman.

Speakers will be Jerome Cornfield of the National Institutes of Health, on "Current Status of the Problem;" William Haenszel of the National Cancer Institute, on "Needed Future Work," and Joseph Berkson of the Mayo Clinic and the University of Minnesota, on "Some Comments on Recent Work Relative to Smoking and Cancer of the Lung."

Discussants will be Boyd Harshbarger of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute, and Daniel Horn of the Aamerican Cancer Society.

Scales Given Six Years

Junius Scales, a communist chieftain convicted on the testimony of two FBI informants he took into the party was sentenced yesterday to six years for advocating force and violence.

Insisting that he is innocent, Scales said the conviction under the Smith Act's membership clause will be appealed.

Scales, 35, had been free under $35,000 bond posted by his mother last Dec. 21, about a month after his indictment.

All-Campus Conference Underway; Holman Gives 5 Demands Students, University Make Of Each Other

Meetings End Today With Talk By Purks

The second annual All-Campus Conference, which has as its purpose the promotion of student-faculty relations and the discussion of problem areas within the University, will close today.

Discussion groups will meet again today at 2 p.m. to continue talks on what the University and the Students can expect of each other.

Dr. J. Harris Purks, University provost, will speak tonight at a dinner meeting in the north room of Lenoir Hall. The meeting is scheduled for 6:30 p.m.

Reports from discussion groups will also be given at the dinner.

Miss Sue Fink and Bev Webb are the co-chairman of this year's conference. Other committee members are Miss Luanne Thornton, Miss Bebe Baumann, Rollie Tillman, Miss Nancy Morgan, Dr. James Godfrey.

Walter Spearman, Dr. Lyman Cotton, Miss Lila Ponder and Roy Holsten.

Conference activities yesterday included an address by Dr. C. Hugh Holman, which was followed by the first meetings of the small discussion groups.

Last Year's Meet Proved Valuable

The second Annual All-Campus Conference, held yesterday and continuing today under the leadership of Miss Sue Fink and Bev Webb, proceeds under the mantle of successful first meeting. From the report of last year's conference, excerpts have been taken in the form of a brief review of the purpose, conclusions and recommendations made by the members of the discussion groups and speakers.

Chancellor R. B. House, in the forword to the report, expressed pleasure at the formation of a body such as the conference. Said the Chancellor, "Education has already improved when faculty and students sit down together and examine processes, ways and means . . . we shall certainly consider carefully each recommendation and not let their work be thrown away."

The keynote address of the first conference was made by Dean Fred Weaver. Commenting on the purpose of the conference, Dean Weaver said, "The animating force behind this conference is the belief that the views of the students are important in any experiment to consider the problems of education."

The conference was divided into five discussion groups which considered the problems of several aspects of student and University ways and suggested means of correcting faults.

The groups found the dormitory advisory system to be partially unsuccessful, and recommended closer screening of candidates, seniors to be considered as well as graduate students, and less students for each advisor to supervise.

DORM LIFE

Dormitorys, the conference found, are not conducive to study, for the reason that the dorms are built with numbers, not students, in mind.

According to the report, too many students are more interested in getting a grade than getting an education. A new grading system was considered a possible means to alleviate this situation.

In regard to the question, "Are the students getting an education?', the report stated the group concerned with the problem felt students were not receiving the proper education. Reason for this conclusion were; crowded and disorderly living conditions, need for more stimulating teaching, and a need for encouraging good high school students to come to college.

Present day aspects of intercollegiate athletics were found, in some respects, to be undesirable. According to the report, there was at the time an over-emphasis on winning at any cost at the expense of sportsmanship.

HONOR SYSTEM

The value of the Honor System in developing standards of integrity in the students was unani-

Holman Challenges Students To Build Lasting Monuments

The chairman of the UNC College of Arts and Sciences yesterday told an All-Campus Conference five things the University expects of its students, and an equal number of things students expect of their University.

Dr. C. Hugh Holman, speaking at the opening meeting of the second annual All-Campus Conference, also challenged students "to spend your major effort here on things that can survive.

"Out of man's past nothing survives but his art and his knowledge," Dr. Holman said.

The conference, which will end tonight with a dinner speech by Dr. Harris Purks, University provost, is a student-faculty study of the problems and facets of the University. Following Dr. Holman's speech yesterday, students members broke up into five study groups to discuss student responsibility to University and University responsibility to students.

WHAT UNC WANTS

Dr. Holman listed five things the University expects from its students:

"(1) The acceptance by the student of the status of learner, with a reasonable amount of that most difficult of virtues, humility;

"(2) A recognition that education concerns itself with a body of material and is more than a methodology;

"(3) A disciplined behavior appropriate to the dignity and purpose of the University and indicative of a true respect for it;

"(4) A willingness to respect in others and to cultivate in ourselves a love of learning; and, finally

"(5) A vigorous and defiant assertion of youth and enthusiasm and unreasoning idealism and hope."

WHAT STUDENTS WANT

A student, said Dr. Holman, wants the University

"(1) To present him with a reasoned and reasonable program of study, define it for him and consistently work to keep him informed of it and its objectives;

"(2) To maintain for him a rigorous, consistent, and logical standard for the performance of his academic responsibilities;

"(3) To give him a faculty dedicated to the purposes of education and committed to the idea of the student as both the basic raw material and the crucial produce of the educational process;

"(4) Deal with him always with equity, with justice and with firmness, but never to surrender to him the central functions of the faculty;

"(5) And to bring to bear upon him and his problems a catholic interest and warm human sympathy."

Referring to the students' first demand of the University, Dr. Holman said he feels UNC's program of study is, "at least in broad outilne, well reasoned and broadly consistent with the best traditions of liberal education.

"I am not convinced, however, that the University has attempted very vigorously in recent years to explain and to defend that program of study." Dr. Holman said every student should receive "at regular intervals an academic orientation" which would give him a "thoughtful and specific explanation" of his study program. Such orientation, he said, should be the duty of "deans, advisers, teachers and everyone connected with the official family of the University."

'MASS ATTACK'

Under the first point of the University's requirements of its students, Dr. Holman said "one of the most disruptive influences at work in our student intellectual life is a mass attack, not on specific courses or requirements, upon the very idea of liberal education implied in the purposes of a university.

"This attack is launched both by the 'D' average student who resents the foreign language requirement and by the Phi Beta Kappa French major who wants to take all his work in that subject," Dr. Holman said.

Is Admissions Policy Causing UNC Apathy?

By DICK SIRKIN

The first All-Campus Conference discussion group, led by Harry Martin, based its discussion on Dr. Holman's statement, "The desire for learning in the student is needed in the University for it to perform its proper function."

The failure to eliminate students by means of a stiff admissions policy results in a mass of students who have very little desire to learn, concluded this group. It was also brought out that standards in many cases are too low for students and equally low for certain degrees.

Faculty-student relations came in for a spirited discussion. Prof. Walter Spearman of the School of Journalism said he had found that having students to his home was quite successful. Another said he had found such a method failed completely because of student apathy.

The students and faculty both

How Much Trust Does UNC Put In Students?

By EBBA FREUND

The second group focused on the inconsistencies in administrative policy toward student responsibility.

The new cut system underwent close scrutiny as Dr. Arnold Nash brought up the "profound pessimism" exhibited by the administration when it allows students to proctor their own exams but "does not have enough trust in them" to regulate their own class attendance.

"We do not ask if a student is listening or not, we just demand that he be there," continued Dr. Nash. "I cannot imagine a position more stupid than . . . this inconsistency my colleagues have thrust upon you," he said.

David Reid pointed out "the faculty is at fault by imposing the inconsistency."

The discussion then moved on to consider what hand the administration and faculty should have in the direction of student affairs. David Reid said, "In the past few years this University has not seen any major step taken by the students that was not influenced by the faculty or by the Office of Student Affairs."

Dr. Nash pointed out that there

Orientation, Entrance Regulations Discussed

By LOUIS KRAAR

The All-Campus Conference group moderated by English graduate student Bill Wiatt tackled the problem of what Carolina has a right to expect from students in an afternoon discussion that ranged from an appraisal of orientation as "little more than sorority rushing" to a firm student reminder that "academic inspiration comes from instructors—not entrance requirements."

The contention that orientation was ineffective for freshmen came from Misss Bebe Bauman, who declared earlier that many students come to the University "just to make contacts."

Manning Muntzing agreed that orientation for men freshmen was

Chancellor House On Spring, Bermudas

By FRED POWLEDGE

Chancellor Robert House delivered opinions on Bermuda shorts, spring, the All-Campus Conference, WUNC and WUNC-TV yesterday, and added a word or two for newly-elected student leaders.

Here's the way the Chancellor feels on the above current issues:

CHANCELLOR HOUSE TALKS

BERMUDAS

On Bermuda shorts, which are becoming quite the thing for Carolina Gentlemen as well as Caroline Coed these warm days, the Chancellor voted affirmatively. "I think that in their proper place," he said, Bermuda shorts are okay. However, "I wish they could put a prettier shirt on," he said.

"I don't approve of T-shirts on asthetic grounds."

The Chancellor said he detected a trend in wearing of Bermuda shorts. "American students are doing what the British . . . have been doing in hotter climates," he said.

"I sall not adopt the costume personally."

. . . on shorts

ON SPRING

The Chancellor, who has been observed on many a spring day wheeling his baby granddaughter down Franklin St., said he's "on an even balance: I appreciate the spring . . . as a relief from winter" and he tends "to think of it as a beautiful time of the year.

"On the other hand," though, he picks autumn "for sheer beauty."

"If pushed, I'd have to vote for spring."

ALL-CAMPUS

The Chancellor termed the All-Campus Conference, now in progress on the campus, the "students' self-studies." The idea for such a conference is a "highly intelligent move," he said, and last year's meeting was "very significant."

WUNC

Chancellor House, who's a staffer on both the University's FM Station WUNC and the educational television Station WUNC-TV, is "immensely proud" of the former and hopeful of the latter. He said "I simply enjoy (WUNC's) staff — students and faculty — and what they're doing.

"I believe in it,' he said.

As for the educational television station, the Chancellor said he cannot estimate its value to date because it's "too new."

"We've got to try to run it," he said, to keep its educational opportunity from being "lost by default."

. . . WUNC

Two things, said Chancellor House, will happen to WUNC-TV:

(1) "We'll get better."

(2) "The public will find we're indispensable."

ADVICE TO LEADERS

The Chancellor had two bits of advice to recently-elected and-appointed student government and other leaders:

(1) "Stay on the job and function with zeal."

(2) "Don't flung out academically while you're doing it."

. . . AND WUNC-TV

Faculty And Students Should Work Equally

Group Four of the All-Campus Conference, meeting in Hanes Hall under the chairmanship of law student Horace Stacy, centered its discussion on the points of Dean Holman's opening address. In most cases, general agreement was reached as to the nature of the problems, but proposed solutions differed.

The group agreed that faculty and students must make equal effort to establish the desire for learning in each student. It was felt that the absence of this desire, on the part of entering students, came from a number of sources—secondary school training, faulty home environment or the lack of respect for learning in itself.

The group also touched in its conversation on admissions standards, the question of student discipline, the Honor System and the lack of strong political and ethical convictions in the majority of students.

Let Admission Depend On One's Willingness

By JOE TERRELL and PEGGY WARD

Group Five of the All-Campus Conference, with Ralph Bowden, a graduate student of the University, as moderator, agreed on the informal resolution that each student should be admitted to the University on the basis of his willingness and ability to perform University level work.

In discussing what the University has a right to expect of the students, the group agreed the student has the following obligations to the University:

(1) To meet the instructor at least halfway in striving for better student-faculty relationships.

(2) To follow the rules and regulations of the University, making

Appomattox Shadows Linger In Southland

At Appomattox, Virginia these days you can look down the winding country road up which General Lee rode his horse to meet Grant and see the McLean House standing as the site of the South's surrender and a shrine to Confederate pride.

The old Southern house and village atop Clover Hill are being restored by the National Park Service. And soon tourists will flock to the hillsides where the hungry and worn men of the South waited with fading hope ninety years ago.

Like our slave-owning, Mint Julep-sipping forefathers, we in the South still embrace the gracious living tradition as if we were all gallant gentlemen courting the drawling belles of a century ago. Only today this living means drinking Cokes (a multi-million dollar industry in the region) and watching television, living in cities like Atlanta and Charlotte and Richmond instead of on plantations.

They Ramble The Region

In the midst of all these changes in the South, shadows of the hungry and worn Confederate soldiers at Appamottox ramble about the region in a disgruntled manner. And as they perform with this New South as a backdrop, they remind us of old silent movies. These shadows are grotesque and antique.

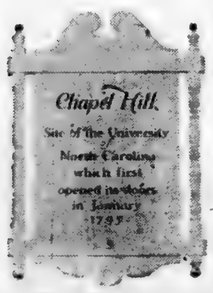
In Louisana, we see the shadows convening in a secret group called the "Southern Gentleman's Organization." This group is attempting to rally Louisana white persons who are determined to keep racial segregation. It is much like another group of shadows in Mississippi known as the Citizens Council.

What the "Southern Gentlemen" and the Citizens Council and similar groups forget is that they are shadows in this age of atomic plants in Oak Ridge, Tennessee and Aiken, South Carolina. In the late 1860's, similar Southern groups roamed under names such as the Knights of the White Camelia, the Constitutional Guards, and the Knights of the Rising Sun. But that was the South of Radical Reconstruction and Federal troops statioted to ensure Republican control—not the South of atomic plants, booming industrial progress, and urbanization.

An Old Voice Is Outdated

Another voice coming recently from a figure resembling Lee's broken army about Appamattox says that it will "champion the Southern viewpoint at all times." This shadow spoke from Georgia; he is Governor Martin Griffin.

And again he is speaking the words of 100 years ago, words appropriate for John C. Calhoun—but not suitable for a region that is producing men of the Jonathan Daniels, Frank Graham, Richard Russell, and Ralph McGill caliber.



Other shadows darken the New South. They are about us each day in segregatead schools and the mental block that exists about trade unions. We all know what they are—ideas we still haven't outgrown, traditions that have outlived their usefulness.

University Professor Rupert B. Vance of the Sociology Department, writing in the Virginia Quarterly tells us that today's South is one of urbanization and industrialization, a region in which sharecropping and tenancy are disappearing. In short, Dr. Vance and other thinkers see this region as a different one, a dynamic one.

That is why we must look for the light to lift the dark shadows of Lee's men from the New South. Let them live in history as a lesson for Southerners bent on sectionalism—not in our factories, schools, and lives.

WE HAD AN interesting conversation with a first-semester freshman in the Pine Room the other day. He said he had observed several little literary groups sitting around over stacks of empty coffee cups and settling the world's hash; in fact he had not only seen them, he had joined some of their conversations.

Of course they were very intellectual, and frequently over his head, but all the same he had managed to come to some conclusions about highly literary people and the intellectual barrages to which they daily subject each other. He said he gotten the impression that the "illuminati" who sit around and discuss the emoted word at interminable length seemed to think that by talking about the fame and greatness of other people they acquired a certain amount of fame themselves; that if they acquired a fame they would to a certain extent be able to enjoy it after death; and that the ones who aspired to be writers, if given a sufficiently large sum of tax-free money, would never write another word.

THIS IS INTERESTING thinking. We are inclined to agree with his first remark; digging into our subconscious (a job which can only safely be done with rubber gloves and an oxygen mask), we find that at times we too have felt that in talking of the fame of Faulkner we were enjoying a certain modicum of fame ourself.

We do not agree with the freshman's second comment. No normal person, we believe, ever consciously thinks he can actively, personally enjoy fame after death. It is however, more plausible to ascribe what the freshman was talking about to an attitude expressed by Kipling when he said quite simply that "no young man thinks he is ever going to die."

And as to the prediction about writers, we see a certain paradox in the freshman's observation; if a person is a writer he will write no matter how much money he has; if he stops writing as soon as someone gives him something to live on he is not a writer. He is, rather, a typist.

ANOTHER INTERESTING REMARK was made to us last week, when the storm over the budget was at its peak. Our informant said that in his opinion, with regard to the hassle between The Daily Tar Heel and the Legislature, the legislature never really understood the Tar Heel and that the Tar Heel never really understood the Legislature, consequently the Legislature never learned to respect the power of purse strings; all with the result that the two groups went right on snarling at one another and leaping at each other's throats year after year.

Every time this highly potent war between the government and the press becomes inflamed and springs into the headlines, or at least the subheadlines, we imagine the faculty, that is those members of it who have been around here long enough to see a few cycles go through their recurring routine, must laugh rather wearily to itself and sigh, "Oh, there they go again trying to commit journalistic (or legislative) homicide," and retire stoically into an academic air raid shelter until the clashing issues stop exploding, the search lights of self-righteousness are flicked off, and the final siren or dying interest or diversionary events sounds the "all clear."

'Shoo!'

MATTER OF FACT

Matsu, Quemoy And Politics

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—Maybe there ought to be no connection between domestic politics and the crisis in the Formosa Strait. But there is. The connection is very much on the minds of politicians in both parties. At least in part because this is so, American intervention in case of an attack on the offshore islands, which looked very probable a few weeks ago, looks much less so now.

Instead, an all-out attempt by the Administration to extricate itself from the Quemoy-Matsu dilemma is looking more and more in the cards every day. The attempt could take the form of the kind of Anglo-American deal recently described in this space. Or it could be a simple warning to Chiang either to evacuate or to prepare to fight alone. Extrication may quite conceivably be the purpose of the sudden visit to Formosa by Assistant Secretary of State Walter Robertson and Adm. Arthur Radford, a pair it would be hard to accuse of appeasement-mindedness.

At any rate, one thing is certain—there is strong and growing political pressure on the Administration to avoid a fight for Matsu and Quemoy. The Democrats are clearly beginning to see the Matsu-Quemoy issue as, potentially, the "gut issue" to use against the Administration that they have so far lacked. And many Republicans fear they may be right.

BITTERLY AWARE

The Democrats are bitterly aware that the "peace issue" has been used effectively against them by Republicans in the past. Many Democrats believe that the Quemoy-Matsu crisis may provide them with a golden opportunity to seize the "peace issue" for themselves, meanwhile hanging the "war party" label on at least a section of the Republican party.

In fact, politicians in both parties sense—or think they sense—a strong movement of opinion against intervention to save Quemoy and Matsu. Congressional mail on the subject has not been heavy. But it has been steady, and anti-intervention by a wide margin. The press has also been surprisingly anti - intervention. And experiences like that of Minnesota's Sen. Hubert Humphrey have impressed other politicians.

Humphrey recently invaded California, home stamping ground of Sen. Wiliam Knowland, chief advocate of the view that the offshore islands must at all costs be defended. Humphrey made a whole series of speches opposing intervention. He even committed the near-sacrilege of proposing that Nationalist China should be replaced by India on the United Nations Security Council.

ENTHUSIASM

Humphrey has reported to fellow Democrats that he was enthusiastically received everywhere, even by audiences he had expected to have Knowland's views. This sort of thing leads politicians to suspect that they have found that pearl beyond price—a winning issue. It has also led many Democrats to complain privately that they made a terrible mistake when they did not fight the Formosa resolution, as former President Truman urged when the resolution was being debated.

For the Formosa resolution makes any effective exploitation of the issue difficult. The resolution committed the Democrats in advance to rely on the President's judgement — the more partisan declare that they were "mouse-trapped" into approving whatever the President might do.

Moreover, if the Democrats adopted an outright party position against intervention to save the islands, as some Democrats now urge, the party would certainly be accused of softness on communism. It would be accused, with more justice, of extending to the Communists an open invitation to attack. Yet if President Eisenhower subsequently decided not to intervene, his hand would be strengthened, and Democratic criticism forestalled.

FORMULA

In this political dilemma, the most effective formula seems to be Adlai Stevenson's charge that Administration bungling has given the nation a "choice between another humiliating retreat or else the hazard of war . . . unleashed not by necessity . . ." Neither retreat nor unnecessary war is particularly popular politically.

All this is not to suggest for a moment that either Democratic criticism of the Administration's Asia policy, or the Administration's increasingly visible tendency to back away from intervention in the face of this criticism, are wholly politically motivated. There are honest arguments, which have nothing at all to do with domestic politics, both for and against defending the offshore islands. Men's motives are always mixed, and patriotism and even simple common sense are by no means unknown in either party.

Yet it is of no use pretending that the Quemoy-Matsu dispute, and indeed the whole crisis abroad, are not deeply charged with domestic political meaning. In this situation the danger is clear. The danger is that both parties will begin to compete feverishly for the "peace party" label. This is by no means a startlingly new idea—both major British parties were competing for the same label during the Munich period. The end result was, of course, the old Hobson's choice between surrender and fighting a war of despair.

Reader's Retort

Notes 'Feelie' & Leonard

EDITORS:

It is not my custom to write letters to the editor, but on this occasion I can not resist. I call your attention to the April 16 issue of your paper, the column written by Reuben Leonard. It contains a paragraph concerning the advent of the "feelie" age, replacing the "movies". This is an obvious copy of an idea from Huxley's "Brave New World." I see no credits in Mr. Leonard's column. Yet what do we read directly beneath his column? A reader's retort condemning plagiarism! This could call forth many remarks, but I would sum them up with — Practice what you preach.

John C. Whitfield

P. S. I would imagine that many of your letters are of a critical nature. They, like mine, would at least indicate that we read and take an interest in your paper, with which you are doing a good job.

THE TAX PLAN AT RALEIGH

Under the committee's plan, approximately one-fourth of the total amount would come from taxes on property. One of the ten proposed levies is a tax on building materials—surely a tax on progress; while another would tax real estate transfers. In both instances, the man hardest hit would be the builder or buyer of a home.

Approximately one-sixth would come from taxes on automobiles. Automobiles have ceased to be a luxury and have become a necessity, and the automobile already is the most heavily taxed item the average man must buy.

And approximately one-ninth would come from the farmer, in taxes on seeds, feeds, fertilizers, and insecticides.

Well over half, therefore, of the total would come from three groups of citizens — property owners (chiefly home-owners), automobile owners, and farmers.

And this program would tax luxuries, not needs. — Franklin Press.

Suspicious Of Southerners In Congress

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON. — A suspicion exists in Washington that the Southern leadership of the Senate and, to a lesser degree, of the House would manage to be brave if they could be sure that after 1956 they still controlled Congress and President Eisenhower still ran the Executive branch.

It is a reasonable prospect. Congressional margins are already narrow, many Democrats coming up next fall are in the Solid South while some Republicans coming up are from doubtful states and districts or have failed to make impressive records here.

In an extraordinary burst of candor, Senate Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson of Texas, speaking at the Rayburn dinner, called the roll of states where he expects to pick up Senators next fall. Experienced politicians are great claimers, but the rule is to be general rather than specific lest you be embarrassed as a prophet or discourage the party faithful in the places you omit to name.

But Johnson said the Democrats whould oust Republicans in Maryland, Indiana, Ohio, Connecticut, Illinois, Pennsylvania, California, Colorado and Idaho. The House rarely fails to follow the Senate.

COMMATID

Such victories would still leave senior Southern Democrats in commanding positions. In the Senate, Southerners are chairmen of eight of the 15 standing committees and of two special committees, the latter two being Democratic Policy and the Select Committee on Small Business. Every Southern-controlled committee ranks as a major committe. In fact, the only truly prized post not in Southern hands is chairman of the Appropriations Committee, where Carl Hayden of Arizona ranks Richard B. Russell of Georgia, who is second in command.

In the House, 13 of 19 standing committees and both the two special committees have Southern chairmen. Again, Appropriations is an exception, with Clarence Cannon from the border state of Missouri as chairman and a Texan, George H. Mahon, ranking second. These Southern-directed House committees are very important, indeed. They include Rules, which controls the flow of business, and the tax-raising Ways and Means.

It is being suggested that the Southerners perceive the usefulness of having a Republican President to whom they can pass the buck. When this is added to their obvious disinclination to attack President Eisenhower, the reason is seen for the existing suspicion that their slogan is: "Time for not too much change."

Possibly they are influenced by the fact that the next Democratic Presidential nominee is unlikely to be chosen from their number. It was demonstrated again at the Rayburn dinner that Adlai Stevenson can have the nomination if he wants it. He does want it. So that's that.

DEPTH

Adding depth to the current suspicion is the fact that President Eisenhower has accepted the New Deal framework in very large part, including foreign policy. True, his administrators of the independent agencies are not aggressive defenders of the social philosophy which brought their agencies into being and there has been some sabotage. But the framework stands.

Another factor, which perhaps induces a certain relaxed mood among Southerners, is the almost-total disappearance of the Eiscenhower Democrats in their states. James F. Byrnes is no longer governor of South Carolina, and President Eisenhower deliberately chose not to be offensive to Speaker Rayburn by staying away from a testimonial dinner to Byrnes given in South Carolina the same Saturday night. Governor Shivers, the Texas Dixiecrat, is in trouble with a land scandal at home, and Louisiana loyalists say that pro-Ike Governor Robert F. Kennon is on his way out.

Suspicions regarding the Southern leaders' true feelings about 1956 will only be dissipated by generally energetic partisan action on their part.

THIS IS praise to the student Legislature day. Just one year and seventeen days ago the students at Carolina went to the polls and elected the largest group of "political nymphomaniacs" this campus has ever seen. This past Thursday night the majority of that same power starved Legislature stepped down from office.

What have they done while in office? They have held investigation, inquisitions, and deliberations. They have played the role of big-time politicians but their complete lack of student desires and their colossal stupidity has overshadowed any good that they might have done. As they say in the old country; They fought a good fight, but they loused.

I will say this for the old Legislature, when they went out of office Thursday night they performed their greatest service to the students in their political career.

WHERE DID the Legislature goof? In the first place, they cut The Daily Tar Heel budget by 19 per cent. How in the hell can they chop $5,000 in appropriations from the newspaper, the backbone of campus affairs, just because they realize they don't have enough money to please all the organizations of which they are members?

In the second place, when they found out that there were not sufficient funds to meet the budget did they forget their student government-executive secretary brainchild?

No. They went right ahead with an allotment of $1,300 for a permanent secretary to keep student government files. Boy, oh boy, those lazy politicians who are elected to offices by the students, turn around and spend student money to hire a secretary to do the jobs they are elected to do.

Personally, I think more girls should be in campus politics—their hands are smaller and they can't steal as much.

DID YOU know that the chairman of the Carolina Forum gets $400 travel expenses to book speakers? I always thought that the invention of the telegraph and the telephone had cut out the necessity for hopping in a big Buick, filling it up with gasoline, and going on a sight-seeing trip, with the booking of a speaker as a mere incidental. I'm just an old fogey I guess.

PREXY DON Fowler might find a permanent secretary a very time saving device. He can hand her his rumored black list and say, "File these names under 'D' m'am, 'D' as in dead—politically, that is." I don't blame you Don, go ahead and keep some of those who campaigned against you from using their know-how and ability for the good of the students. You're running the show—or are you?

LEWIS BRUMFIELD, that pompous drawl from the left bank of the Yadkin River spent Thursday morning in Y-Court bumming cigarettes and announcing over the public address system that the "Tennis Ball" was going to be held Friday night.

"Yall come on down to the asphalt tennis courts tomorrow nite," he said, "We are reallly gonna have a bawl."

"What if it rains," interrupted an observer.

"By God, it better not rain," answered Lewd-Mouthed Lewis.

THE OPERA "Vigoro" has finally ended. The aria is no longer filled with the putrid perfume distributed by Grounds-Keepers Incorporated. That is one good thing about Chapel Hill, you never know what is going to happen next. Your fraternity brother might be a Commie or your roommate might buy a pair of Bermuda shorts. It hasn't been proved by any of the investigating committees that Bermuda shorts and Communism are correlated, but you had better not take any chances. The card you hold may be your own.

SENIOR WEEK starts Monday. After four long years the seniors are going to be kings and queens. Let's hope that none of them live it up so thoroughly that they won't get their share when that old sheep is sheared.

IF ANYONE is interested in learning the new game on campus called "panty-ante" they can get a complete list of the rules from Ray Jeffries. Be sure to get the list of prizes offered by the Honor Courts also.

MR. JOHN C. Whitfield has written a letter to the editor concerning the paragraph in this column of April 16 pertaining to "feelies."

I am awfully sorry that I did not give Mr. Huxley credit for originating the idea of "feelies," mainly because I have never read "Brave New World."

Actually, I got the idea while rereading "1984" by George Orwell and not once is the word "feelie" used. If you bother to read any more of the columns you will find that I copy Drew Pearson's column from the News & Observer, title it Y-Court Corner, and put my name under it.

All kidding aside, I appreciate your letter very much, and I hope you continue to read Y-Court Corner and criticize it any time you please.

Quote, Unquote

Honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on—how then? Can honour set to a leg? no: or an arm? no: or take away the grief of a wound? no . . . What is honour? a word. What is in that word honour; what is that honour? air . . . Who hath it? he that died o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. It is insensible then? yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Therefore I'll none of it. Honour is a mere scutcheon. Carolina's 17-Hit Barrage Levels USC; Clemson Here Today

Compete With Gamecock Club Here Tomorrow

Three of the outstanding runners who will be here this afternoon when the USC Gamecocks take on the Tar Heels in an ACC track meet at 2 p.m. are (left to right) Sonny Wilcher, Fred Roberts, and Tommy Woodlee. Wilcher runs the 440, Roberts the mile and half mile, and Woodlee the 100 and 220 yard dashes.

Zachary Raps Four Hits As Tar Heels Roll To 13-2 Victory

By BUZZ MERRITT

When Clemson's baseball Tigers take to Emerson Field this afternoon they will be facing a suddenly revived North Carolina club that banged out seventeen hits Friday in downing South Carolina's Gamecocks 13-2.

The Tigers, prennially a threat in Atlantic Coast Conference baseball circles, will probably face the slants of Carolina's Jimmy Raugh.

The Tar Heels unleashed a 17-hit barrage Friday to pick up their fourth win of the season against eleven losses.

With righthander Tom Maulsby limiting the Gamecocks to eight scattered singles, the Tar Heels banged away at a trio of Gamecock hurlers, with left-fielder Tom Zachery leading the attack. Zachery rapped four isngles in five trips. A pop fly to short in the eighth spoiled his bid for a perfect day at the plate.

Maultsby, aided by three UNC double-plays, tossed five innings of shut-out ball before three singles scored Frank Ellerbe with the Gamecocks's first run. The USC club picked up one more in the seventh on an error and Jim Jarrett's single.

Carolina jumped on USC starter R. O. Hughes for two runs in the first on a single by Zachery, Connie Gravitte's infield out and consecutive singles by Will Frye, Jim Love and Harry Lloyd.

The Tar Heels picked up singletons in the second and third, then blasted away for four runs in the fourth to sew things up.

Maultsby, in picking up his second ACC win of the season, gave up five walks and fanned four.

Carolina third-baseman Jack Woods came up with the fielding gem of the day when he snared football star Carl Brazel's line drive to start a twin-killing. The play almost developed into a triple-play, but Bob Cross beat Lloyd's throw to first by a step.

UNC Netters On First Trip

Undefeated in 14 matches this season, the Carolina tennis team journeys to Wake Forest this afternoon to take on the Deacs in an Atlantic Coast Conference match.

The Tar Heels, fresh from a 5-4 win over powerful Duke in their last outing, will be on the road the first time this season, after protecting their winning streak that goes back into last season successfully in 14 matches here. Following today's match with the Deacs, the Tar Heels return home for two more matches before starting on a six day swing northward that will carry them to Williams, Amherst, Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Virginia.

Henry Admits Airing Bribe

NEW YORK, April 22 (AP)—Former heavyweight boxer Clarence Henry was disclosed today to have pleaded guilty two months ago to a charge of offering another fighter a $15,000 bribe to throw a bout.

Henry, 27-year-old Negro from Philadelphia, entered the plea on February 23.

He will be sentenced April 27 and could receive as much as five years in prison and $10,000 fine.

There was no immediate explanation as to why Henry's guilty plea did not come to light until today.

He had been charged with offering the bribe to Irving Bobby Jones, an Oakland, Calif., middleweight, to lose a fight with Joey Giardello at Madison Square Garden last June 11. Jones lost a close decision.

Duke Cagers Slate Kentucky For 1956

Sime Paces Imps Over UNC

Durham, Apr. 23—In one of the fastest freshman track meets in several years, Duke's Blue Imps toppled the University of North Carolina's Tar Babies here Friday afternoon.

Paced by swift Dave Sime, the Imps picked up most of their points in the dashes and field events, with Carolina dominating the distance running.

Ronnie Austell of Shelby, star UNC quarter-miler, set a new UNC freshman record in that event as he hit 49.8. He also combined with Ben Williams, Jack Jones and Gregory Leneave to break the UNC frosh mile relay record. The quartet toured the distance in 3:25.4.

Sime's 9.6 hundred and 21.5 200-yard dash were features of the meet. He also picked up first in the 220-yard low hurdles and the broad jump and third in the discus to top all scorers for the day with 21 points.

The summary: 100-yd. dash—Sime (D), Honeycutt (D), Varnum (C). 9.6. 220-yd. dash—Sime (D), Honeyeutt (D), Varnum (C) 21.5. 440 yd. run—Austell (C), Jordon (D), Leneave (C). 49.8. 880 yd. run—Williams (C), Kahn (C), Cobb (D) 1:59.4; Mile—Whatley (C), Riggsbee (C), Wells (D). 4:32.0; Two Mile—Liipfert (C), Riggsbee (C), Whatley (C) 11:06.5; 120-High Hurdles—Drury (C), Sparrow (D), Vandalyan (D) 15.5; 220-Low Hurdles—Sime (D), Drury (C), Sparrow (D) 23.4; High Jump—Mott (D), Newcome (D), Smith (D), 6'0"; Broad Jump—Sime (D), Givins (D), Durry (C), 22'1"; Pole Vault—Tie Pratt (D), Davis (C), Henson (D). 11'; Shot Put—Dukeler (D), Vandalyn (D), Scudieri (D), 42'10"; Javalin—Oakley (C), Clement (D), Payne (C), 159'8"; Discus—Vandalyn (D), Scudieri (D), Sime (D), 132'4"; Mile Relay—UNC (Williams, Jones, Leneave, Austell) 3:25.4.

Duke Wallops Clemson, 10-3

DURHAM, N. C., April 22 (AP)—Duke's Blue Devils jumped on Clemson mound ace Leonard Humphries for two runs in the first inning and were never headed as they drubbed the Tigers 10-3 today.

Righthander Harleigh Fatzinger went the route for the Blue Devils in chalking up his third win against no defeats.

A walk, a hit batsman and a sacrifice put two men on in the first, and third sacker Andy Cockrell unloaded a two-run triple to put the Blue Devils in front.

Hits by Cockrell and Dick Kreutzer and four Clemson errors gave the Blue Devils another pair in the third.

Scholars Open Renaissance Meeting

Some 75 scholars from southeastern colleges and universities gathered here yesterday to begin their 12th annual Renaissance Meeting

The Renaissance specialists' conference is held on alternate years on the UNC and Duke University campuses sponsored by the divisions of humanities.

Six papers were presented at 2:30 p.m. opening session, in the Morehead Building, at which Dr. Raymond Adams, acting chairman of the UNC English Dept., presided.

Among the participants were William O. Scott, Duke; William Myer and Paul R. Baumgartner, UNC; Henry L. Snuggs. Wake Forest; Cyrus H. Hoy, University of Virginia, and Roland M. Frye, Emory University

Highlight of the Friday evening session was an illustrated lecture by Dr. Clemens Sommer of the UNC Art Department, who showed how Greek art is reflected in the paintings of Piero della Francesca, Italian artist of the 15th century.

Dr. Linton C. Stevens, University of Alabama, also spoke Friday night, discussing humanistic education and the hierarchy of values in the Renaissance.

"Francesca was the only Renaissance painter whose work reflects the Greek rather than the Roman," Dr. Sommer said, explaining that Greek culture was supposedly unknown to men of Francesca's day.

Dr. Sommer showed slides of frescoes painted by the Italian in the church of St. Francis at Arezzo, representing the story of the Cross and reflecting the Greek art of the Hellenic period, the fifth century B. C.

"In effect, Francesca revived Greek art," Dr. Sommer said, "for the type of men in his paintings, their movements and motives were the same as the Greek."

Another UNC speaker, Baumgartner, discussed Milton's emphasis on patience and other virtues in his last three poems, "Paradise Lost," "Paradise Regained" and "Samson Agonistes."

In a view contrary to most authorities, Baumgartner suggested that Milton "from the experience of his blindness and restoration of sight came to have a strong belief in the virtues of patience, dependence and submission to the will of God as necessary to the 'true warfaring Christian.'"

The meeting will continue through today when 10 papers are scheduled for presentation, along with a business session.

thumped the advisor system soundly. They felt too many students are assigned to each advisor in General College. This leads to a lost and bewildering feeling in the freshman, said the group.

Suggestions made by the group included a more liberal cut system, more fine arts entertainment offered to the student body and some method of giving prestige to those who make good grades.

are certain areas in which students should not have any say-so, but in the areas in which they are given responsibility the administration should say "Here is a pool in which students can swim" and leave them alone.

Ralph Casey of the Physical Education Dept. added that often students enter areas in which they do not belong.

David Reid then complained of "the stagnancy" of the student body. He said he believes this "stagnancy" is a result of a "spoon-feeding of the students" by the administration.

too filled with fraternity rushing activity, too. Miss Bauman came up with the suggestion that a system of "big brothers," by which upperclassmen could giude first-year students during their early days here, should be installed.

Muntzing, during a vigorous discusion of entrance requirements, said Carolina needs better, "more inspiring" instructors, rather than tougher entrance standards.

Early in the session around a blond conference table in Bingham Hall, the group talked its way through the problem of "mass versus class education."

Miss Marilyn Zager said "education should develop responsible and reliable people, and not just a class of intellectuals." Miss Alex Thacker declared, "A state university has an obligation to citizens . . . but a state school also could do something for the intellectuals." Miss Thacker suggested a special program for "outstanding or intellectual" students.

HAPPENINGS ON THE HILL:

Going To The Beach?

By SUSAN ANDES

"Going to the beach!"

If I had a nickel for each time I heard that reply this week as I called the various houses in quest of news, I'd have enough money to go to the beach also!

Busy wekends are not unusual, and neither are school nights, but this week's mid-week activity on the "first hot spring night," left many of the thrill-seeking participants tired and weary the following morning.

As a popular history professor completed writing a quiz on the board Wednesday, he apologized for having to test the brain on such a hot day, especially after such a quote, "busy night."

The St. As and KDs certainly have just reason to be proud for their splendid performance in the Valkyrie Sing this week. Congratulations!

Phi Delt officers elected this week for the fall semester are: Bill Pittman, Sanford, president; Sherwood Smith, Jacksonville, Fla., reporter; John Medlin, Benson, secretary; John Cauble, Hickory, treasurer; Bob Collier, Statesville, preceptor; Pat Patterson, Wilson, warden.

The Chi Phis have a little "victory celebration" planned for tonight at Hogans, in honor of Collie Collison, Jack Stevens and their other members who won in the recent campus elections.

KAs are mostly recuperating from their Old South weekend recently, but report that Ozzie Ayscue, Monroe, is pinned to Emily Urquhart of Woodville, a Chi O. Don Geiger of Tampa, pinned to Donna Dopler, a nursing student here from Lake Wales, Fla.

The St. As are partying this weekend with their annual Swing Out, an alumni reunion celebration.

The PiKAs have many events planned for this is their Dream Girl weekend. Last night they held a picnic out at Hogan's, with combo and all. Tonight at the Carolina Hotel in Raleigh their new Dream Girl will be announced at the ball.

Engagements of interest are: Nancy Julian, KD from Winston-Salem to Jerry Husser, West Point cadet from Advance, N. C. Also Pat Horton, Stillwater, Okla. to Jerry McMahan, Phi Kap med student from Asheville. McIver's graduate counselor, Tish Coley, Pi Phi from Newton, engaged to Wade St. Clair, a Duke graduate from Charlotte.

The TEPs are having their Spring Houseparty this weekend. Chairman in charge of arrangements is Burnet Mendelsohn.

Friday night they had a formal dinner and dance at the Washington-Duke Hotel in Durham. Presentation of awards was made before about 100 people. Honored were Marshall Waldman, Long Beach, N. Y., outstanding senior; Dick Schulman, Canton, outstanding pledge; Bobby Paller, Atlanta, Ga., outstanding athlete; Leonard Clein, Winston-Salem, scholastic award; Eric Heiden, Lack City, S. C., intramural award; and Bobby Paller and Len Clein, rushing award. Pinned at the TEP House are Carol Breidtsfield to Ronnie Kriegsman and Shelia Goldstein to Larry Meslow.

The Chancellor's key was presented to past Chancellor Art Mackler of Smithfield; and the Treasurer's Key to past Treasurer Burnet Mendelsohn, Charleston, S. C.

The new Chi Psi initiates received their pins Thursday morning and it wasn't long after that, Thursrday night to be exact, that Zack Waters from Salisbury, Md., pinned Alice Craig. She's a senior practice teaching in Durham now, and is from Charlotte.

McIver's new dorm officers elected this week are: Connie McMahon, Asheville, president; Sue Fink, Chapel Hill, vice president; Kaye Browne, Washington, D. C., recorder; Shirley Hollis, Charlotte, social chairman; and Margaret Rook, Richmond, Va., treasurer.

The Pi Phis had a party with the ATOs Thursday night; while the SAEs had a little get-together for the Tri Delts.

New Tri Delt pinnings are: Marian Linder, Scarsdale, N. C. to Bill Calvert, PiKA from Norfolk, Va.; and Judy Jackson, Shreveport, Pa. to Don Gladstone, Sigma Chi from Drexel Hills, Pa.

Another pinned couple is Dave Whitaker, pre med student from Williamston and a member of Alpha Chi Sigma, honorary chemical frat, to Phyllis Bailey from Louisburg.

New Phi Kap officers elected for next year include: Jim Sykes, Jenkinstown, Pa., president; Myron Conklin, Durham, vice president; Colin McMillin, Houston, Texas, house manager; Ed Willingham, Ridgely, Tenn., secretary; Jerry Reese, Andrews, social chairman; Charles Sharpless, Hatboro, Pa., and Art Sutorius, Manhasset, N. Y., sargent at arms. Gene Whitehead, Scotland Neck, corresponding secretary; and Burt Davis, Roxboro, pledge master.

Sponsors for the 1955 Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity Rose Ball tonight at the Carolina Inn are shown above. Left to right: Miss Barbara Brantley, Meredith College, with Dick Frucci, Archon, from Albany, Ga.; Miss Judy Murdock, Durham, with Richard Jackson, secretary, Jacksonville; Miss Sarah Cole, WC, with Dick Starner, Warden, Elkhart, Ind.; Second row: Miss Donna Ashcraft, Fairmont, W. Va., with Pete Ash, Treasurer, Rivesville, W. V.; Miss Patricia Warlick. Jim Turner Gets NSA Position

A Carolina student was yesterday elected to office as the Carolina-Virginia Regional Assembly of the National Student Assn. wound up its three-day meting here.

Jim Turner, former member of the student Legislature and well-known Student Party leader, was chosen first vice-president.

The organization spent three days on the Carolina campus discussing the responsibility of the student in various areas of university life.

Delegates from colleges and universities in both Carolinas and Virginia ended their conclave yesterday with a closing plenary session in Graham Memorial, which included reports from discussion groups and election of new officers.

Miss Mary Lou Baughm, Greensboro College, was elected president of the Carolinas-Virginia region. Vice-chairmen elected were Miss Margaret Sanders, Hollins College; Miss Libby Kaplan, Woman's College.

Miss Barbara Merritt, Greensboro College, was elected secretary, and Dave Wright, Lenoir-Rhyne, was chosen treasurer.

'Satan's Saints' Working Hard On Production

By KEN LOWRY

As opening night for "Satan's Saints," latest Sound and Furry production draws closer, practice sessions in Memorial Hall are becoming more and more intense.

Although there seems to be no order to rehearsals now, the audience can expect a real show next Thursday and Friday.

A casual observer entering the auditorium might probably see a couple working on their dance routine, accompanied by the drone of actors cueing each other and assorted people rushing on and off the stage. All seems to be in a state of confusion. But, out of this confusion will come one of the best Sound and Fury productions of the year.

The show is loaded with good numbers and generously sprinkled with laughter. "In the Shade of the Banana Tree," "Don't Kick It Around" and "Won't You Charleston with Me?" look especially good.

Included in the cast are Johnny McLaren, Milton Cooke, Miss Jane Edwards, Dave Reed and Miss Patty Andrews.

Senior Week Features Picnic, No Class Day

UNC seniors will "live it up" during Senior Class Week, six days of fun and frolic planned especially for them, beginning tomorrow.

The annual eve nt will have a special feature every day, class publicity Chairman Rueben Leonard has announced. Highlights of the week will be Class Free Day and the Senior Class Picnic.

Seniors will be treated to late shows at the local theatres in Chapel Hill Monday night free of charge. Seniors will not meet class on Tuesday, Class Free Day. Instead a meeting of all fourth year students will be held in Memorial Hall and will later spit into smaller meetings with deans of the various schools.

The Class Picnic is scheduled for Wednesday at Hogan's Lake, beginning with a parade in front of Woollen Gym at 3 p.m. Free food and refreshments will be served, accompanied by music by a combo.

Seniors may obtain free tickets in Y-court for Thursday's Sound and Fury presentation of "Satan's Saints." They also may take advantage of the warm weather and expose their tos without embarrassment on Friday, which has been designated as "Barefoot

Senior coeds will be allowed late permission tomorrow night, according to an announcement from the Women's Residence Council.

They will be allowed to stay out until the Senior Week late movie is over, said the announcement.

Lippmann's Latest Up For Talk

Newspaper columnist Walter Lippmann's latest book, The Public Philosophy, will be discussed pro and con on WUNC-TV's first round table get-together tomorrow night.

On the panel will be Doctors Alexander Heard, William Poteat, James Godfrey and Lt. Col. Mark Orr.

The round table discussion will be televised live from the educational television station's studios at 9 p.m.

Dr. Heard has termed Lippmann's writings as "widely used for several decades by political scientists. Many students of contemporary politics, however, will disagree with the thesis of the book . . . and with the assumptions that seem to underlie it."

Cazin Given Science Grant

John Cazin Jr., a graduate student in the Dept. of Bacteriology and Immunology, has been awarded a National Science Foundation Predoctoral Fellowship for the academic year 1955-56,

A native of West Virginia who has been in Chapel Hill seven years. Cazin will carry out research studies toward his doctorate in bacteriology, under the direction of Instructor Milton Huppert and Dr. D. A. MacPhe.son, professor and chairman of the Bacteriology Dept.

His research will be centered on antigenic studies of the pathogenic fungus "Histoplasma capsulatum," Dr. MacPherson said.

Cazin came to the University in 1948, after a year's service in the Marine Corps. Hs completed both his B.S. and M.S. degrees here with a major in bacteriology.

Purks Calls For Respect For Learning; Wraps Up Second All-Campus Meet

Prof. Stabb Dies

Herman Henry Staab, Professor Emeritus in the Romance Languages department at the University of North Carolina, died Friday night shortly after 10 o'clock at North Carolina Memorial Hospital. He was 79 years old.

Death followed an illness of only a few days. An autopsy will be held to determine the cause.

At his own request private funeral rites were conducted this morning, and the body will be cremated.

Staab retired as Associate Professor of French in 1946, after serving in the department since 1918.

From 1912-12 he taught at Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., until joining the University faculty here.

Mrs. Staab survives.

Art Show Set Here On May 1

The 18th Annual North Carolina School Art Exhibition will open in Person Hall Art Gallery on May 1.

The exhibition, which will include original art work done by children in North Carolina elementary grades, is being sponsored by the Department of Art and the Extension Division here and the Department of Art and Public Relations at Woman's College in Greensboro. Cooperating in the exhibition are the North Carolina Federation of Women's Clubs and the North Carolina Division of the American Association of University Women.

Judge of the exhibition will be Mrs. James Cooper Bland, instructor in the Department of Education, Museum of Modern Art in New York City. She had taught at Horace Mann School in New York City and Teachers College in New York City and served during the summers of 1949, 1950 and 1951 as a member of a team conducting Child Care Institutes in Germany. The team was under the auspices of the State Department and Unitarian Service Committee.

Mrs. Bland and Miss Mary Burgess, supervisor of art for Durham County schools, will appear on WUNC-TV from 5 until 5:30 p.m. Monday in a panel discussion on the subject of children's art.

Discussion Groups End Their Meets

Student-administration relationships, the orientation and advisor systems and Carolina's lack of a tradition for study were the main topics touched in yesterday afternoon's group discussions at the second All-Campus Conference.

Two of the four groups asked that the administration be called to account in several weeks for some of the specific recommendations made by the conference.

Closer relations among students, faculty and administration were urged by the first group. Dick Sirkin suggested that the Office of Student Affairs reserve one hour daily for students to drop by. Dick Baker said professors with too many students don't have time for individual students.

The second group discussed student-administration problems of a different nature. David Reid said the administration, in its desire to avoid trouble, has a "tendency to maintain the status quo." He also wanted to know why students are not consulted in such important actions as the revised cut rule.

Dr. William Poteat answered that was mainly a "case of the right hand not knowing what the left was doing." Ralph Casey then said "the responsibility always finally rests with administration." Student government receives its right by sufference, he added.

The group also lambasted the advisor system as "too impersonal and too ineffective because of "the overloading" of advisers.

The administration again came under fire in the third group when Manning Muntzing said the "University has gone downhill" in recent years and "the administration plans to take over student government." Louis Kraar called for "an intellectual leader in the administration who personifies the qualities of the University."

The group also discussed the need for a "study tradition," the drinking problem and the advisor system. The group concluded there are many students here who don't belong here.

The fifth group decided students have the right to be consulted and to aid in the formulation of rules and regulations by faculty and administration. Cuts and student fees were mentioned. Lt. Robert Gray said the student is here for

Ends Two Days Of Meetings

Dr. James H. Purks, University provost, made an appeal for the students and the University to promote a respect for learning in meeting which wound up the second annual All-Campus Conference last night.

The speaker spoke highly of the address made to the conference by Dr. Hugh Holman at the opening session on Friday.

Dr. Purks spoke in regard to the two theme questions of the conference which asked what the University and the students have a right to expect of each other.

EXISTENCE

"It seems to me that these questions relate to the reasons for the existence of the University," said the speaker. "If the University has purposes which justify its existence, then both University and students have a right to expect, each of the other, performance consistence with these fundamental purposes."

"Students have a right to expect the University to fulfill its mission," he said. "The University has a right to expect students to study and to learn and to attempt to grow in wisdom, in maturity, in poise and in ability and willingness to assume noble responsibilities. Otherwise, the mission of the University is in default.

WORTHY MISSION

"In short," said Dr. Purks, "each has a right to expect that the other will be responsive to a worthy mission which is far more important than the selfish interest of either.

The dinner meeting in Lenoir Hall ended the two-day conference, which was the second of its kind to be held here.

The small discussion groups, which met for the first time Friday to discuss the two conference questions, ended their discussions yesterday during afternoon meetings. They presented their reports at the dinner.

Graham Memorial Week Gets Underway Monday

"We would like to urge all students to bring two things—a blanket and a date—and we'll furnish everything else," said a Graham Memorial Activities Board member yesterday concerning the blanket party to be given tomorrow night by Graham Memorial.

The party, which will be held on the lawn in front of the student union building beginning at 8 p.m., is the first in a round of festivities in celebration of Graham Memorial's 23rd birthday.

The birthday events, which have been planned for students by Graham Memorial and the Activities Board, will continue throughout the week.

Monday's party will feature a "red hot" Negro combo playing Dixieland jazz. The combo will begin playing at 8 o'clock.

Graham Memorial will also provide refreshments for the party.

The Student Union building will hold open house tomorrow night from 8 until 11 o'clock.

"Birthday Week" celebrations will continue Tuesday when Gordon Gray, president of the Consolidated University, speaks to students in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial on "The University and Its Responsibilities." His address will be followed by an informal discussion period and a reception.

"Harvey," a movie starring James Stewart and Peggy Dow, will be shown for students by GM tomorrow night at 9 o'clock in Gerrard Hall, free of charge.

Petite Musicale

The Petite Musicale originally scheduled for tonight has been postponed, according to a statement made by a Graham Memorial spokesman yesterday.

Richard Cox, tenor soloist, was to have been the performer for tonight's program.

Symphony Schedules 3 Concerts

Supported by three soloists, the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts in Memorial Hall this season.

On Monday, the full symphony orchestra of 65 members will give a free children's concert at 2 p.m. and an adult program at 8:30 p.m. On May 6, the symphony will present a second adult program at 8:30 p.m.

Membership in the North Carolina Symphony Society entitles one to attend any and all adult concerts of the orchestra without extra charge. Memberships may be secured from Tom Stanback, at 214 Carroll Hall. Single memberships are $3, joint memberships are $5 and student memberships $1. Student membership tickets are available today at the Y from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Adult Symphony Society members will be admitted to the children's concert for $1, upon presentation of their membership card.

Appearing as soloist for the children's concert will be Miss Vivian Morrison, bagpiper and sword dancer, who holds more than 70 championship medals for her attainments. At the Monday evening concert, Miss Caroline Taylor, pianist of New York and Wadesboro, will play.

WHENEVER DEMANDS ARE MADE:

A 'Community Of Purpose' Is Essential

(Editor's note: The following address was delivered Friday by Dr. C. Hugh Holman, chairman of the College of Arts and Sciences. Titled "A Tradition of Learning," the speech was delivered to the second All-Campus Conference, a meeting designed to promote student-faculty relations and to study problem areas within the University. Only one-third of the speech is printed here. The other two-thirds, devoted to "What the University can expect of its students," and "What the students can expect of their University," will follow in successive issues.)

By DR. C. HUGH HOLMAN

I feel greatly honored to be asked to make the speech that opens this second All-Campus Conference of students and teachers at Chapel Hill, for I believe that the divine—and sometimes diabolical — discontent with the state of things as they are, the often inarticulate groping toward better understanding, better methods and better objectives, and the impatience with the status quo out of which conferences such as this grow are signs of health and omens of promise. I don't expect that these two days of what I think of as "channeled argument" are likely to result in a sizeable group of mutually acceptable answers.

In fact, I should be highly suspicious of any very formidable number of answers that are mutually acceptable to this group, for I fear that they would be not really answers but almost meaningless compromises. Yet there is merit in defining the questions that tease us into thought and action, and I hope that out of this meeting of minds and points of view, we the very old and you the very young, however much we may differ about the answers, can find some commonly shared concerns in terms of the questions which we pose to each other and to life.

I am pleased, too, that I have been asked to talk to you on the question: What should the University expect of its students and what should its students expect of the University? I am taking the question to deal, not with a simple student-teacher dichotomy, but with the larger and infinitely more complex relationshp of a total institution to its component parts. Another question immediately raises itself: What is a university? Among the many answers that I have heard, the one that seems to me best is that a university is a community of scholars. Let us examine that definition more closely, turning for help to a useful though often neglected book, the Dictionary. Community, we find there, is "A social group of any size whose members reside in a specific locality, share government, and have a cultural and historical heritage."

Certainly those phrases describe the agglomeration of buildings and books; teachers and learners; constitutions, academic, faculty and student; fraternities, rituals, activities and conventions which over the years have converted the soil and trees and air around the poplar tree beneath which General Davie dreamed into an intangible but very real atmosphere, purpose and place of mind and spirit. We are a community, a community with a proud cultural and historical heritage.

WHAT'S A SCHOLAR?

But let us move on to that grandiose and embarrassing word, Scholar. Here the latitudinarian tolerance of the Dictionary is very helpful, for it offers us five meanings, each of which applies. Scholar means, in one sense, simply "One who attends a school." That certainly applies; it has always applied to most of us, and under the new absence regulations it applies painfully to everybody! A second meaning is "A student," and we have a reasonable number to whom that august word can be appropriately applied. A third definition tells us that a scholar is "A student who holds a . . . scholarship," and we are triumphantly possessed of an intercollegiate athletic program. Next the Dictionary informs us that a scholar is "One who has engaged in advanced study and asquired knowledge in some special field." We have now included the faculty. Finally, a scholar is simply "A literate person; specifically, one who can read and write." And with that we have established an admissions policy — although, alas! one too high for all our students to be able to meet it. Yes, this University is a community of scholars.

If we approach the question with which this conference is primarily concerned in the light of such an idea of a university—an idea that it is a place dedicated to learning—we soon find ourselves making a searching scrutiny of a few sacred cows.

Oen is the old and easy teacher-student dichotomy. Certainly it cannot be erased; in fact, Jacques Barzun is probably right in insisting that it is friction between teacher and student that makes the academic wheels go round. Yet the sharp division is lessened when we see ourselves as engaged in a common task and as partners in a community of effort. A second sacred cow is the power and importance of administration. When we look back into the 10th and 11th century beginnings of modern universities, we find that the basic pattern of some of the first was student organization, as it was at Bologna in the 11th century, or faculty organization, such as the guidelike corporation of the masters at Paris in the 12th century.

Administration developed very late and as servant to the polar necessities of the university, the students and the faculty. It is an essential structure for so complex a community as the modern university has become, but its worth is exclusively in terms of its service to the others and not of itself. What I am suggesting is that all these elements—faculty, students, administration and the community which they comprise—have meaning only in terms of a common objective.

THE OBJECTIVE

That objective is partly, as Clarence Faust put it, "To make sure that we . . . reflect hard enough and profitable enough about the whole range of human experience and thought." It is partly to preserve, enrich and transmit the

A New Player, We Hope

Among those who have held to the idea that educational television should be educational, the idea lingers that WUNC-TV has more flickered than shone during its lengthening weeks of life.

The station has had its trouble, amounting often to aches and pains. From the start division in the higher echelons kept the station's policy off even keel. The educational emphasis (which we have been led to assume by the name of the enterprise) has been threatened continuously by those high up in the station's administration who want to compete with private commercial stations.

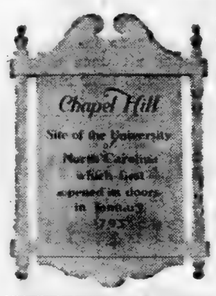
Against this dim and dull cyclorama of division and disappointment—splashed, in all fairness, with some few highlights here and there—something new seems to be marching downstage.

The best indication, if we have detacted one, of the emergence of new policy, is the announcement that a panel of four professors will discuss Walter Lippmann's The Public Philosophy over the station's hookup tomorrow night. Mr. Lippmann's book has aroused both resounding affirmation and dissent: and whether one agrees or disagrees with its essential thesis, it is a significant book and well deserves scrutiny over the video waves.

But easily the most heartening part of the emerging trend is the knowledge that four University professors—Doctors Heard, Godfrey, Poteat, and Colonel Orr—will make up the round table. Professors were little consulted while the station went up and were later expected to volunteer their services when they had been given no appreciable voice in its origins.

Let us hope that the new character passing from the shadow of the cyclorama is not merely another poor player, struggling and fretting and signifying nothing. For perhaps a new and vigorous policy has appeared on the scene and Chancellor House's recently-told belief that "the public will find we're indispensable" is being backed by action.

Gracious Living—3 (Second Series)



Gracious Living in Chapel Hill has been dealt a primative blow in its most graceful spot—the Arboretum.

Almost daily, the herds of school children, grunting and squealing like our aboriginal progenitors, swing from the limbs of Arboretum trees. The pint-sized visitors, apparently not content with the wonders of the Old Well and the Planetarium, invariably flock to nature's haunt to play junior caveman.

We know of no solution to this grave problem, except perhaps the eventual change that comes to every young caveman when he passes from childhood to adolescence, from swinging in trees to pulling pigtails.

Bewitched, Bothered, And Bemildewed

J. A. C. Dunn

RUEBEN LEONARD'S "Y-COURT Corner" yesterday was, to say the least, a bit disappointing. We were not disappointed because of what was said in the column; what we found disl column; what we found disen throughout.

Mr. Leonard, in the course of nine paragraphs, managed to throw a considerable rather stale mud at a wide variety of targets ranging from the Student Legislature, through the Carolina Forum and two campus leaders, all the way to the recent panty raid. Now mudslinging is not a sin; some occasions demand it. Mark Antony pitched some pretty tidy clods, as one can see if one reads Shawespeare. But Antony did not call people four letter names, he called them nice names with a slightly unorthodox twist.

Mr. Leonard does not take the trouble to be gentle. He just gets himself a soapbox and screams.

SCREAMING IS OLD, mildewed. When people hear it they know they have heard it before and, what is more, most screaming does not stir up pleasant reminiscences. There is no need to be bitter, Mr. Leonard. There is no need to put one's tongue in one's cheek so far that it sticks out the other side; it is not necessary to call people names; there is no call to make underhanded allusions to the alleged practices of a very recently elected (and rather important) official; energy is wasted in slamming at the Legislature's money-handling.

You perhaps will say, Mr. Leonard, in reply, that you recall our own column of last Tuesday in which we were rather cavalier with certain legislators' opinions, and that in view of our words there we are here being just a tiny bit hypocritical. If we still believed in the need for our having said then what we did, you would be right; but we seem to have found out differently. People have come to us, tapped us reproachfully on the shoulder and said, "Now look, pal; how about the other side?" They were not too far from wrong.

IT IS INTERESTING to note that on the same day Mr. Leonard published his acid-ridden condemnation of everyone in general a sizeable number of students from all over the region sat in the neat meetings and took the trouble to investigate the countless problems that arise concomitantly with the operation of student government. We recieved the impression from Mr. Leonard's column that he thinks legislators are stupid; that they sit around being wheels and big noises and accomplish nothing; that they are a courteous collection of false fronts. We are sure Mr. Leanord does not actually think this, since he was once a legislator himself, and a floor leader at that, but unforunately that impression is created.

However, it was remarked to us quite soon after we published our own rather harsh slap at student government that there exists in the institution an astonishingly large amount of sincerity. Those people who meet on Thursday nights really believe that what they are doing can result in something good, whether or not it actually does. Very often nothing comes of their efforts, but sometimes there are commendable results.

Don't dammn a man for doing the wrong thing when he didn't want to, Mr. Leonard. It is pointless, because a man who has made a mistake he didn't mean to make is already mad at himself and will take criticism with a smile much sooner than with a snarl.

'How About Trying To Fix It Right Now?'

Hopes Brighten In The Straits

An Anglo-American agreement, which would involve abandoning the Chinese off-shore islands of Matsu and Quemoy, is now a growing possibility. Indeed, such an agreement is probable rather than possible, if only the Chinese Communists hold off from attacking Quemoy and Matsu for a few more weeks.

The general shape of the deal which seems to be in the making is simple enough. The United States would put all possible pressure on Chiang Kai-shek to evacuate the islands, meanwhile making it clear that American forces would not defend the islands in case of attack. In return, the British would make some sort of commitment — short of a permanent guarantee to the present Chinese Nationalist regime — to take part in the defense of Formosa in case of an attack by the Communists.

The British would certainly be joined in such a pledge by Australia and New Zealand, probably by Canada, possibly by France and the NATO countries, conceivably by most of the non-Communist world. But the British commitment is the heart and soul of the proposed agreement, the essential ingredient.

The deal is by no means all buttoned up, of course. It is in what one of the interested parties has called "the floating around stage," which means carefully informal chats which commit no one. It seems to have reached this stage largely as a result of Adlai Stevenson's recent foreign policy speech. When Secretary Dulles accused Stevenson of plagiarizing his own ideas, the Washington diplomatic corps was surprised. But since then, the idea of an Anglo-American agreement to defend Formosa but not the off-shore islands, which was vaguely foreshadowed in the Stevenson speech, has been floating around much more visibly than before.

ALLIANCE PRESERVED

The advantages of this kind of arrangement with the British are obvious. The British alliance would be preserved, and at long last something like an Anglo-American united front in Asia created. At the same time, the Administration would be off the Quemoy-Matsu hook, and it is no secret at all that most Administration policy makers would give a great deal to be extricated from the off-short island dilemma.

To be sure, there might be trouble from the Knowland-Bridges faction in the Senate. But the Administration could argue with some justice that a British-Australian-New Zealand commitment to defend Formosa — which no one would have imagined possible six months ago — was worth far more to Chiang than the off-shore islands. As a straight political matter, indeed, most observers now agree that almost any "peaceful" statement of the Formosa crisis would be a big political net plus for the Administration—at least for the time being.

From the British viewpoint, the kind of deal outlined above would mean in effect adoption by this country of the "two Chinas" policy long advocated by the British — and a carefully qualified commitment to join in the defense of Formosa might not be too high a price to pay for this result. Even so, it would not be easy for the British to make such a commitment, however hedged about.

To be sure, the Eden government could present the agreement as a triumph of British diplomacy, pulling the impetuous Americans back from the brink of the abyss. But the "not a single Tommy for Chiang Kai-shek" line has been so successfully propagated in Britian that any British comitment of any sort to defend Formosa would be highly dangerous politically.

AGREEMENT AFTER ELECTIONS

For this reason, it is most unlikely that any agreement will be reached before the British elections of May 26. But if the Conservatives are triumphantly re-elected, an Anglo-American deal on Formosa will certainly be up for most serious consideration.

May 26 may be too late, of course — the Communists may attack before then. Or Chiang Kai-shek may flatly and openly refuse to be eased off the islands, in which case such an Anglo-American deal would look like a public invitation to the Communists to attack our Nationalist allies.

Yet it is a reasonably good bet all the same that the crisis of the off-shore islands will eventually be resolved in some such way as that outlined above. A cease fire in the Formosa Strait has all along been the central American objective. Originally it was hoped that the Chinese Communists would abandon their claim to Formosa, or at least make a public pledge not to attack Formosa, in return for getting Quemoy and Matsu without a fight.

This hope, unrealistic from the start, is now dead. The proposed Anglo-American deal would substitute a cease fire in the Formosa Straits, based not upon meaningless Communist promises, but on American power backed by British and commonwealth support. There is much to be said for this more realistic kind of cease fire. There is only one thing to be said against it — that, however much it may be dressed up, it represents one more retreat in Asia, and one more retreat may be one too many.

Einstein's Faith, Works

Raleigh News & Observer

A little bushy headed, pixie-looking, out-spoken man died in Princeton on Monday. And that little man, Albert Einstein, was not in phrases of praise but in bare statement of the facts "the man whose theories led to construction of the atom bomb and provided the basis for the television and electronic and other technological advances which have made the mid-Twentieth Century what it is." It would be possible without much exaggeration to say that no one who lived during his lifetime was so responsible for the changes in the world evident at the time of his death.

Hardly any man had been so much honored by the world he so greatly altered. He, of course, was a winner of the Nobel Prize. He had been given honorary degrees by the universities of Geneva, Oxford, Cambridge, Princeton, Paris, Madrid, Zurich, Harvard, London and Brussels. When he died, as an American citizen who had not been so much refugee from as a rejector of Hitler's Germany, he was a life member of the Institute for Arvanced Science at Princeton. Above all, however, he was a scientist who kept, through all his new discoveries in the universe, his faith in the paramount importance of th dignity of man.

„Let every man be respected as an individual and no man idolized," Albert Einstein said.

That was an enunciation more important to Einstein than any of the theories he formulated. And in the age of nuclear science it remains more important than ever. It is a blessing of that age that the great man who initiated it emphasized that the dignity of man is more important than any force set loose on his earth.

Presidential Memo

Tom Creasy

As I look on the past 12 months in Student Government I find it hard to believe that 12 months make a year. It seems impossible that the 1954-55 era of Student Government could already be over. It has had its difficulties and defeats along with its enjoyable moments and successes and as President of the Student Body this year my only hope is that I have been able to give half as much as I have gotten out of the job. I never spent a more enjoyable or more worthwhile year.

In looking at the successes that we have had this year however few or however many they have been. I am certain of one thing — they have been due to the very capable and conscientious people that I have had working with me in Student Government this year. I would like to name all these people and their outstanding contributions, but I could never get all of them into my allotted space.

I would like to thank not only the student leaders but the Student Body as a whole and the administration and faculty for their help and full cooperation this year. And my especial regard and respect goes to the 1954-55 Student Legislature, which could have made it very difficult for me, since the opposition party was in control, and thus cause student government to reach a stalemate; but instead they chose to work right along with me and to cooperate in every way possible. As a result they have given the Student Body one of their finest legislative programs.

Just three weeks ago you went to the polls again to elect your new officers They are all excellent people, qualified and very capable. Help them in every way possible, praise their successes and try to be tolerant of their failures. I wish all of them evry success and hope and feel sure that they will give the University the best year that she has ever had in Student Government.

Panty-Raiders & Subversives

EDITORS:

What kind of policy is it to prosecute pranksters and defend those guilty of treason?

I want to know what the hell is going on through the minds of our so-called administration and editors of the DTH. They dents nee dto be taken in hand. need to be taken in hand. — not the poor misguided students. students to be arraigned by the police for a boyish prank, and who are no more guilty than the other 2000 boys who took part in the raid which was just blowing off steam. No one is really guilty of any harm, and no violence or destruction was done. At the same time, two of our noble, liberal-minded professors go to Greensboro to defend in court a known subversive communist leader who is trying to overthrow our government. This fellow Scales should be hung, and poor misguided professors who helped such people, get out so light are unknowingly undermining our government and is making a larger smear on our university than that of a boyish prank Yet the administration sits by and does nothing about this more serious issue and the DTH, in its editorials, commends the like of patriotism shown by the enlightened professors.

All this will just create a nice shelter for othcr eommunist to come here — even after one cell has been broken. For they too can hide behind the skirts of the so-called benevolent liberalism which is advocated. If it takes this kind of irresponsible policy to raise the standard of education in this school, I would rather do without it and see our standard hit rock bottom. The tax payers of N. C. should demand that the apropriations should be cut for the budget of UNC if the school allows such a policy to prevail. Compared to sheltering communism here, a panty-raid is nothing. I do not question their right to their opinion, but they are guilty of using very poor and illogical judgment on issues in general.

Over The Hill

Charles Dunn

REDS: For the past several days, the Tar Heel and other papers throughout the state and even the nation have been carrying page one stories of the trial of former University student and former resident of near-by Carrboro Junius Scales, who for years has been known as a leader of the Communist party in this area.

Even more local interest in the case developed this week when Carolina student Charlie Childs appeared as a witness and related his experiences as a Communist for the F.B.I. And of course, the appearance at the trial of several professors and townspeople has had its share of discussions on campus.

All of this has started some students wondering. After all, when you go to bed at night, you never know whether your roomie is sleeping or watching you. And if you know he is watching you, you don't know whether he is wishing that the revolution would hurry and come so that he can curb your capitalistic ways, or waiting for you, in a forgetful moment, to utter some statement favoring the violent overthrow of the government or your local draft board so that he can turn you over to the authorities.

BITS OF WIT: There are many little sayings floating around campus as offerings of the Scales trial. One of them is the old "if they took the F.B.I. out of the Communist party it would fold up." Another is: "I'm an F.B.I. man for the Communists."

And then of course there is the letter home: "Dear Folks . . . everybody up here was surprised to hear about the Communists as you-all were. Really."

SIGN OF THE TIME: In a recent issue of The New Yorker there was a cartoon showing a young man in a haberdashery trying on a sport coat and a pair of walking shorts. Near by his mother was sitting, with tears in her eyes, and saying something on the order of "I just can't help it. They are his first pair of short pants."

REASONS: A petite coed from the far western part of the state was trying to help a way-behind fellow catch up on some of his studies. Between her very southern accent and her special code for marking her notes, the fellow was getting nowhere, but fast. With a laugh, he complained. The coed leaned back in her chair, smiled and said, "Well, that's just what my Mom and dad sent me up here to go to school for, anyhow: to learn how to write so as it could be read, and to learn how to talk so as they could understand me, they did."

POINT: Several years ago, according to a professor, a Negro man left his wife in Chapel Hill and went north to find work. The man was forced to stay longer than he expected, and, even though he wrote letters, his wife became a little worried after several years. He assured her he was true to her by writing: "No woman wants nothing but your money, and I wants that for myself."

WONDERING: Why calls for a "Panty raid" meet with such little response since Tuesday night?

IDEA: It has been suggested that for the sake of being original that the name of this column be changed from "Over the Hill' to simply "AWOL."

A Poem

By Ron Levin

The Island Of No One

Untasted ides now swirling in the idea ebb of vernal tides with subtle hints of slimming nights and images . . . the sacred rites of milling ghost gathered there of moon washed sand, the naked shore, and lathered in a thousand frenzies to excite ten milion more.

No stale man smells are present here ingrained within the passive dunes but only memories of sheer white feathered pipers' fleeting tunes along the waves edge . . . screaming fear of being found one fatal noon.

A Letter From Three Carpetbaggers

Dear Editors:

This small piece of praise will probably be received amid a storm of protest concerning Mr. Rueben Leonard's "Y-Court Corner" of April 23. However, we could not let such an article go by without proclaiming, "Halleluia—a columnist with guts." Mr. Leonard's cynical quips concerning various BMOCs and organizations of doubtful value, while decidedly biased in spots, is, nevertheless, a healthy addition to The Daily Tar Heel. We would like to commend Mr. Leonard for his good work and hope he will keep it up.

Carolina's Varsity golfers will tour a strange course for the first time this season Monday when they engage Maryland and Virginia in a triangular meet at Charlottesville, Va.

The Tar Heel golfers have topped Maryland once this season 15-3.

Frosh Battle Hargrove Here

Hargrove Military Academy's baseball team invades Chapel Hill Monday afternoon to take on the Tar Babies. The game is slated for three o'clock on Emerson Field.

The Tar Babies own a 1-3 record on the season so far.

Duke Guilty Of Seven Errors In Loss To USC

DURHAM, Apr. 23—South Carolina took advantage of seven Duke fielding errors here today to gain an 11-5 ACC baseball victory.

Only two of the Gamecock's runs were earned. Frank Ellerbe had three hits in four trips to pace the USC offense.

Triple Play By Clemson Stifles Rally In 7th

By BUZZ MERRITT

Aided by a triple play that squelched a Tar Heel rally in the seventh inning, the Clemson Tigers gained a 4-3 Atlantic Coast Conference baseball victory over North Carolina at Emerson Field yesterday.

For the fourth time this season, the Tar Heels were defeated by one run as Tiger pitcher George Compton bore down after a rough first inning and shut out the Tar Heels the rest of the way.

It was the Tar Heels' fifth loss in ACC play against a pair of victories.

With the score 4-3 in the home half of the second the Tar Heels posed their most serious threat after the first inning as Al Long took first on an error and pinch-hitter Chuck Hartman's attempted sacrifice went for a base hit. Kenny Keller, pinch-hitting for pitcher Billy Joe Johnson, attempted to move the runners up, but Compton snagged his bunt on the fly, tossed to second to get Long and the relay to first was in time to catch Hartman and end the embryo rally with the first triple at Emerson this season.

The Tar Hels had taken an early lead as Tom Zachary singled and Connie Gravitte doubled in the first with one out. Will Frye blasted a long triple to the hedge in left-center for two runs and scored himself on an error.

Compton banged the door closed after that however, and the Tar Heels only managed to get one man past second base the rest of the way. The Clemson righthander fanned eight and gave up only three hits over the rest of the route.

Meanwhile the Tigers were pecking away at starter Morris Hall. They picked up one in the fourth and drove Hall from the box with three in the sixth. Johnson came on and put out the fire, but the Tigers, behind Compton's tight work, had all the runs they needed.

Gravitte put a single with his first inning double to be the only Carolina batter with more than one hit. Jim O'Quinn and Roger Gaines had two for the winners.

Final Plans Released For Intramural Track

Final plans and entries for the annual Intramural Track meet set April 29 were announced today by the UNC Intramural Office.

The outdoor event will start at four o'clock Friday afternoon. Competition is scheduled in six events in both the dormitory and fraternity divisions.

The first event will be the sixty-yard dash heats. The time schedule is as follows: 4:00, 60-yd. dash heats; 4:15, 880 relay finals; 4:30, 100-yd. dash heats; 4:50, ¾ mile run finals; 5:00, 220-yd. dash heats; 5:15, 60-yd. dash finals; 5:25, 440-relay finals; 5:40, 100-yd. dash finals; 5:50, 220-yard dash finals.

In field events, the pole vault, high jump and shot put will start at four o'clock and the broad jump and discus at five.

Points will be awarded on a 5-3-2-1 basis for both track and field events. No spiked or indoor track shoes will be allowed.

To qualify for the pole vault, a contestant must hit 8'6" or better. High jump entries must reach 5' 3" or better in order to qualify for the finals.

In the heat races, two men will qualify for the finals in each heat. Four places will be scored in the finals. Three heats are slated in the fraternity division of the sixty, 100, and 220 yard dashes. There are no heats scheduled in the dormitory division.

Tar Heel Netters Drub Wake For 27th In Row

Wake Forest, Apr. 23 — North Carolina's torrid tennis team racked up its fifteenth win of the season without a loss here today by drubbing Wake Forest 8-1. Only Bill Jones of Wake Forest was able to score for the Deacs. The Tar Heels swept five of six singles matches and all three doubles in getting the victory.

The Tar Heels now own a win streak of 27 straight matches that reaches back into last year.

Vic Raschi Gets Gate

ST. LOUIS, April 23 (AP)—The St. Louis Cardinals today ended a costly experiment by giving veteran pitcher Vic Raschi his unconditional release.

No other club in the major leagues was willing to take over Raschi's $33,000 salary, and all waived on the 36-year-old righthander, a standout performer with the New York Yankees for many years.

Raschi, bothered by an ailing back this spring, now becomes a free agent and may make a deal with any club he chooses.

The Cardinals paid the Yankees a reported $85,000 for Raschi in a surprise deal only 14 months ago and signed him at $40,000.

He started out strong, winning his first five games for the Cardinals, then faded and wound up with eight victories and nine defeats for the year. In his only assignment this season, Raschi was blasted hard by the Cincinnati Redlegs last Monday night and lasted less than two innings.

The Cardinals asked for waivers on him the next day, Manager Eddie Stanky saying he was staking Cardinal chances this year on younger pitchers.

Raschi accepted the announcement in good spirit, said he felt he was in good physical condition and was "ready to go" if any club claimed him.

Under baseball rules, the Cardinals will pay Raschi for 30 days of his 1955 contract, or about $5,928. This brings the cost to the Cardinals to a total of about $131,000 for Raschi's 14 months with the club. Or, disregarding his nine losses last season, his eight Cardinal victories cost the club more than $16,000 each.

The six-foot-one pitcher won 120 games and lost only 50 in his period with the Yankees from 1947 through 1953. He saw service in six World Series, winning five and losing three games.

He was a 21-game winner for the Yankees for three consecutive seasons, 1949 through 1951.

Raschi was at his home in Conesus, N. Y., when he got the word today that no major league club wanted him at $1 plus the cost of his $33,000 salary.

Santee Again Misses Mark

LAWRENCE, Kan., April 23 (AP) — Wes Santee of Kansas failed again today in his quest for the 4-minute mile but managed to defend his Glenn Cunningham Mile title in the Kansas Relays with a 4:11.4 on a muddy track and stiff crosswinds that made record running out of the question.

Santee, who set a new American record of 4:00.5 in the Texas Relays April 2, had his pace-setters following everything but the time script. Dick Wilson of Kansas hit the first quarter in 60.6 with Art Dalzell, also of Kansas, second and Santee third.

Wilson dropped out of the race after a 2:06.3 half mile and Santee took over. He reached the three-quarter mark in 3:08.6 and widened his lead to win by about 50 yards over Ted Wheeler, of Leonard Wood, Mo.

The race was run in breezy cross winds with gusts up to 14 miles an hour. The sun broke through rain clouds brightly minutes before the race started. An estimated 13,000 fans, who cheered wildly as Santee ran under unfavorable conditions, had been well watered by showers in earlier. events.

BREAKS OWN RECORD

Carolina's Roger Morris broke his own UNC record when he collected a first against Maryland on April 16 with a toss of 51 feet, three and one-half inches in the shot put event.

Tar Heel Harriers Top USC To Gain Fifth Straight Win

By RAY LINKER

North Carolina's track team ran its victory string to five by downing South Carolina, 81½-49½, here yesterday.

The win was somewhat of a comback for the Tar Heels, who were behind after three events but who tied the score twice before going ahead for good after seven events. North Carolina swept the low hurdles and the two-mile run and won the mile relay in taking the last 23 points of the meet to sew up the win.

UNC's Richard Waters, previously hampered by injuries, soard over the pole vault bar at 13 feet three inches to establish a new North Carolina record and erase G. R. House's mark of 13 feet one-half inch set in 1950. Tar Heel Charlie Yarborough cleared 13 feet in taking second. Yarborough also won the broad jump, with a leap of 22 feet nine and three-fourths inches.

The surpirse of the day came when UNC's mile relay team of Bill Booth, Don Wright, Richard McFaddin, and Boyd Newnam, won its first race of the season in 3:23.6.

Roger Morris of North Carolina and Tommy Woodll Woodlee of South Carolina were the high scorers of the meet with two first each for 10 points apiece. Yarborough, Jim Beatty, and Claude Rhule added eight points to the winning cause.

Morris won both the shot and discus for the fourth straight time in four outings this season while Woodlee was turning in times of 9.9 and 21.7 in the 100 and 220-yard dashes, respectively.

Beattty won the mile in 4:29.6 and took second behind team mate Boyd Newnam in the 880 in getting his eight markers, while Rhule gathered in his points by winning the low hurdles and taking second in the high hurdles to mate Charlie Scott, who had six points.

Bob Wilson collected six and one-half points for the Tar Heels by placing in three events. He tied with UNC's Ken Bryant and two Gamecocks for first in the high jump, took second in the low hurdles, and placed third in the javelin.

North Carolina garnered 11 firsts, eight seconds, and six third places in winning its eighth dual meet over a two year span.

Newnam's 1:54.7 880-yard run was the best he has ever recorded, and with his 1¼ points for anchoring the relay team to victory, he finished the day with 6¼ points.

Sonny Wilcher took one of South Carolina's four first places by turning in a 50.2 time in the 440-yard run.

In setting the new record in the pole vault, Waters cleared the bar by some three inches on his second jump. Yarborough failed to clear the bar in his three jumps and so had to settle for a 13-foot for the second time this year.

Free Booklet Tells How You Can Read Better, Faster, Easier

CHICAGO (Special)—Now every student can learn to zip through reading assignments quickly and easily, actually read difficult study material twice as fast with complete understanding. The secret is an amazingnew simple technique, developed by Steven Warren of Chicago's famed Foundation for Better Reading.

Although most students are slow word-by-word readers, this new proven method helps anyone pick up speed, says the noted educator. Poor reading habits can cost you too much study time, make exams harder, cause disappointing grades, and keep you from essential social activities.

To acquaint student readers of this paper with this miraculous new technique for better reading, full details are described in a fascinating booklet, "How You Can Read Better, Faster, Easier." It will be mailed free to anyone who requests it. No obligation. Address: Mr. Steven Warren, President, Dept. 3044, Foundation for Better Reading, 20 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.

Why do more college men and women smoke VICEROYS than any other filter cigarette?

BECAUSE ONLY VICEROY GIVES YOU A PURE, NON-MINERAL, NON-TOXIC FILTER WITH 20,000 FILTER TRAPS IN EVERY FILTER TIP!

1. Yes, only Viceroy has this filter composed of 20,000 tiny filter traps. You cannot obtain the same filtering action in any other cigarette.
2. Besides being non-mineral and non-toxic, this cellulose-acetate filter never shreds or crumbles.
3. The Viceroy filter wasn't just whipped up and rushed to market to meet the new and skyrocketing demand for filtered cigarettes. Viceroy pioneered. Started research more than 20 years ago to create the pure and perfect filter.
4. Smokers en masse report that filtered Viceroys have a finer flavor even than cigarettes without filters. Rich, satisfying, yet pleasantly mild.
5. Viceroy draws so easily that you wouldn't know, without looking, that it even had a filter tip . . . and Viceroys cost only a penny or two more than cigarettes without filters!

That's why more college men and women smoke VICEROYS than any other filter cigarette . . . that's why VICEROY is the largest-selling filter cigarette in the world!

Dr. Kidder, President Gray Set For Talks During Leadership Training Program Here

Annual Meet To End With Leader Banquet

The Hit Parade of Effective Leadership, this year's leadership training program, will be held Tuesday and Wednesday.

The program will include speeches by Dr. Maurice Kidder of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Family here, and Gordon Gray, president of the Consolidated University, and also small group meetings and discussions.

Following is the agenda for the two-day program, which is put on for all women students by the Leadership Training Council.

PRESIDENT GRAY
. . . speaks Wednesday

To remind all girls of the training program, records will be slipped under the doors tomorrow night which will carry out the the musical theme of the program.

The first meeting will be a mass meeting of women student entitled "This Is YOUR Hit Parade." It will meet in the Library Assembly Room at 4 p.m. Tuesday. Dr. Maurice A. Kidder will speak on leadership.

At the first meeting, the new Leadership Council will be introduced. The members are Miss Mary Gillespie, chairman of the Panhellic Council; Miss Sue Fink, chairman of the Women's Residence Council; Miss Sally Folger, president of the YWCA; Miss Joan Purser, chairman of the Women's Honor Council; Miss Laura Travis, president of the Women's Athletic Association, and Miss Sara Alice Jackson, chairman of women's orientation.

Following the mass meeting, "Jam Sessions," small group discussions will be held. These groups will be composed of girls according to the offices they hold.

The groups and their leaders are as follows: dormitory presidents, Misses Joy Carter and Louise Caffey; sorority presidents and vice-presidents, Misses Carol DuPler and Sue East; house managers and dorm vice-presidents, Misses Nancy Whisnant and Bebe Bauman; house councils, Misses Debbie Wescott and Betsy Goodwin; recording secretaries, Misses Carol Webster and Ann Shannonhouse; corresponding secretaries and social chairman, Misses Carol Nation and Mrs. Barns; treasurers, Miss Kendrick Townsend and Manning Muntzing, and committee chairmen and members, Misses Sonia Bergen and Bev Blemker.

The group discussions will center around the topic of training for positions.

"Point of Order" is the title for the mass meeting of the program's second day. It will be held in the Library Assembly Room at 4 p.m. Wednesday. A skit on parlimentary procedure will be presented by Miss Babbie Dilorio and Lewis Baumfield, which will be followed by the introduction of the men leaders on campus.

Following the second mass meeting will be small group meetings. They will go under the title of "What It Was, Was Leadership." The discussion in these meetings will center around leaders and pseudo-leaders.

The two-day program will be wound up by the student government banquet. All junior and senior girls may attend the dinner, which is to be held at 6:30 Wednesday in Lenoir Hall. The title of the banquet is "Our Best To You." President Gordon Gray will speak to the group.

an education and if he wants it badly enough he will "swallow" the regulations of the University.

Other suggestions made by this group were that Dean Weaver do something about the room problem, the system of obtaining class excuses be improved on, and that students should not be limited in electives, but should listen to advice as to what would be most helpful to them.

products of that reflection from ages past. It is partly, as President Dickey of Dartmouth recently said, to nurture "those intuitive insights which both produce and spring from goodness in man."

In a way peculiar to living organisms, a unversity is a sensitive corporate and shared responsibility. Whatever the University may justly demand of its students must be demanded in terms of that community of purpose. Whatever the students may justly demand of the University must be demanded in terms of that same community of purpose.

Whatever demands we may make of each other, whether they grow from idealism, frustration, will-to-power or love of individual rights, which are not harmoniously attuned to that basic purpose are demands intemperately made and unwisely pursued.

That purpose has perhaps never been more effectively and inclusively expressed than in the statement of John Milton's, "I call a complete and generous education that which fits a man to perform justly, skillfully and magnanicously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and war."

What Goes On Here

Students wishing work this summer in measuring the acreage of all tobacco, cotton and peanuts in North Carolina should arrange to attend a meeting to be held at 211 Gardner Hall at 3 p.m. Wednesday. A representative of the state ASC Office will be present.

The rate of pay will be on an acreage basis with a minimum farm rate for farms with a small acreage.

Environment—Cancer Link Studied Here

Future studies on the relation of lung cancer to smoking will probably confirm further the excessive risk among cigarette smokers, as compared to cigar and pipe users, but may also place more blame on environmental agents from urbanization and certain occupations.

This prediction on lung cancer study was given by William Haenszel of the National Cancer Institute, speaking here last weekend before a meeting of statisticians from the eastern United States and Canada.

Haenszel and other authorities spoke at a special cancer-smoking symposium, co-sponsored by the UNC School of Public Health, which served as a joint session of the Institute of Mathematical Statistics and the Biometric Society.

FOR DISTURBING WOMEN STUDENTS:

Nine Students Go On Trial For Participating In 'Raid'

Nine UNC students will go on trial in local Recorder's Court today for unlawfully and wilfully disturbing women students.

The students, all men, were picked up by Chapel Hill police during a panty raid April 19. They will go on trial sometime today. Recorder's Court opens at 10 a.m. No definite time is set for the students' trials.

After civil trial, the students are expected to be tried by University honor courts.

They are H. H. Murray, Raleigh; Edward C. Ross, Augusta, Ga., George T. Eanes, Thomasville; Robert D. Lynch, Raleigh; Donald Strayhorn, Wilmington Joseph E. Bartholomew, Raleigh; Grady L. Wells, Charlotte; William C. Latham, Bethel, and Bob Brame, North Wilkesboro.

'Wasn't Doing Anything'

"I wasn't doing anything," said Grady Wells, one of the nine students who were picked up by the police during the panty raid April 19.

According to Wells, junior from Charlotte, he and a friend had been out at the Patio driving range on the night of the raid until "about quarter until 12." They drove in, said Wells, arriving on the campus about 11:55 p.m.

After they parked the car, said Wells, "I was crossing the street from Carr Dormitory to Old East, and I wasn't doing anything. A policeman came up to me from behind and asked me if I was a student." Wells said the officer then asked him for his identification card and kept it. When he asked the

Amendments To SP By-Laws Are Discussed

By ED MYERS

Proposed amendments to the Student Party By-Laws were discussed last night at the first SP meeting since the spring elections.

Amid the discussion was heard utterances of "the next election."

Two major admendments approved in last night's meeting concerned party membership and qualifications for voting for campus-wide office nominations. The reason for those particular changes, according to Don Geiger, chairman of the party, "is to prevent future 'packing of the party meetings'."

If the proposed changes in SP by-laws again meets approval of the party next week they will then go into effect.

Another change concerned the Advisory Board, making it "responsible for necessary recommendations relating to the long-range plans of the party, the overall strategy of campaigns, the receiving and approving of committee reports, and general review of party activities."

"This," said Geiger, "will allow us to know exactly who is responsible if something does not get done."

Geiger presided from behind a desk on which was placed the quotation from Psalms,"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Criticizing the University Party leaders of the past few years for their statements of politics being a necessary evil, Geiger said, "Wherever we have free student elections there is bound to be politics, politicians, and politicing; however, it is ridiculous to state that they must necessarily be evil. They can be clean and constructive if that is the honest wish of those engaging in campus politics. I feel sure that if the time comes, when either I or any member of the SP feels our party to be evil that is the time when we shall get out of politics in student government.

Charles Wolfe, one of the older SP members present at last night's meeting said, "If we are going to attempt to run student government, we should first be able to run the Student Party."

Gray Speaks At 8 At GM Celebration

Gordon Gray, president of the Consolidated University, will speak to students tonight at 8 o'clock in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial.

Gray's speech is in conjunction with Graham Memorial's weeklong celebration of its 23rd birthday. His topic will be "The University and Its Responsibilities."

Following the talk, there will be an informal discussion period with President Gray and a reception.

At 9 o'clock tonight a free movie will be shown for students by Graham memorial in Gerrard Hall. The film will be "Harvey," starring James Stewart and Peggy Dow.

Jim McIntyre, assistant director of Graham Memorial, announced yesterday the postponement of the GM birthday blanket party scheduled for last night. McIntyre said unfavorable weather caused the postponement.

Sports Editor

Davis (Buzz) Merritt, Hickory, was appointed Daily Tar Heel sports editor yesterday, Editors Ed Yoder and Louis Kraar announced.

Merritt, who plans to major in journalism, replaces Bernie Weiss, who resigned the post due to academic difficulties. Merritt was sports editor of The Hickory Daily Record for two years.

Business Fraternity Visits Western N. C.

Forty-five members of Alpha Lambda chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, professional business fraternity, made a tour of industry in Western North Carolina during the past weekend.

Class-Free Day Today For Graduating Class

Senior Week shifts into full speed today with seniors enjoying a class free day, according to Rueben Leonard, publicity chairman. No excuses will be needed he added.

All seniors will attend a mass meeting at 10 a.m. in Memorial Hall, said Leonard, adding that at 10:30 the group will split into smaller groups and meet with deans of various schools.

The alumni committee, chaired by Bill Calvert, will have a table in Y-Court beginning today for the remainder of this week to sell memberships in the Alumni Asso. Annual memberships cost $1. Calvert urged everyone to become a member of the association in order to keep up with the happenings at Carolina after graduation, said Leonard.

PICNIC

Tomorrow a parade will form in front of Woolkn Gyn at 3 o'clock and travel to Hogan's Lake for the Senior Class Picnic. Free food, soft drinks and prizes will be in order. Music will be furnished by a combo.

Prizes to be given away are two steak and two chicken dinners at the Goody Shop, a shirt or blouse from Town & Campus, a shirt or blouse from Milton's and a gift certificate from Carolina Sport Shop. There will be six more prizes offered, but as yet they are unannounced, according to Leonard.

Thursday's entertainment will be in the form of "Satan's Saints," producted by Sound and Fury. Seniors may pick up their free tickets in Y- Court either tomorrow or Thursday. "Satan's Saints" is going to be given on both Thursday and Friday nights, but seniors will only be admitted free of charge to the Thursday night performance, said Leonard.

"On Friday 'Barefoot Day' will be observed will all the nature loving seniors living up to their northern cousins' belief that southerners don't wear shoes," said Leonard.

Senior Week will end Saturday night with an outdoor dance sponsored by Graham Memorial in honor of the graduating class.

Senior class officers are Charlie Yarborough, president; George McKinney, vice-president; Miss Donna Blair, treasurer; Miss Carol Butts, secretary, and Miss Barbara Stone, social chairman.

Committee chairmen are Herb Browne, gift; Rueben Leonard, publicity; Bill Calvert, alumni; Marty Jordan and Miss Barbara Stone, social, and Rollie Tillman, finance.

'CHAPEL HILL NEEDS A TRADITION OF STUDY'

What Does The University Ask Of Students?

(Editor's note: Following is second installment of a speech by Dr. C. Hugh Holman, chairman of the College of Arts and Sciences. The speech was delivered last week to the second annual All-Campus Conference, a meeting designed to promote student-faculty relations and to study problem areas within the University. The first section of Dr. Holman's speech, titled "A 'Community of Purpose' Is Essential," appeared in Sunday's issue. The third and final installment, titled "What the Student Expects of His University," will appear tomorrow.)

By DR. C. HUGH HOLMAN

. . . I am not here attempting to assert that what the University demands of its students and what its students demand of the University are the same, or even that there are no conflicts among their differing demands.

Again I am reminded of one of President Dickey's apt remarks, "The focus of that total experience which we call 'going to college' is the day-to-day relationship between the undergraduate as a person and the college as an institutional embodiment of other people's purposes." That sentence rather wittily puts the problem: How is the faculty to induce the individual student into an acquaintance with the meaning of learning when its outlines are but dimly seen by him? For, conversely, if every student brought to the task of being educated a mature concept of what education is then there would be no need to educate him. (That, incidentally, is why the faculty almost never consults the students on what constitutes a desirable curriculum.)

The University expects a great variety of things of its students, but I have selected for special mention this afternoon five that seem to me essential to the carrying-out of the common purpose which makes a university possible. They have peculiar relevance, it seems to me, for I think that they are expectations which are only partially being met by our students now.

They are: (1) The acceptance by the student of the status of learner, with a reasonable amount of that most difficult of virtues, humility; (2) A recognition that education concerns itself with a body of material and is more than a methodology; (3) A disciplined behavior appropriate to the dignity and purpose of the University and indicative of a true respect for it; (4) A willingness to respect in others and to cultivate in ourselves a love of learning; and, finally, a vigorous and defiant assertion of youth and enthusiasm and unreasoning idealism and hope.

ELABORATION

Let me elaborate on each of these.

The University has a group of programs of study the purpose of which is to insure that breadth and some acquaintance with several areas of learning are gained by every student. This aim is met by a pattern of required courses in the General College and by a pattern of distribution among the major subject, related subjects and other disciplines in the junior and senior year.

I certainly would not be willing to defend every item in the list of our requirements, but I would be willing to defend the idea which is behind that pattern of requirements. None of us would want any student to accept without protest or question the pattern we impose; yet I think we have the right to expect of our students that they have sufficiently broad a sympathy with the ideals of a distributed liberal education to be able to work with some harmony within the general pattern of our work.

In my opinion, one of the most disruptive influences at work in our student intellectual life is a mass attack, not on specific courses or requirements, upon the very idea of liberal education implied in the purposes of a university. This attack is launched both by the D average student who resents the foreign language requirement and by the Phi Beta Kappa French major who wants to take all his work in that subject.

In the second place, the University may reasonably expect its students to recognize that education concerns itself with bodies of material as well as methodologies. We have gone a long way toward the disregard of the fact as having value in itself. We are not too far from that evil day when we can declare that two plus two is equal to something like four or less than five, that a given force acting on a given mass will produce verying accelerations, that Shakespeare lived a long time ago, in the 15th or 16th or 17th century—or was it the 12th?

We have been led into a most undelectable mountain by the siren voice of the operationalists. We have been willing to surrender material, tradition and meaning to "know-how." And increasingly the students in the University are asking for an education that is instrumental, not valuable in itself. Now methodology is certainly not to be overlooked in education.

PROVINCIAL

You may rightly ask to be be taught how to think, how to study, how to read, how to figure, how to make plausible assumptions. But if you see education entirely in these terms, you become a provincial of the worst type — that is, a provincial of your own historical era.

Among the richest of the heritages which by being shared cements such a community as this this are the past experiences of man with his physical world, his mental world, his world of art and the imagination. That heritage exists, not as something to be comprehended nebulously or admired indefinitely, but as an exact, factual, often difficult body of information, the preservation, transmission and enrichment of which is primary to our educational purpose. The University has the right—nay, the duty—to ask that you its students recognize that you are here to learn a fairly specific group of facts and ideas, in order that you may build upon them rather than have to re-discover fragments of them for yourselves by methods taught in factual vacuums.

I suppose that I'm asserting again the unpalatable truth that not all learning is necessarily joyful and that hard work is a primary element in true scholarship.

The University demands a willingness on the part of the student to respect in others and to cultivate in himself a love of learning. Chapel Hill is rich with many traditions: the tradition of self-government, of student responsibility, of freedom of expression, of democratic equality and many others. These traditions are good. I should certainly not want to change or remove them.

Yet I have been painfully impressed for 10 years now with the fact that if a love of learning is a tradition here nobody wants to admit it. Everybody orients the student to these other traditions. Papers are written on them, and speeches are made about them. When is a feeble voice raised to assert that, along with these good things, the best thing, the thing that makes them possible, should also be admired? Very seldom indeed, I fear.

THE TORCH

Certainly not every student who comes to this university is a serious scholar or bears aloft the torch of learning. Students come here for many and varied reasons —very few, indeed, determined to "follow knowledge like a sinking star." Yet I think the University has the right to expect that its students respect a love of learning in others and attempt to cultivate it in themselves. The attitudes most frequently found here is as anti-intellectual as an African jungle or Hemingway's bullring. A community of scholars deserves to have a different atmosphere.

The University demands, too, a disciplined behavior appropriate to the dignity and purpose of the University and indicative of a true respect for it. I have not infrequently been shocked by the rudeness of our students. Between the stiff formality of a senseless protocol and the offensive laxness of disrespect, it is sometimes very hard for the young and inexperienced to walk with consistent aplomb, but I doubt that any faculty member has ever objected very much to the unconscious violations of his ideal code that perpetually occur on a University campus.

I am not asking for a special sacredness for the faculty member as a person. In fact, I am easily offended by the sense of "faculty dignity" which a few of my colleagues occasionally display. I am talking about such things as working crossword puzzles in class, eating breakfast during a 9 o'clock lecture, arriving 10 minutes late to a class, talking during classroom activities that require attention, assuming the posture of a dying fawn, greeting the normal procedure of instruction with an indifference bordering on contempt. All of these are activities engaged in by young men and women of fine family background, excellent social training and unimpeachable "manners," who will greet you on the campus or in the corridor with grace and dignity but somehow feel that the classroom gives them infinite license.

I do not think that this rudeness is very often the outgrowth of disrespect for teachers as people, although it sometimes is; but it is rather a manifestation of a lack of respect for the purposes of the University.

As you can see, we do grow old and gray, stiff of joint and unbending in thought, intolerant and stiff-necked. And because we do, the last of the demands which I have listed is that you, our students, keep us exercised if not supple. You bring to this campus every fall new stores of youth, of enthusiasm, of idealism, of hope, even of radicalism and intemperate dissent. And the University needs these things very much, for without them it grows cynical and pessimistic.

There was a time when a university did not need to ask for these qualities in its students; students; they were present in excessive degree. But ours is now a different world. It is not only the middle aged and the old who have grown conservative, but youth has also grown cautious and calculating. I think the University has the right to ask you not to be so.

You must be the gad-flies, the goads, the needles that prod us out of complacency, and the evangels of impossible hope that keep bright before us the eternal promise of youth. If I seem now to be arguing against what I have said before, it is but another of those paradoxes by which attempts to tell the truth tantalizingly veil themselves.

What I am really saying is that I believe that the University should demand of its students that they turn a greater portion of their best thought and efforts into channels of learning, that Chapel Hill needs a tradition of study added to the galaxy of its other noble objectives.

The Administration Is A Big Bad . . .

Two student government leaders raised their oratorical voices above the conversational exchange at the weekend's All-Campus Conference to verbally slap the University administration.

"The administration plans to take over student government," accused Manning Muntzing.

"The administration, in its desire to avoid trouble, has a tendency to maintain the status quo," opined David Reid.

The Daily Tar Heel does not believe that the administration plans to take over student government, despite Muntzing's ominous declaration. Nor do we feel that the administration strives for the status quo, merely to avoid trouble, as Reid would have us believe.

However, it is clear that the current lack of understanding between student leaders and the Dean of Student Affairs office resembles diplomatic relations between this country and Russia—not relations between two elements of the same University.

Student leaders and University administrators are equally at fault for letting the gap widen, for falling out of contact with each other. The administration has shown a tendency to become preoccupied with high-level affairs to the point of neglecting the student. And student government leaders have demonstrated a propensity to become so full of themselves and their own pet plans that they resent consultation with the administration.

Any automomy that student government enjoys has been granted by the the administration. And any administrative plan that is to be successful requires the cooperation of students. Thus, both students and administrators are nowhere without each other; neither group can succeed without cooperation from the other.

The Daily Tar Heel urges student leaders to splice the lines of student-administrative communication back together. We suggest a regular board of student leaders, Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver, and Dean of Student Activities Roy Holsten.

With such a group as this talking over problems, the present University civil war between students and administrators would begin to look like what it really is—a healthy scrimmage between two elements of the same squad.

The Scales Case

The conviction af alumnus Junius Scales at Greensboro holds so many signs and portents that they can be discussed, at best, only partially.

Scales will go to prison as an advocate of the violent overthrow of the United States government. Rightly or wrongly, that much is now settled. Anyone with fingers sensitive to the pulse of feeling on Communism could have told you as much when Scales was arrested last November in Memphis.

Liberals ought to be, and are, the most outspoken enemies of Marxism. Its gospel of state-supremacy, its insistence that "the safety of the revolution is the supreme law," are hot and intolerable winds in the face of a liberal. Before them, the Constitutional "unalienable rights" in which he so strongly believes would vanish in crisis like wisps of smoke.

Yet there is much in our current treatment of domestic Communists like Scales that gives the liberal hesitation. There are factors which run foul of his real allegiance on the purely ideological side and place him in enemy tents where he does not wish to be. One of these factors is his fear that the American people have lost their sense of relativity in the realm of values. The English, who have as much reason as we to fear Communism, let their domestic Communists agitate to their heart's content, right in Hyde Park. What difference in condition makes our own attitude other than that?

Another factor is the liberal's fear that opinion is being confused wtih act. We do not put people before the bar of justice in this country for their opinions alone; rather, it is requisite that clearly-catalogued laws against criminal violence must have been broken. Was the distinction made clear in the long, dreary course of the Scales Trial? Was Scales tried for opinion or for act?

A final factor, getting down this time to more specific instances, is the rapid rise of the paid informer as a star of American justice. The Scales trial ran over from day to day with witnesses who had gained their information through the back door and over the transom, whose graphic testimony to events was gained through a moral keyhole. We condemn evesdroping; we have openly fought the unAmeriacn device of wiretapping. Is there here a basic incongruity with that lofty fighting and condemnation?

Jacob Hay, who covered the trial for the Greensboro Daily News, sounds a note of pessimism in his post mortem column on the case:

> Nearly every man at the press table took a dim view of the government's professional and amateur informers. It's all very well to say that these people perform a valuable function; that they are saving us all from Russia; that somebody has to do the job. The point is, these informers just aren't a natural phenomenon in this country. They are, it seems to me, the symptom of a sickness.

We, too, thought the sickness of the system had been indicated by the ballerina-like twirling of Harvey Matusow. A failure of that proportion should suffice to put us on the alert about the reliability of paid witnesses.

Our system of justice is founded on the assumption of sincerity and innocence; that system must take grave jolts when insincerity and suspicion pit us against each other. Insincerity at the roots of anything breeds cynicism; and cynicism is about as good for a society as stray grains of sand for precision machinery.

The informers, says Mr. Hay in conclusion, "frighten me much, much more than Junius Scales and his chums."

They frighten us too.

ANOTHER OF THOSE mountains of exchange newspapers has come down upon us in an avalanche of battered newsprint. This is something that happens every so often, something we just have to face. However, the avalanche is not always unfruitful, to wit:

WEST VIRGINIA UNIVERSITY, in its newspaper, The Daily Athenaeum, printed on April 21 a baffling comment on UNC which we reprint here in its entirety for the benefit of those who may be in the know.

"The University of North Carolina campus now boasts a beach of imported sand. It's on the lawn, on the sidewalk, in the street and in various nooks and crannies of the terrain surrounding Joyner Dormitory.

"The founding fathers formulated a constitution to control use of the beach. Some provisions: no profanity uttered except at law enforcement officers or any other males who mumble, think or orate any cutting remarks; no spreading by University employees of 'horse, cow or elephant fertilizer' on the grounds of the beach; invitations will verbally expressed to females regardless of size shape or other qualifications."

We cannot honestly say we know what this means, but perhaps someone could enlighten us. What beach? Whose founding fathers, UNC's or Virginia's? Does that stuff under the bushes really come from elephants? And invitations will be expressed to females to do what, pray?

IF YOU THINK the normal routine of this University has been upset by the recent fee raise business, take a look at Texas, whose eyes, for once, seem to be turned inward on themselves.

Texas was trying to pass a bill in its Senate empowering college governing boards to levy a compulsory student activity fee not to exceed $15 per student. When the bill went to the Texas House for further action, "Filibustering Senator Jimmy Phillips stood on the Senate floor and rasped in an already hoarse voice Monday afternoon and at the night session as he tried to block the bill."

The rasping Mr. Phillips evidently managed to bollux up a considerable amount of the Texas Legislature's organization before the protest of the bill was finally squelched. The bill was reduced from $20 to $15. Phillips rasped through an amendment cutting it still further to $5. This amendment was tabled. Phillips rasped again, took another amendment written on yellow ruled paper up to the rostrum; this amendment proposed the bill be for $8. Then Phillips discovered that he had proposed the wrong amendment, reproposed another one setting the limit of the bill at $4. In the end, despite poor Mr. Phillips' wisecracking, nail-filing and hoarse rasping, the bill was passed at $15 again. A pox upon thy tvivial quibbling Texas! And all those oil wells out there, too!

LAST SATURDAY WAS a black day. We received in the morning mail a sinister postcard to the effect that, "Brother Dunn, get a new picture! 'I predict' your taunting, smarty expression in this is poisonous for your future;" and our mugshot had been clipped and pasted on the upper left hand corner of the card.

Of course it is rather disconcerting to be called "Brother Dunn," as if we were monastary bait. However, let that pass. We do not quite understand the quotes around "I predict," either. But let that pass. What interests us most is this business about our future. Should we rejoice that someone is concerned for our welfare in the years ahead?

—MAJOR PORTENT IN JAPAN—

University Head Gives Warning

Joseph Alsop

TOKYO, Japan—President Yanaihara of Tokyo University is a major portent for the United States, of the kind our increasingly reckless policy makers never seem to notice.

Tokyo is the great, national, state supported university to which bright young men flock from all over Japan. Since the ancient tradition of the pupils reverence for the master is still strong in this country, Tokyo's annual graduating class of several thousand all tend to reflect the opinions of Tokyo's president. By virtue of his office, therefore, and as an admirable scholar and a man of the highest character, President Yanaihara occupies a position in Japanese life that has had no real American equivalent since the days when Eliot of Harvard was the grand panjandrum of education in the United States.

A call on President Yanaihara is a singular experience. Under the young spring green of the trees on Tokyo University's crowded campus, black uniformed students are enjoying the sun and talking animatedly. The windows that survey the campus also pour bright spring sunshine into the comfortable president's office, full of pleasant, scholarly litter.

President Yanaihara, whose handsome, fine boned face proclaims his strong religious idealism, welcomes his visitor with charming Japanese courtesty. The wandering reporter, sadly tired of looking at political faces in public places, savors this nonpolitical atmosphere wtih delight and refreshment. But the first reaction changes to something rather different when Japan's current problems begin to be discussed.

'BARKING DOG'

"Japan," says President Yanaihara firmly, "is now America's barking dog. We now bark or bark not as the signal may be given."

As illustration of this thesis, President Yanaihara, with perceptible bitterness, describes the problem of his colleague, the President of Fukuoka University. The university is close to the big American airfield at Fukuoka. The planes landing and taking off are very noisy. Many professors, in protest against the nuisance, actually cease lecturing when a plane noise is heard. The others who do not fall silent are inaudible anyway.

But the President of Fukuoka has received no satisfaction from pointing out these grave inconveniences to the American Air Force and the Japanese government. Nothing has been done to improve the situation. "I ask you," says President Yanaihara, "is that real independence? Is this our country or is it yours?"

From this beginning, President Yanaihara develops his main theme: The world is convulsed by the struggle between America and the Soviet Union. Who is to blame for this struggle may be disputed, but all Asians fear "American imperialism" and American belligerency. From this struggle, the Japanese people wish to stand apart, in perfect nutralism, having friendly relations with both sides.

MOVE FORCES

Therefore the first and most essential thing is to get all American armed forces out of Japan immediately. It is true, of course, that the Soviet Union has deployed vast forces in Siberia, and that Communist China is arming to the teeth. But the Russians and Chinese have probably been driven to do these things by America with her hydrogen bombs. In any case, President Yanaihara has no fear that his country will fall victim to these good neighbors.

The problem of Japan's self defense can be settled after the withdrawl of American forces from Japanese soil. Until then, no wise discussion of the problem is possible. And for himself, being an idealist, President Yanaihara thinks that Japan should set a high example to the world by having no defense of any kind.

Such are the views of the most influential single educator in this country. They are not isolated or eccentric views either. Gakushuin University is the former peers school, where Japan's Crown Price is now being educated with the sons of Japan's other great and ancient families. And at Gakushuin, the high minded and benevolent President Abe holds the same opinions as President Yanaihara although a visit to Communist China as head of a good will mission has left President Abe a littlelesspositiveaboutthe e e a little less positive about the desirability of having no defense whatever.

The same views are to be found, again, in three of the four magazines which speak for and to the Japanese intelligentsia.

READER'S RETORT

Orchids To Dunn, Not Leonard

Editors

A sheaf of orchids to Associate Editor J. A. C. Dunn for his Sunday bouquet of onions to Columnist Rueben Leonard!

In regard to the surprisingly (for the usually acceptable DTH of Messrs. Yoder and Kraar) saffron Saturday selection ("Y Court Corner"), may we add a few bulbs of garlic to J.A.C. Dunn's presentation?

It seems to us remarkably singular that anyone should be call "lewd" (for use of "by God") by, of all people, a former editor of Tarnation. Not that we are casting aspersions at the campus humor magazine; far from it! The wit in Tarnation, even when not particularly subtle, is funny. Mr. Leonard's humor escapes us. And Phi on him for attackling this assembly" ex-speaker, with a great big whooping week-out-of-water Yadkin River fish thrown in.

We won't attempt to parry the thrust at the Carolina Forum. We are sure that the versatile head of this most worthwhile organization could much more effectively purge away the mud smear, if he thought it worth the trouble. Which it probably isn't.

And speaking of trouble, did it occur to you, Mr. Leonard, that a few minutes' conversation a few months ago with a member either of the Budget Committee or of the Ligislature's Finance Committee would have been a much more effective place to air your gripes than a supposedly entertaining and informative newspaper column appearing after the budget's presentation? We believe that it would. Furthermore, we are sure that any legislator would be most willing to hear your views. That's what we elected them for, isn't it—to represent us?

Or perhaps, being an ex-legislator yourself, you may feel that the new session has been purged (there's that word again—are we subversive?) of all the so-called "political nymphomaniacs." Looking back over election results, we find that a few seasoned veterans still remain. Praise Allah! (Are we, too, Lewd-Mouthed?)

Political nymphomaniacs." Perhaps. We wonder if their value isn't superior to that of "soapbox sadists." Our money (student fees, that is) goes to the former.

A political je ne sais quoi

Over The Hill

Charles Dunn

CAMPUS publications have long been one of the outstanding features at Carolina. The Daily Tar Heel, the Carolina Quarterly, and Tarnation have all been recognized as some of the outstanding publications in their class in the South. The University is lucky to have these publications, and the students are lucky to have such outlets for their talents, whether these talents be for writing, or for art work, or for anything else.

Yet the number of students taking advantage of these opportunities for experience is very small. There are usually a few that take an interest in each of the publications and work very hard and do the job well. But there are others on campus, who have the talent and who have had some experience on high school publications, that could aid the few who have to work so hard to keep the quality of the publications as high as they are.

The big problem is to get more students out to work on the publications. Some don't have time, some think that there is no place for them on the staffs, some don't get the proper encouragement. Maybe if every dormitory, fraternity, and sorority had a reporter elected with their officers it would help, and if the editors of the publications would take a little more time to consider and encourage the work and the offers to work of interested students the Carolina publications would be even better than they are.

POEM: In the column today we would like to print a couple of bits of student writing. The first is a poem entitled "integration and the D.T.H." It was written by Bill Acker, a freshman from South Carolina.

Kindly focus your attention
—Pardon, please, the intervention
On your incidental mental
State of studious intention—
To a subject now demanding
Contemplation, notwithstanding
That our reason may be treason
To the righteous D.T.H.

'Twas a peaceful situation
In a state of segregation.
There, invested, unprotested,
Were ideals of noble station.
But the fact that different races
Go to school in separate places
Is ferociously attrocious
To the righteous D. T. H.

With this heinous innovation,
With this scheme of integration
Came discussion, repercussion
And defiant legislation.
But the slighest indication
Of the feeblest remonstration
Has been chided and derided
By the righteous D. T. H.

It is with such apprehension
I promulgate my dissension,
I'm refraining from complaining
And will make no further mention
Which might be a malefaction,
Which might bring a swift reaction
To revile me and defile me
In the righteous D. T. H.

FOR LAUGHS: This next bit of student writing was done by Tony Miller, a pre-med student from near Winston-Salem. The article was written for an April fool edition of the "Rebel Yell," (Stacy's dorm newspaper) which didn't come out:

"It has been announced that the (dormitory) social room has been given over for the use of a bar and will be open to coeds at any time from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. The only rules that dorm men must abide by follow. Dorm men must wear a tie while entertaining the ladies. The bar is to be the main attraction, with beer being on sale during the regular times stated by the ABC board. There is to be no drunkeness, nor any profanity while ladies are present. There will be no hard liquor sold, but set-ups will be served, since there is a new ruling that men can keep in their possession one quart of liquor per person, or two quarts per room (if one is lucky enough not to have a roommate who will drink up his 'water of life')."

Diapered Dan, Pea-Brain Threat

Ed Yoder

It's hard to hear what someone says through a lipful of snuff, but this time I tried very hard.

The speaker, an old-timer in Chapel Hill, jimmied the new load of snuff around in front of his teeth.

"Lord," he groaned, 'these students now ain't got to do a damn thing." His features, the chipped-from-granite variety, jerked authoritatively.

"I can remember when nobody had no cars and students even had to tote firewood. Now all you do is push a button. The next thing you know, you fellers won't even go to the classroom or think. You'll just push a button for that, too."

MACHINES VS. CLASSES

That thought, coupled with an intention to write a piece on the rising terrors of automation, set me to thinking. The idea that machines could ever take the place of going to class or thing hadn't crossed my horizon of thought. Could it be? Of course I'd read how, at Harvard, Joe McCarthy's ace gumshoe, G. David Schine, had surrounded himself with tape-recording machines and stenographers to record Cambridge learning and pour it down into his skull: but even there the human factor hung on.

A sinister between the think-machines and impending automation began to work itself round and round in the hinges of my brain. Suppose the maze of calculus baffles the physicist ironing out a technical hitch in the Nautilis; supose a certain historian wants to know wheher, if Longstreet hadn't done thus and so at a certain moment in Gettysburg, the Confederacy would have taken another course; or another, what effect it would have had on Athenian history if Themistocles had put the potsherds in the urns instead of in an abandoned well. Suppose Dr. Einstein had been able to ask an electronic machine to prove his Unified Field Theory.

FREUD AND THE MACHINE

This led me to last year's anniversary issue of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and to an article, "Electronic Brain On War and Peace," by Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review.

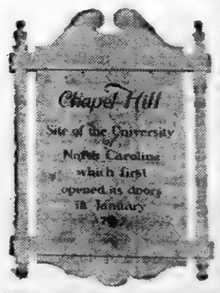
In the early history of the electronic brain, Mr. Cousins tells us, the gadgets fell flat on propositions involving emotional and/or psychological factors. Probably didn't have education in the ways of Adlerian Earth-Mother complexes and Freudian Narcisism. In other words, if decision were involved in any problem, the winking profile of tubes and wires and light registered only bewilderment.

Mr. Cousins dwelt at length on that shortcoming. Then came a letter—from a Dr. P. Storhperne, former head of the Norwegian Academy of Science, the world's foremost authority on the inpotencies and potencies of the electroic brain.

Dr. Storhjerne, in that letter, proclaimed the successful testing of an electronic brain which could work with the intangibles of human choice—emotion, feeling, psychology. Called "Deciding Dan", this undfapered child could deliver answers other than to baffing calculus problems. History, economics, political science surrendered to its lightning omniscience. The old brain had possessed a working vocabulary of about 1200 words and a functioning memory of about 24 hours.

AMAZING MEMORY

"Deciding Dan," furnished with germanium diode tubes, mustered a memory-span of 42 days—far beyond the human average, as Mr. Cousins points out. This "electronic brain can register every fact fed into it for almost a month and a half." Nine historians, enlisted from universities in Europe and Asia, including Oxford, Berlin, Cairo, and Delphi, fed "Deciding Dan" a choking problem—entailing some 780,000 sets of facts—on the possibilities of war and peace. Dan wheezed and blinked and whirred and hummed away at the cards of facts as they were fed him at the rate of 240 a minute. After four hours and 20 minutes of feeding and some 19 minutes of electro-cogitation, Dan began to return his answers. (This brain-work, the scientists estimate, would have taken 60 men a total of 15 years; yet Dan did it in 19 minutes.)



Dan's conclusion, by the way, was unmistakable: "When tranlated it read as follows: 'War is not inevitable. Give the United Nations the power and the means it needs to enforce world peace through law.'"

"Deciding Dan" could, then, work amazing wonders for the Dr. Einsteins and the Toynbees and the John Maynard Keyneses; it could hand down to man undebatable historical, scientific, and economic mandates.

UNC Netters Looking For Wins 28, 29 Here This Week

Buzzin' SPORTS

Corner Dale Ranson (a job consisting of speaking to him with even a glint of track in your eye) and you'll find out that he's a guy with a lot of ideas about track in his head. And he should have them, 'cause he's been in the business for more than twenty years.

The rotund Ranson not only eats, sleeps, and thinks track, but he does something about it, and that something is often in the way of promoting the game in intercollegiate and scholastic circles.

To wit: his latest effort at stimulating track in Southern high schools. Early in the spring Ransom sent a three-page circular to almost every high school in North Carolina and to high schools in other states. In the circular was a message from him and an ideal practice schedule for a school that desires to start a track team. The information is so complete that it breaks down the practice activity for men in each event into a week's schedule.

RANSON

Get him started on the subject of North Carolina high school track and you uncover some decided opinions. He feels that every school in North Carolina, no matter how small, has at least one boy who can run fast, one with unusual endurance, one who can jump well, and one who has the strength and ability to throw well. And there's your track team. He and his assistant, Joe Hilton, spend hours each week trying to find ways to promote high school track and get boys started on the game when they are young. They feel any normal boy can find one event in track in which he can be an effective performer.

Ranson also has some decided ideas about publicity. Tossing aside that strange fear that many coaches have about talking near newsmen, Ranson is apparently in his element when he can expound his theories about track. He's not a publicity hound, but he doesn't mind letting others know some of his ideas. And most of the time they help.

But Ranson not only has been able to suggest coaching methods to others. He has put them to use with his own heard.

His 1955 club upset the field in the ACC Indoor Games this year and is still undefeated in outdoor meet competition at this writing.

Sports Editing the Tar Heel apparently carries a high mortality rate, but it is with a bold heart and cold feet that we begin a regime with UNC athletics. Any ideas, suggestions or gripes concerning the sports page will be welcomed and should be addressed to the sports editor, DTH. Any unsigned letters will of course be filed away in that green bucket that sits in the corner collecting chewing gum and used matches.

We will attempt to present to readers a comprehensive coverage of all UNC athletics, both varsity and intramural, and at the same time keep you abreast of important national breaks in the sports field

Keep your fingers crossed, and your poison pens unholstered.

Frosh Edge Win In 12th

Roger Honeycutt's walk with the bases loaded in the last of the twelfth inning gave the Tar Babies a 7-6 victory over Hargrave Military Academy on Emerson Field yesterday.

Honeycutt's walk forced in Jimmy Harwell with the winning run after two walks and an infield error had loaded the bases.

Charlie Cross, who came on in the tenth inning and held Hargrave hitless for the last three innings was the winner. He was the fourth Tar Baby hurler.

Don Lewis banged two doubles and a single in four trips to lead Carolina's 8-hit attack. Delon Lambert homered for the winners.

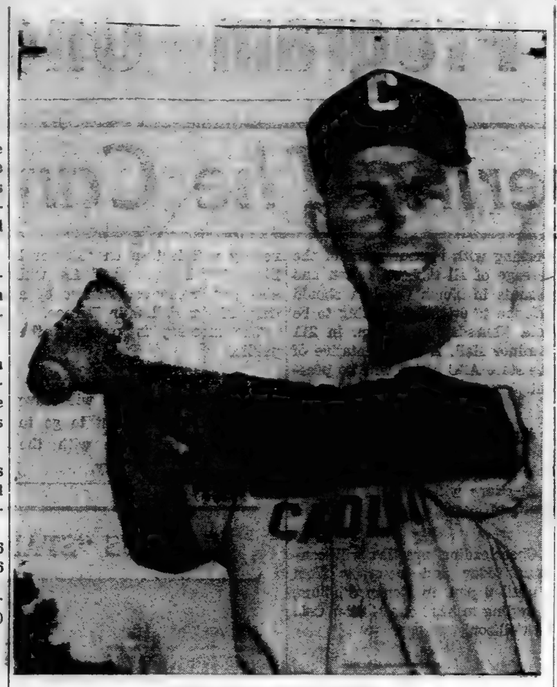
Cockell On IBC Barrel

LONDON, April 25 (AP) — A London sports said today the International Boxing Club has signed England's Don Cockell to a three-year contract and that if the pudgy Briton should upset Heavyweight Champion Rocky Marciano he may never be seen in a British ring again.

In an article headlined "A Champion Don Would be Lost to British Ring," Pat Reekie wrote in the Daily Mail:



"Now the ghastly truth is out. In order to get his fight with Rocky Marciano, Don Cockell, our heavyweight champion, had to sign away his freedom to fight where he likes, or even where his manager tells him."

Reekie quoted Cockell's manager, John Simpson, as saying: "I knew it was not the normal practice, but what could we do?" British promoter Jack Solomons, however, denied that Cockell, as a world champion, would be "lost forever" to British rings but admitted Don is tied up with the IBC for title fights.

"Cockell can fight wherever he likes and whenever he likes," said Solomons who works closely with the IBC. "I was there when the contract was made and he is free to have as many 10-round fights as he wants. He does not have to ask the IBC.

Cockell, a 5-1 underdog, is training in San Rafel, Calif., for his May 16 bout with Marciano in San Francisco.

When the beefy Briton signed in New York on Feb. 24 for the title fight, it was disclosed that he had agreed to give Marciano a return bout within 90 days if he beat the champion. It was assumed then that Cockell had signed an exlusive contract with the IBC for title bouts because the giant U. S. boxing organization does that with all contestants in title fights it promotes.

Big Deac Headache

This face, minus the smile, will be the one that Wake Forest pitchers will have to face Wednesday afternoon when the Deacs come here to play the Tar Heels on Emerson Field. It belongs to Connie Gravitte, currently the big UNC headache for opposing pitchers. Centerfielder Gravitte banged four hits in seven trips over the weekend to raise his average to .396 for the season with 21 for 53. He has hit four home runs and four doubles to pace the Tar Heels in those divisions also.

Carolina's Gravitte 3rd In ACC Batting

GREENSBORO, April 25 (AP) — Andy Cockrell, Duke's sophomore sensation batted at a torrid 11 for 13 pace last week to take over today as the No. 1 batter in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball race with an average of .470.

Cockrell was no better than ninth last week with a .368 mark, but today, according to ACC service bureau figures, he leads the field by a comfortable margin. Buddy Bass of Duke is second, just as he was last week, with a .422 average. Third is Connie Gravitte of North Carolina with .396

Linwood Holt of Wake Forest, the top man a week ago at .441, got only three hits in 14 trips last week, to skid to seventh place with a .375 mark. Nevertheless, Holt still leads in runs batted in with 15, and in triples, with four.

Tommy Cole, Wake Forest right fielder batting .345, connected for three home runs last week to take the lead in that department with five. He was one of a half-dozen tied at two each last week. Second today is Gravitte, who hit two during the week just past to run his total to four.

Clemson outfielder Roger Gaines, a .378 batter, tops the conference in doubles with five, followed by Gravitte and Cockrell with four each. Wake Forest's Bill Barnes is way ahead in stolen bases, with six. Cole is second to Holt in RBI's, with 14, with Barnes and Bill Zalker of Maryland next with 12 each.

Cockrell also leads the ACC in two other departments. He has scored the most runs, 15, and has collected the most hits, 24.

'Cats Today, Hot Miami Here Friday

One of the old tennis powers of the Southern Conference will put the test to the Tar Heels' 27-match winning streak here this afternoon when the Davidson Wildcats invade Chapel Hill.

The Tar Heels polished off Wake Forest 8-1 Saturday for number thirteen of this season and the 27th in a row.

The last dual meet match loss for Coach John Kenfield's club was midway last season when Presbyterian took a 5-4 victory.

The real test for the local club should come Friday, however when it plays host to the University of Miami team. The Florida club is consistently one of the better collegiate teams in the South.

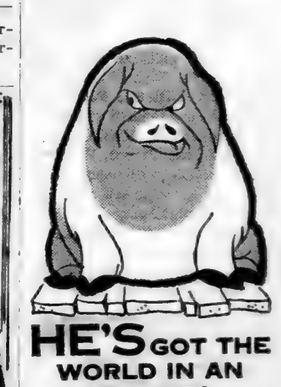
The Miami team is undefeated in ten matches this season and has lost only one match in the last six years. That defeat was to the University of Texas in 1949.

It was Miami that broke a brilliant Tar Heel string of 40-odd victories in 1951.

Following the match with Miami, the Tar Heels head north on a six-match trip that includes stops at Williams, Amherst, Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Virginia.

UNC Club In Penn Relays

Undefeated in five dual meets this season, The Tar Heel track team will go to Philadelphia Friday to participate in the two-day Penn Relays.



The Tar Heel tracksters, under Coach Dale Ranson, have defeated N. C. State, Princeton, Maryland, Wake Forest and Couth Carolina

Davis Notches Sixth In Row

WAKE FOREST, N. C., April 25 (AP) — Lowell (Lefty) Davis won his sixth straight game without a loss as Wake Forest overpowered Clemson 11-4 in an Atlantic Coast Conference baseball game here today.

Davis gave up 14 hits, all but one of which were singles, but was tough in the clutches as he struck out 10 and walked only two. He has now beaten six different teams this season.

WHY do we need blood?

Capt. Mary Younger, Army Nurse Corps, answers the question: "I'm stationed at an Army Hospital—far from any front-line fighting. But here the biggest battle of all goes on . . . the battle for life.

"Day after day, I've seen the blood you donate restore health to the shattered, life to the lifeless. Helping these men, watching them, I've come to understand why the need for blood—wherever used—is always urgent."

YOUR BLOOD may go to a combat area, a local hospital, or for Civil Defense needs. But wherever it goes, this priceless, painless gift will some day save an American life!

WITH DR. KIDDER'S SPEECH ON LEADERSHIP:

Leadership Training Program Underway

Leadership Council Will Be Introduced

The first meeting in the two-day series of Leadership Training, "The Hit Parade of Effective Leadership," will be a mass meeting of women students entitled, "This is YOUR Hit Parade" to be held in the Library assembly room at 4 p.m. today.

Following Dr. Maurice A. Kidder's speech on leadership, the new Leadership Council will be introduced.

The council members are: Miss Mary Gillespie, Panhellenic Council chairman; Miss Sue Fink, Women's Residence Council chairman; Miss Sally Folger, YWCA president; Miss Joan Purser, Women's Honor Council chairman; Miss Laura Travis, Women's Athletic Association president; and Miss Sara Alice Jackson, chairman of women's orientation.

"Jam Sessions", small group discussions, will be held following the mass meeting to discuss training for positions.

The groups and their leaders are: dormitory presidents, Misses Joy Carter and Louise Coffey; sorority presidents and vice-presidents, Misses Carol DuPler and Sue East; house managers and dorm vice-presidents, Misses Nancy Whisnant and Bebe Bauman; house councils, Misses Debbie Wescott and Betsy Goodwin; recording secretaries, Misses Carol Webster and Ann Shannonhouse; corresponding secretaries and social chairman, Miss Carol Nation and Mrs. Barns; treasurers, Miss Kendrick Townsend and Manning Muntzing; and committee chairmen and members, Misses Sonia Bergan and Bey Blemker.

"Point of Order" is the title for Wednesday's mass meeting, to be held in the same place at 4 p.m.

Miss Babbie DiIorio and Lewis Brumfield will present a skit on parlimentary procedure, which will be followed by the introduction of the men leaders on campus.

Again, small groups will meet following the mass meeting. "What it was was Leadership" talks will center around leaders and pseudo-leaders.

The two-day program will end with a banquet in Lenoir Hall at 6:30 tomorrow night entitled, "Our Best to You." President Gordon Gray will speak at this meeting, to which all junior and senior women have been invited.

Entertainment will be provided by the St. Anthony singing group which recently won a Valkrie Sing trophy.

Premiers Slated In Music Dept.

Premier performances of works by two student composers will be given in the Music Department in the next two weeks.

George Thomas, piano student of Dr. Wilton Mason, has written "Adagio for Horn and Piano," which he will play with Guyte Cotton tonight at the Sinfonia Concert in Hill Hall.

Thomas will conduct his arrangement of "The Wide Missouri" for mixed chorus at the Phi Mu Alpha fraternity concert tonight.

The UNC Concert Band will give the first performance of Thomas' suite, "Southerama," on May 1.

Roger McDuffie, composition major studying with Dr. Mason, composed "Tribute," for orchestra, to be played by the University Symphony on May 5.

McDuffie's arrangement of "Go Down, Moses" was sung by the Men's Glee Club at its last concert. His "Prelude for Brass Septet" was performed at Davidson College last Spring.

At present, McDuffie is working on the incidental music for the Playmakers' production of "Julius Caesar," scheduled for production in May.

McDuffie was graduated from Greensboro schools and received his AB from UNC in 1949. After three years in the US Air Force he returned to Chapel Hill where he is completing work toward an M.A. in music. He is also fulfilling requirements for a teacher's certificate in music education. In addition to composing, McDuffie plays first trumpet in the UNC Band and Symphony.

Thomas, a senior, is a graduate of the Carthage school. Former accompanist for the Men's Glee Club, he has held offices in that organization and in Phi Mu Alpha fraternity.

Goettingen U. Applications Still On Hand

"Applications are still available for the Goettingen exchange scholarship," announced Chairman Bill Wible yesterday.

The scholarship, which includes travel expenses, tuition, monthly allotment and a portion of room and board, is open to all students who have completed their sophomore year, said Wible.

Deadline for applications is May 2, according to Wible.

Students interested in applying for the scholarship, sponsored by student government, must file applications at the YMCA secretary's office, said Chairman Wible.

policeman about getting it back, Wells said the officer told him to "pick it up at Ray Jefferies' office."

According to Wells, the officer did not take his friend's card, although they were walking together.

"I got there when everything had broken up," said Wells. He said that there were about 50 or 60 boys around.

"I don't think that they should just pick someone out of a crowd unless they take the whole crowd," he added.

Wells said he went to the police station here to find out what he had done. He said that he talked with the desk sergeant. The sergeant told him he would find out what the charges were from the arresting officer, according to Wells. He added that when he went back the sergeant told him that he had talked to the officer, but that "he didn't know anymore than he did before."

Wells said that all the sergeant told him was that there was a crowd of people there.

Action Upcoming On Budget Bills

RALEIGH, April 25 (AP)—Members of the General Assembly returned to Raleigh for their 17th week of work today, faced with action on the all-important revenue and appropriations bills.

The Senate and House were scheduled to meet at 8 o'clock tonight but no major legislation was on either calendar.

Tomorrow the Senate and House finance committees are to receive reports on a $16,191,000 revenue bill which has been agreed upon by their subcommittes. At the same time, the joint Appropriations Committee will be given the recommendations of its joint subcommittee on the 1955-56 budget.

The Finance Subcommittee members fell short of the 17 to18 million dollars in additional revenue which has been considered necessary to balance the state budget for the next biennium.

However, the Joint Appropriations subcommittee added up its figures on the budget after five weeks of work and discovered it had pared a total of $1,214,125 from the proposed 637-million dollar state spending bill.

Gray Says Students Are Essential As A Group In Survival Of America

Speaks At GM Week Meeting

President Gordon Gray last night said the students who are now attending and will attend in the future both public and private institutions of higher learning "need to be impressed with their future importance as a group in the survival of American society."

A group of only twenty-five students heard President Gray.

Speaking to students in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial on the topic, "The University and Its Responsibilities," President Gray said the "great bulk" of ever increasing number of college and university students "no longer comes from a rural, provincial America, but, rather, from an urban and semi-urban America, across which all the forces of the modern 20th century world play freely. I believe that it is accurate and fair to say, also," he continued, "that a substantial part of our students come to college, not through any particularly strong desire for a college education . . ."

President Gray pointed out that this situation "is somewhat different from that on which, by and large, higher education in America has developed." He said the country's universities and colleges have had as one of their main functions in the past to "pierce the provincial coats" of the "relatively small proportion of our young people" who entered such institutions with a "positive desire" for learning.

In pointing out the new function which has been placed on institutions of learning, President Gray suggested "we owe this generation of students we are now receiving a measure of stability. . . I do not refer to the stability of arrested development," he explained. "I refer to the stability that proceeds from a feeling on the part of the student that what he is doing is worthwhile, not only to himself, but to the total picture of the life in which he lives and will continue to live. Nor do I refer to a stability in which questions may not be asked and answers sought along any road that leads to the source," said President Gray.

"We are no longer producing a relatively small minority, but a major, measurable component of our American society," he said. ". . . we are in a real sense creating not only the leaders of the future, but the near average man of the futuer.

"To put this into quite stark terms, should H-bombs devastate our existing order of things, these people will be a major portion of those who do, or do not, survive and have, or have not, the moral purpose and courage to put the pieces back together."

President Gray said that if the colleges and universities become "convinced" of their new responsibility, he believes that they "may be on the road to two objectives. First, we may be able to communicate to the student a sense of moral order, and he to receive it."

"Second," said President Gray, "I refer to the communication of an awareness of the fact that survival is once again a relevant issue in American society." He explained that he referred not only to the "danger from nuclear weapons," but also "to survival of the personality; of the family and of the community in a world that often seriously seems to interfere with their full development."

President Gray was speaking in connection with Graham Memorial's week of celebration of the 23rd birthday.

GM Slate For Today

Here's the schedule for today's Graham Memorial Week events: Tonight at 8 o'clock, a "red hot" Negro combo will hold forth in front of the Student Union building. Students are invited to bring themselves, their dates, Bermuda shorts and blankets. No admission charge. Music and refreshments will be furnished by Graham Memorial.

UP Chief Sanders Clarifies Statement

By EBBA FREUND

A poorly attended University Party meeting last night heard chairman Bill Sanders assert "political parties can be clean and constructive."

Referring to a statement he made last week that "political parties are a necessary evil" Sanders went on to say that party quibbles over little things are a "major cause" of student apathy toward student government. "When a political party causes apathy" be continued, "it is evil."

All elected officers should not forget that they "owe allegiance to the students," said Sanders.

"The University Party will not forget the most important people in student government at Carolina —the students," concluded Sanders.

Sanders named his appointments to committees, but because of the paucity of members at the meeting he decided to wait until next week t oask for approval of the appointments.

The new members of the legislative committee, which acts as a "liaison between the party and legislature," are John Raper, chairman, Jim Exum (party floorleader) and Ed Lippman.

Honor Report Due

Former President Tom Creasy's committe to study improvements in the honor system will be released this week, Chairman Scotty Hester announced yesterday.

Copies of the report will be available next week at the student government office, according to Hester.

The committee's purpose was to look into possible changes to improve the Honor System. The three areas covered by the Hester committee were: 1. During and after Orienation 2. Mechanics within court system 3. Rehabilitation of suspended students.

Other committee members were Walt Joyner, Kendrick Townsend, Ogburn Yates, Charlie Katzenstein, Luther Hodges, and Bill Calvert.

Four Of Nine UNC Students Convicted For Panty Raid; Administration Is Criticized

'Don't Kick It Around' Is The Title

"Don't Kick It Around" is the title of the number Miss Bo Bernardin and Tom Gill, above, will play in Thursday and Friday's presentations of "Satan's Saints," to be put on by Sound and Fury, student drama group. Gill and Miss Bernardin, who are the musical's leads, will be supplemented by an all-star student cast. Tickets for the show are on sale for 50 cents at Town & Campus, Kemp's, Graham Memorial and Y-Court. Show will start at 8:30 both nights, with seniors admitted free to the Thursday performance.—Markham photo.

One Free; Other 4 Appeal

By DELAINE BRADSHER

Four of the nine University students charged with taking part in a panty raid were convicted in Recorder's Court yesterday.

One of the students was not prosecuted because of lack of evidence and the other four had their cases transferred to the next term of Orange County Superior Court.

The panty raid took place April 19.

The nine boys were charged with disturbing the women students and disorderly conduct. Only one pleaded guilty.

Bob Brame, Edward Ross and William Latham were found guilty of both charges and fined $50 and court costs. Brame and Latham appealed and their bond was set at $100.

Joseph Bartholomew was found not guilty of disturbing women, but was convicted of disorderly conduct. He was fined $25 and costs.

George Eanes, Donald Strayhorn, Robert Lynch and Hugh Murray asked for a jury trial and their cases were transferred to the Superior Court. Bond was set at $100 for each of the defendants.

Grady Lee Wells of Charlotte was not prosecuted for lack of evidence.

Meanwhile, two student leaders issued a statement in which they criticized the University administration for its handling of the incident.

The two, Joel Fleishman and Gordon Forester, said they felt South Building "intended to bypass the student courts initially in order that the action of the Recorder's Court might deter future panty raids by punishing these nine boys who, we feel, are no more guilty than some 500 other students who were present."

Fleishman and Forester said Chapel Hill Police Chief W. T. Sloan had told them he believed "the big men in South Building had a meeting and decided that these boys were to be tried in Recorder's Court.

"You know we have to do what the big men say," Chief Sloan said, according to the two. "I would have been happy for these boys to be tried in student courts."

Fleishman and Forester said "we feel that it is a very bad situation when the University officials refuse to trust the responsibility of the student courts in enforcing discipline on this campus and are forced to rely on civil authorities to make a public example of the students accused."

Chancellor Robert House, contacted yesterday, denied telling the police what to do with the nine students. "We couldn't interfere with civil justice," he said.

Leadership Stirs atent Abilities—Rev. Kidder

Coeds' Mass Meeting, Discussion Groups And Gray Speech End Project's Activities

By PEGGY WARD

Rev. Maurice Kidder opened the first session of the Leadership Training Program by discussing the stereotypes necessary for good leaders yesterday.

"The first sterotype—Spaghetti Leadership — can't be pushed, it has to be pulled," said Reverend Kidder. It stays ahead of the followers and beckons them on, he said. This is not always best when it gives the feeling that those who are behind are dead weight. The motto for a job is to keep the job bigger than ourselves, said the speaker. "The secret of the quiet operator is to get the job done without concern for where credit for the job is going," Rev. Kidder added.

Another sterotype is "Personality Leadership" which takes everyone into account except those who are to be led, according to Reverend Kidder. The scene has to be set just right to do the job, he said. A motto for avoiding this stereotype is, "If the learner cannot perform, the instructor has not taught," said Reverend Kidder.

Many times we go through the motions and expect success to follow but this does not always work, he added. It takes a lot of individual work on all potentials, he said. The leaders have to be able to show the men at the bottom how to do the job, and endless patience and concern for the followers is most necessary to make sure that the job gets done, he said. There is no human endeavor or institution which does not have a goal, said the speaker. There is no job which is an end in itself, he added.

A mass meeting of all women students, small discussion group meetings and a banquet at which President Gordon Gray will speak are the activities scheduled to wind up this year's Leadership Training program today.

Tickets for the banquet may be purchased by any junior and senior women and men students who wish to attend for $1.25. They may be obtained from the Dean of Women's Office or from Misses Marilyn Zager, Nancy Whisnant, Bebe Bauman, Ann Herbert, Betsy Goodwin, Misses Kendrick Townsend, Dottie Figel, Ruth Jones and Annette Levenson. No tickets will be sold at the door.

The mass meeting will be held at 4 p.m. in the Library Assembly Room. A skit on parlimentary procedure will be given by Miss Babbie DiIorio and Lewis Brumfield. The campus men leaders will also be introduced at the meeting.

House Rejects Proposal Giving Yearly Session

RALEIGH, April 26 (AP) — Three votes spelled defeat today as the House rejected a proposed constitutional amendment to permit annual General Assembly sessions.

'Satan's Saints' Crew Flying Toward Deadline

By JACKIE GOODMAN

The students who attend the Sound and Fury production of "Satan's Saints" are not expecting what they are going to get in the show, according to members of the cast.

The stage crew and some members of the cast were working hard in Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon. Props were being built and painted for the performances to be given tomorrow and Friday night.

Herbert Thorp is crew chief. David Ward is construction chief, with Miss Henri Van Order as prop manager and Miss Bette Bostian handling the costumes.

Miss Carol Ann Lee is assisting Miss Bo Bernardin as director of Sound and Fury's second production of the year.

The first dress rehearsal of the show was held last night.

The cast yesterday described the show as being "just a little bit off the Playmakers."

Business Fair Is Underway

The 1955 Business Fair gets under way on campus today.

The event, sponsored by Alpha Kappa Psi business fraternity, features exhibits depicting "The Contributions of Transportation to the Development of the South."

A variety of exhibits, open to the entire campus, is housed in O. Max Gardner Hall, Hanes Hall and Carroll Hall.

One of the featured events of the exposition will be a demonstration of the new "speed trap" devices.

The demonstration, to be put on by State Highway Patrolmen, will open for inspection a "whammy," an interceptor car, and will give crowds a chance for audience participation through reflex testing devices.

Another of the featured exhibits is a detailed array of watercolor paintings depicting the various locomotive types.

On the mechanical side, there is in Hanes Hall a working locomotive model, and in Carroll Hall a working "Constellation" type airplane model.

The director of exhibits for the two-day affair is Andy Vero.

DISCUSSION OF LIPPMANN'S BOOK:

An Intellectual Jaunt

WUNC-TV provided Monday night televiewers with an intellectual jaunt through Walter Lippmann's new book, The Public Philosophy, with four stimulating professors leading the idea tour.

Doctors Alexander Heard, William Poteat, James Godfrey and Lt. Col. Mark Orr led the TV tour, and the results were stimulating. All these men are popular professors, and one can easily see why from the interesting manner in which they tossed ideas from the Lippmann book about.

Actually, the affair was a meeting of Pi Sigma Alpha, political science fraternity. And as the show began, the televiewer saw the four participants through rows of the audience—much in the same manner of one actually on the scene.

Dr. Heard of the Political Science Department pointed out that columnist Lippmann was considerable more than just a columnist, citing other books that the columnist has written on political philosophy.

Dr. Godfrey said The Public Philosophy was much "like an artichoke" — a book "that should be eaten leaf by leaf." Then the English history professor began to munch on some of the Lippmann leaves:

"According to Lippmann, there has been a loss of executive power . . . and a dangerous overemphasis of public opinion . . . Lippmann sees in the executive power of the government a branch particularly dedicated to allegiance of law."

Dr. Godfrey pointed to what Lippmann called a "lost value" government "with some higher view." Lippmann's answer, said Dr. Godfrey, is "a reaffirmation of dependence on natural law."

Philosophy Professor Poteat filled the cameras next, talking about "the exposed nerve of liberal democratic government" on which Lippmann has but his political finger. According to Dr. Poteat, the "exposed nerve" is the fact that while liberalism is "animated by criticism and dissent," certain "practical limits" restrain this "criticism and dissent." The big trouble, said Dr. Poteat thoughtfully, is that you can't draw lines in advance as to the limits of criticism and dissent. He compared the "exposed nerve" to a digestive system that would digest both food and the stomach itself.

Lt. Col. Orr pointed to foreign policy as the "Achilles heel of liberalism." He said, "Lippmann thinks that public opinion is wrong about all the time." Lt. Col. Orr said Lippmann said that the influence of liberal democracy is dwindling in the world, and that Lippmann's remedies were a "strong executive" and a "public philosophy."

Lt. Col. Orr, looking worried, asked, "Is that (a strong executive) really going to solve the problem? Is that not worse than the disease? Would that not deprive the people of a say-so in government?"

He also wondered, "Aren't we already doing something like formulating a public philosophy?"

Dr. Heard said the thing about which Lippmann is concerned had its origins in "the mass suffrage movement" and the "enormous increase in economic and sociological diversification of the country."

He spoke of the need for "reenlightening the private interests to what the public interest is." And then Dr. Heard invited the audience to participate, which it did, although at first reluctantly.

Dr. Godfrey observed, after the audience had tossed the Lippmann theories around a bit, "The alarming thing is that he (Lippmann) may be right about the disease and wrong about the cure."

And as the thoughtful political science students of the fraternity held a consultation on the cure for liberal democracy, announcer Charles Kuralt told televiewers what they were listening to and asked them to write the station if they enjoyed the program. With that, one of the University's most successful (and most educational) programs faded away, but not for long, this reporter hopes.—L. K.

Seniors Feted With Hogan's Picnic Today

The senior class will celebrate another day of Senior Week today with a picnic at Hogan's Lake.

The picnic will begin with a parade from the front of Woollen Gym at 3 p.m.

Food, soft drinks and prizes will be on tap for the occasion, according to Rueben Leonard, publicity chairman. "Sports equipment will be available for all those seniors that would like to impress their dates with their athletic prowess," said Leonard.

"All you seniors gram your dates by their Bermuda shorts, cram a bottle in your pocket, and go on out to Hogan's. Music will be furnished until dark. After dark . . .?" said Leonard.

A Fee Raise Plug—I

Come next Tuesday, you will be asked to express your opinion on the proposed fee raise amendment.

Lifting the limit on the amount of money which student government can collect from you for your benefit is a constitutional matter. The question will rest with you in Tuesday's important referendum.

The proposed amendment to raise the limit on student fees is already meeting with opposition in some quarters. Opponents will undoubtedly try to cut the amendment out as a design to lighten your pockets of untold amounts of money.

First off, then: we would like to indicate the possibilities of the amendment: to show you, as a matter of fact, that the bill—of untold value in the benefits that could grow from it—would work no earthquake-like changes in the student taxation system.

The present limit on student fees per year is $20. The amendment on which you will be asked to vote simply proposes to raise that limitation to $25. The existing limitation has gathered the dust of five years. Now, as indicated by the fiscal difficulties which led recently to a major slash in The Daily Tar Heel's budget (among others), student government needs more money.

Students who want to maintain vigor in student activities and services, students who believe in the principle of self-taxation, will weigh the need for added funds and vote wisely.

In succeeding editorials, we will attempt to persuade you that the dust of five years weighs heavily on our economic livelihood and that the new services from a slight boost in student fees are imperative.

The Raleigh-ic Oracle—I

The furnace is blasting, trala-træla. La.

And we will, from time to time, clip from Nell Battle Lewis's News And Observer column some of the choice scorchers. Here, for your general amusement, comes number one:

> Last Sunday I noted in this paper the news photo of the Russian flag with hammer and sickle that had been raised by what were called "pranksters" on the campus of the University of North Carolina. Members of the student ROTC were shown lowering it from the pole from which the American flag usually flies. But I can't understand why they took the Soviet flag down. Doesn't it belong there—" 'neath the (Red) oaks of our old Chapel Hill?"

The Screen Darkens After Enlightening

A striking example of what the University's television station can do and news that the General Assembly might further chop WUNC-TV's already-trimmed budget come to our attention simultaneously.

Monday night's presentation of a round table review of Walter Lippman's, The Public Philosophy, by distinguished faculty members demonstrated just how educational our educational station can be.

However, word about a possible cut in the station's appropriation worries us. If the station has to return to its original source—private donations—this will mean other sectors of University education that depend on private grants will lose out. It's easy to see that contributing to a TV station might have more glamour to many friends of the University than buying books for the library, for instance. But it's equally clear that the University needs both.

The Daily Tar Heel hopes that WUNC-TV will not have to turn to private grants for support. If the General Assembly's scissor-handed operations snip the WUNC-TV budget, we urge a shorter broadcasting day with the emphasis on low cost programs like Monday's round table review.

Of Education—a b c d, PMLA Ickey Toko-Ri

J. A. C. Dunn

THE DOOR OF the English Department Reading Room was standing open as we loitered aimlessly in the hall of Bingham the other day, and so, hoping to fill one of the numerous gaps in what, in our lighter moments, we call our education, we trickled in.

The Reading Room is very academic - looking. There are shiny topped tables, shiny-bottomed chairs, and bookshelves filled with all sorts of scholarly impedimenta. We wandered round in an awed sort of way (being careful not to disturb the papers on the table — probably someone's thesis in embryo); there were shelves marked "General Reference;" there were shelves laden with countless copies of PMLA at random, opened it at random, picked a sentence at random and read: "The renunciation of egocentric isolation, of narcissistic forms of attachment, and of Bohemian freedom must take place, first of all, in the domain of personal relationships." We Put the PMLA down at random.

The other shelves had in them 17th century literature, 19th century literature, Anglo-Saxon and Medieval letirature, some rather battered Encyclopedia (or should it be 'Brittanicae?), all absolutely crawling with footnotes and whatnot. As we were leaving we cast an eye over the papers we had been so careful not to disturb. They were written in pencil on theme paper. The title of the top one was "My Senior Year at High School."

WE RECEIVED A letter smelling of the Charles River from a freshman at Harvard not too long ago telling of the wonderful opportunities for applied education offered by that venerable institution.

Our freshman has a room in Hahvahd Yahd facing Massachusetts Avenue (if you can), and right across the street there is a movie theatre. Late at night, when the usher is putting up name of the next attraction on the marquee, our freshman and window and correct the man's his crimson cronies lean out the spelling, since it evidently needs correction. A case in point is the instance cited in the letter, when the usher put up a sign saying:

THE BRIDGES AT TOKO-RI
starring
GRACE KELLY
WILLIAM HOLDEN
ICKEY ROONEY

ONLY THE DAY before yesterday we were sitting in the Pine Room inhaling Lenoir Hall Bohea by the thounsands of cc., and we couldn't help looking over the shoulder of the student sitting at the next table, who was writting a sonnet

He sucked his pencil. chased it with a bite of Hoagy, leaned back and squinted his eyes tight shut. We read what he had written. He had three lines, the rhyme scheme for which goes a b b a, a b b a, c d, c d, e e. The boy was stuck on the second "a".

After a while he gave it up in disgust andstarted on a Shakesperean sonnet, whose rhyme scheme goes a b a b, c d c d, e f e f, g g. By the third cigarette he had got stuck on the second "b" and tore up the paper. He sat for a minute glaring at the sugar jar, muttered "Oh, the hell with it," and dashed off in a matter of seconds a sonnet of his own. The rhyme scheme, we noticed, was a b c d e f g h i j k l m n.

Diapered Dan, Pea-Brain Threat

Ed Yoder

(Conclusion)

But what will happen to man, proud man, as we wait and let the Deciding Dans do our thinking, supposing, for argument, that we all start pushing buttons for ready-made thoughts? We wouldn't become, as someone has predicted, the spindly little creature with the enormous head; we wouldn't degenerate from the brain down. Instead, the trend of our evolution from the jungle-tree swingers would reverse itself. We would become the creatures with big bodies (arms kept strong with poker playing and pushing buttons; legs and torsos kept hefty with pacing up and down before the miles and miles of reflecting machines and eating copiously at our plentiful leisure.)

But we would become the race of animals with the only true pea-heads, of dinosaurian dimensions. We may doubt that man woudl be able to implement the momentous wisdom the Deciding Dans could hand him, what with his own brain shrunk by nonuse to the measurements f a slightly-worn agate shooting toy.

'DOUBLE-THINK'

Then there would be the additional danger of the evil-plotters, the Mrs. Smarts and the McCarthys and the Oateses who would exercise their brains with bad designs just enough so they would soon outgrow their fellows. Then the evildoers might collaborate with a traitorous scientist to produce an untruth serum to bias the germanium diode tubes, to introduce Dobule-think into the electronic brains. What then?

The era of the Deciding Dans could be fraught with all sorts of dangers, and I find myself heavily on the side of international control of the electronic brains. Perhaps, as an anthem for our movement, we would paraphrase an old hymn:

Gimme them old-time prefrontals,
Gimme them old-time prefrontals.
They were good enough for Einstein
And they're good enough for me!

—Reader's Retort—

Editors:

Have question. Please answer. Quite confused. Come to Carolina from less enlightened universities to the North. Didn't have student self-government one reads about here. Didn't have Honor System one reads about here.

This is where question comes in. Remarkable experience last night. Attended off-campus fraternity dance. Nice dance. Sober dance. Rather strange dance. No one left floor during dance. Amazing! Not even to get breath of fresh air! Amazing! Did see one fellow head for men's room, looking guiltily over shoulder. Hmm. Half way thru dance decided to walk around block and see what Raleigh looked like. Amazing thing happened. Large fellow with firm grip halted me four feet short of elevator. "Sorry Mac, can't leave the dance unless you are not coming back" . . . Fellow wearing ribbon. Thought he might be looking for cattle judging pavilion. Nope. Dance Committee.

Now in the unenlightened universities from whence I came, we did not have the wonderful Honor System, Enforced. Told we were going to college now. Supposed to act like adults, etc. Not only didn't get to have an Honor System, but didn't even get the guards to enforce the thing. Sad. But here question arises.

What is honorable about an enforced honor system?

Bermuda Ban Out Of Step With 'Zeitgeist'

Ron Levin

IT HAS been reported to this columnist that there is a ban on Bermuda shorts being enforced in one of the Women's dorms on this campus. When I heard the sad tidings, I went over to find out for myself, whether or not the humor was true. It is. What is all this business anyway?

First, we are informed that T-shirts are not esthetic. Well, who said they were in the first place? And who said our manner of dress had to be esthetic in the second? Nineteen fifty-five doesn't seem to be a particularly aesthetic year anyway. Quemoy, Matsus, radioactive fallout, and other such similar terms are not especially pleasing to the ear.

To those latter Victorian personages who are somewhat disgusted with the collegiate attitude toward dress today, I add the rather humble apology that we are only trying to keep in step with the Zeitgeist. Now, there's an aesthetic word for you.

CONGRATULATIONS to Dr. Nash of the Religion Department for attacking the three cut rule in the recent All-Campus Conference and calling it a "stupid inconsistency".

Perhaps, if more professors would speak their thoughts in this manner, there might be results within the dark towers overshadowing Y-Court. I understand all too well that the majority of the faculty were against the cut system, and I also realize that every student is of the same opinion with regard to this rule. But it seems, the rule persists, and nothing is done.

I had thought education was the responsibility of those who understood the problem best, namely the teachers, but it seems it has become the business of a small but efficient police state residing within the scholastic community.

My deepest regrets to those unfortunate students who will labor under this medieval torture device in the years to come, and a big bag of onions to those who were behind it. If the shoe fits . . .

IT SEEMS that in the spring a young man's fancy likely turns to thoughts of things other than love. The University of Nebraska experienced a panty raid that was considerably larger in dimensions than the usual prison riot on cell block thirteen.

I am sorry that there have to be such demonstrations by the students in an effort to assert themselves, but I am likewise pained at the rather futile and archaic attempts of a university to govern its members.

Y-Court Corner

Rueben Leonard

THOSE CONSTRUCTING Cousins of ours over at Raleigh really have a hard time. After Carolina led the way, as usual, in the quest for girls undies, several boys from "Methodist Flats" hopped into their cars, rode over to the cattle country, and helped organize a raid on Meredith. When this heterogenesis mixture of bloomer boys reached Meredith they were met by 100 flat feet in the form of 50 policemen. Now wasn't that frustrating.

We will probably pick up the newspaper some morning and read: State boy meets girl; State boy loses girl; State boy builds girl.

WHEN SEVERAL students were arrested by the local police last week for participating in the panty raid, many students felt that there were no grounds for arrest. Three Stanford freshmen probably felt the same way after one of their extra-curricular activities.

It seems the three pixilated frosh were climbing up a fire escape in the wee hours of the morning. Much to the amusement of nearby sleepers they were making noises like a turkey and shouting, "I'm a turkey, you're a turkey," "Everybody's a turkey!" Unfortunately the campus cop didn't take kindly to being called a turkey. The three celebrants were booked for 'Gobbling on the fire escape at 2 a.m."

NEXT MONTH a friend of ours is going to marry one of the nurses on the Dix Hill staff. I suppose that he can truthfully say that he has a girl at Dix Hill who is just crazy about him.

TODAY'S SENIOR Picnic promises to be a real treat. Food will consist of approximately 1,000 feet of weiners, another 1,000 feet of rolls, and mountain of slaw and onions, and a vat of soft drinks. Since it is illegal to buy firewater with student funds, all intoxicants will have to be on a BYOL basis. A word of advice, don't get so skunk-drunk-to-the-gills that you end up in Honor Council in alphabetical order.

REMEMBER THOSE Senior Week schedules you received in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel? Bob Eberle, a member of the class publicity committee, worked from 12:30 until 5 a.m. inserting the handbills in the paper.

At 3 o'clock Bob stopped long enough to smoke a cigarette and throw a disgusting glance at the press which was turning out papers much faster than he was inserting: "I've certainly learned one thing tonight," he sputtered, "never try to fight the press."

I HATE to stay on the subject of Senior Week, but I thought the tickets given out for the free movie at the Carolina Theater were rather amusing.

The tickets were for "The Star of Bethlehem" Planetarium show and were to be used for admittance to "Bedeviled." Well, you'll have to admit that both the planetarium and the movie deals in "Heavenly Bodies."

Public opinion had it that Mr. John Motley Morehead had annexed the Carolina Theater and gained a monopoly on stars.

"THREE FOR The Show" certainly convinced me that it takes more than big name stars to make a good flick. As we watched plump Betty Grable go through her paces we were reminded of the time we sat in a dingy little club in Greenwich Village watching an obese stripper digging her grave with her torso.

There were too elderly gentlemen sitting at the table next to us talking quietly between sips of their "Nebraska Stumplifters." One of them with that "Gad, the old battle ax looks better than that" look on his face leaned over to his companion and said, "Just a fat old madam."

EVER WANT to write a best-seller? Nothing to it. All you have to do is to slander enough people so that they will have to buy a copy of your book in order to read what you said about them. In the meantime, their friends will buy a copy for gossip fodder and, of course, their enemies will need a copy to help prove their points.

You should make enough money from the sale of the book to pay off all libel suits. One prerequisite, go to law school. The money you save by being a lawyer will be your profit on the book.

Maultsby Gets Starting Nod vs. Wake Forest Here Today

Yankees Move Into First; Tribe, Tigs Win On Homers

CHICAGO, April 26 (AP) — Fast-balling Bob Turley of New York throttled Chicago with a fine one-hitter and 10 strikeouts for a 5-0 shutout victory which moved the Yankees into first place over the White Sox today.

It was the first one-hitter in either league.

Notching his third straight victory against no defeats, Turley allowed catcher Sherm Lollar the only Sox hit, a clean single to center, in the second.

In the only other games played yesterday afternoon in the majors, the Tigers topped Baltimore and the Cleveland Indians stopped Washington by identical 3-2 scores, and both games were won by home runs.

At Cleveland pitcher Bob Lemon rapped a homer into the right field seats in the fourth after the Tribe had picked up two runs in the first frame. Lemon now has a 4-0 record on the season.

Al Kaline's blast into the left-center field bleachers at Detroit gave the Tigers their win in the ninth innings.

Tar Heels Seeking Third Win In Loop

Tom Maultsby, workhorse of the Tar Heel pitching staff who has run into a lot of tough luck this season, will be the starter this afternoon as the Tar Heels take on Wake Forest at Emerson Stadium. Game time is 3:30.

Carolina will be going after its third ACC victory against five losses this afternoon. Maultsby was the winning pitcher in both UNC conference victories as he stopped Maryland and South Carolina.

The Deacs have stopped Carolina twice this year, 3-0 and 9-8. Lowell (Lefty) Davis was the pitcher who shut-out UNC, but Davis worked the win over Clemson Monday afternoon so will not be on the hill for the Deacs today.

Linwood Holt and Tommy Cole pose the main Deac offensive threats. Holt, who led the ACC in hitting early in the season, owns a .375 mark while Cole is hitting at .345. Holt also leads the ACC in runs batted in and triples.

Maultsby's 2-5 mound record on the season belies his performances. The righthander has been the victim of two shut-outs this season and twice the Tar Heels have been held to one run while he pitched. His other loss was to N. C. State in a relief role. He has worked more innings (58) than any other Tar Heel hurler, yet owns a respectable 2.16 earned run average.

After today's game the Tar Heels rest until the weekend when they head into Virginia and Maryland for a pair of games.

Tar Babies, Deaclets Battle At Wake Today

While the Varsity teams clash on Emerson Field here, the Carolina and Wake Forest baseball Frosh will be hooking up at Wake Forest. The Tar Babies own a 3-2 record on the season so far. One of their losses was a 14-3 lashing by the Baby Deacs earlier in the season.

UNC Set For Vital Clash With Miami

Forgetting momentarily Friday's vital match with Miami University, the Tar Heel tennis team rolled over Davidson 8-1 here yesterday for win number fourteen this year and its 28th consecutive win over two seasons.

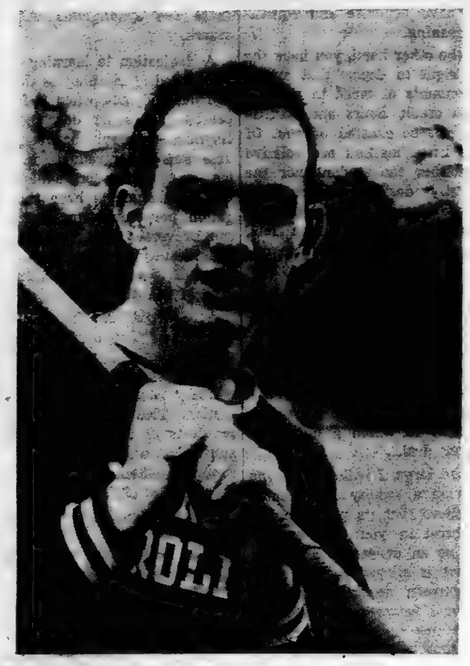
The Wildcats were able to take only the number one doubles match on the coolish overcast afternoon, with Lacy Keesler and Corvin Clark dropping Bobby Payne and Pete Greene 1-6, 6-1, 6-2.

No other matches went over two sets as all singles and two doubles were swept by Coach John Kenfield's boys.

The most important test of the long Carolina win streak will come Friday afternoon when the Miami Hurricanes, losers of only one match in six years against top-light competition, come to Chapel Hill.

Greene and Payne dropped behind 0-3 in the third set of their losing match after splitting the first two sets at 6-1. They showed signs of a comeback at that point, taking two out of three games, but Keesler and Clark bore down to pick up two more games for the match.

It was the twelfth time this season that the Tar Heels have held their opponents to less than two points in a match.



The summary:

SINGLES

1. Browne (UNC) def. Keesler 6-4, 6-4; 2. Payne (UNC) def. Clark 6-2, 8-6; 3. Bradford (UNC) def. Snead 6-0, 6-1; 4. Greene (UNC) def. Makepeace 6-0, 7-5; 5. Kerdasha (UNC) def. Thorpe 6-0, 8-6; 6. Thompson (UNC) def. Robinson 6-2, 6-1.

DOUBLES

1. Keesler-Clark (D) def. Greene-Payne 1-6, 6-1, 6-2; 2. Browne - Bradford (UNC) def. Snead - Makepeace 6-0, 6-3; 3. Thompson-Kerdasha def. Thorpe-Robinson 6-0, 6-2.

Athlete of the Week:

A record breaking vault of 13'3" against the University of South Carolina here Saturday qualified sophomore Richard Waters as this week's Tar Heel Athlete of the week. With that performance Waters took first in the meet and shattered G. R. House's five-year University mark of 13' ½". Waters was pressed by baseballer Connie Gravitte and shot putter Roger Morris for the honor. Gravitte is third in hitting and home runs in the ACC, while Morris took two first places in Saturday's meet to lead the Tar Heels. (Henley Photo.)

Life Insurance Policies Differ 3 Ways

1. COST
The difference between the amount deposited and cash available at Retirement is the real cost of your protection. Let us show you our low net cost. There is a difference.

2. COVERAGE
A satisfactory program for your family today, is not necessarily satisfactory 10 years hence. Proper counsel will avoid this error. The program should be tailored to fit the need.

3. CONVENIENCE
One of the great satisfactions of an insurance program is that it meets YOUR needs rather than the strict plan of some company. This demands great flexibility in settlement.

'SPEND YOUR EFFORT . . . ON THINGS THAT CAN SURVIVE'

What Do The Students Expect From Their University?

(Editor's note: This concludes Dr. C. Hugh Holman's speech to the second All-Campus Conference, which met last weekend. Dr. Holman, chairman of the College of Arts and Sciences, was chosen keynote speaker at the annual conclave, a meeting designed to promote student-faculty relations and to study problem areas within the University. Two-thirds of Dr. Holman's speech, "A 'Community of Purpose' Is Essential," and "What Does the University Ask of Students?" have appeared in the last two issues of this newspaper. This is the final third of Dr. Holman's speech.)

By DR. C. HUGH HOLMAN

But the achievement of this goal (of a tradition of study at UNC) does not rest exclusively in student reform. As partners in a true community of scholars, there are many demands which the students may justly make of the University; and here, too, I shall select a few that seem to me relevant to the basic problem of achieving the purposes of an educational institution.

I believe that the student may reasonably expect the University to do the following five things: (1) To present him with a reasoned and reasonable program of study, define it for him and consistently work to keep him informed of it and its objectives; (2) To maintain for him a rigorous, consistent and logical standard for the performance of his academic responsibilities.

(3) To give him a faculty dedicated to the purposes of education and committed to the idea of the student as both the basic raw material and the crucial produce of the educational process; (4) To deal with him always with equity, with justice and with firmness, but never to surrender to him the central functions of the faculty.

(5) And to bring to bear upon him and his problems a catholic interest and a warm human sympathy.

As I have indicated, I believe that the program of study which is followed at Chapel Hill is, at least in broad outline, well reasoned and broadly consistent with the best traditions of liberal education.

I am not convinced, however, that the University has attempted very vigorously in recent years to explain and to defend that program of study.

I think every student who enters the University should expect and receive at regular intervals an academic orientation which is not a "let's-all-study" pep rally, excellent and necessary as such rallies can be, but is a thoughtful and specific explanation of the program of study upon which he is engaged. This is the task of deans, advisers, teachers and everyone connected with the official family of the University.

I should like to see a detailed, frank, and open discussion of the University's program of study the subject of an all-campus conference such as this. We blame the students for not respecting or understanding our program, as I am doing today; but we do not very often make an effort to demonstrate to them the simple fact that a reasoned program exists.

The student has the right to expect the University to maintain rigorous, consistent, and logical standards for his work. We all know that standards of work that are either exceptionally high or exceptionally low undermine the program of study in a university.

You have the right to expect that there be some consistency of requirement and performance among the various courses and disciplines. You have the right to expect that you will receive not the grade you tell the instructor you need but always the one you actually earn, that you will not receive credit for a course which you have attended only 10 times in a semester, that a certification of competence in a subject matter for you and for your fellow-students have concrete and equivalent meaning.

On the other hand, you have the equal right to expect that excessive amounts of work in proportion to credit hours and certification not be exacted of you. Of course these matters are relative and neither the student nor the University desires to interfere with the prerogatives of the instructor; yet many of you feel, I expect, that this reasonable demand of yours is but partially met in Chapel Hill.

The student has a right to expect that he have a teaching faculty dedicated to learning and interested in communicating it, a faculty that sees the undergraduate student as the most precious commodity in which a university can ever deal.

By and large, I believe that you have such a faculty here, but I also believe that its presence and its interest in you is often obscured by an unreal kind of conflict that is alleged to be occurring between teaching and research and between graduate and undergraduate instruction. Competence in subject matter, continuing interest in that subject matter, continuning work with that subject matter — these you demand of a teacher, and these are synonimous with research.

A dedication to learning and to the spread of learning — this, too, you demand, and when it is truly present a teacher does not distinguish so sharply between graduate and undergraduate instruction that the undergraduate suffers. The students have the obligation perpetually to demand of the University that the best possible faculty with the highest degree of dedication perform the task of instruction.

As Alfred North Whitehead once said, "The whole art in the organization of a university is the provision of a faculty whose learning is lighted up with imagination. This is the problem of problems in university education; and unless we are careful the recent vast extension of universities in number of students and in variety of activities — of which we are so justly proud — will fail in producing its proper results, by the mishandling of this problem."

The student has the right to expect that his University will deal with him fairly, equitably, firmly, always with justice tempered with mercy, but never surrendering to an easy sentimentality or judging him by standards false to the world for which it is preparing him. Above all, I think the student has the right to demand of the University that it always recognize the central functions which it has in regard to him and, in giving him freedom, never surrender its own responsibilities to his control. That primrose path, which looks so attractive to everyone, ultimately proves painful and disastrous.

I think, that, in part, is what happened on the question of absences. The faculty, by failure to act under the old regulations, virtually surrendered class attendance control to the students, and the students pursued the primrose path to the beach and various other points out of Chapel Hill until finally our present unpleasantness had to occur.

The final demand that the student makes on the University is that it, as a community of scholars, be catholic in its interests and warmly sympathetic with vastly different situations, attitudes, and human problems. Somehow, within the pattern of a group of specialists dedicated to the sharply delimited interests of their specialization, the University must find a means of keeping a tolerant and universal sympathy with people and particularly with young people.

Within the limits of its broad purposes, the University must not make discriminating distinctions among attitudes, subject matters, professions. It must take a view of the world broad enough to value highly and simultaneously the physician, the sales manager, the poet, the preacher, the research scholar, the teacher; to submit them each with impartial love to the fructifying tradition of western man; and to train them with diligence and affection for their varied walks of life.

Here it is the communal aspect of university education which comes most obviously into play. I think we often fail on this point at Chapel Hill, but I think whenever we do it is because we have allowed ourselves to lose sight of our broad primary objectives while looking at special interests.

There are many aspects of the general question before you for this conference on which I have not touched. In fact, I have centered my attention almost exclusively on what is a slightly different question: What things in the University and in the student body are necessary to a rebirth of a love of learning on the campus at Chapel Hill? But that is, ultimately, not a different question, but the primary question about any university. All other aspects of an educational institution are peripheral to the central ones of its duty to teach young men and women and to preserve and enrich human learning.

Nothing else finally justifies the existence of this University but its preservation and communication of knowledge. Student life, student government, fraternities, sororities, newspapers and magazines, athletics — all these exist because first there is a community of scholars here, a program of learning.

I would close what may have seemed at times a carping address with the hope and expectation that we shall join hands and causes and light here in Chapel Hill a lamp of learning the reflection of whose gleam shall shine down the centuries in better men and better lives.

Out of man's past nothing survives but his art and his knowledge. I would challenge you to spend your major effort here on things that can survive.

Holsten, Sloan Disagree On What South Building Did In Panty Raid Case

An administrative dean and the local police chief disagreed yesterday on just what part the University administration had in the prosecution of student panty-raiders in Recorder's Court Tuesday.

A statement attributed to Chapel Hill Police Chief W. T. Sloan that "the big men in South Building" decided that nine student panty-raiders had to be tried in civil court was termed "absolutely wrong" by Dean of Student Activities Roy Holsten.

"It is not the policy of the University to interfere with civil action," Dean Holsten told a reporter. "However," he added, "we always ask the police not to make arbitrary arrests in these things."

Local Police Captain William Blake, when questioned about the arrest of the nine, declared yesterday: "In past panty raids, we didn't make any arrests. We used to turn the whole business over to South Building. This time we made arrests. This panty raid business is something that has been continuing for several years. And we realized that a stop must be put to it."

Captain Blake said that police arrested "only the agitators and students who were in front of the crowd making the most noise." He said that with a police force of only 14 to 16 men, it would have been impossible to arrest all offenders. "We arrested those being particularly disorderly," he said.

CONFLICTING STATEMENTS

The conflicting statements between Police Chief Sloan and Dean Holsten arose over a statement by student government leaders Joel Fleishman and Gordon Forester.

According to Forester and Fleishman, Chief Sloan said he would have been "happy" for the nine offenders to be tried in student courts, but South Building officials asked that civil suits be pressed.

Dean Holsten, in answering this charge he called "absolutely wrong," referred to a meeting called at the request of students. This meeting, according to Holsten, included student leaders, Chief Sloan, Captain Blake, Sergeant Coy Durham and Ray Jefferies. Fleishman and Forester were not present, but Manning Muntzing, Lewis Brumfield, Don Fowler, Herb Browne and Tom Creasy attended.

"We decided at this meeting," explained Dean Holsten, "that student government would handle the whole affair, but that we would not interfere with what the police had already done."

Forester and Fleishman have charged the administration "intended to bypass the student courts initially in order that the action of the Recorder's Court might deter future panty raids."

Dean Holsten said this was not true, emphasizing that the University has no control over the local civil police.

Fifth Annual Parents Day Set For Sunday

The fifth annual Parents Day will be held next Sunday, sponsored by the University's service fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega.

Letters of invitation to students' parents have been sent out by fraternity President John Molter, Charlotte, and Chancellor Robert B. House, encouraging the families of students to see the campus and participate in the day-long activities.

A late afternoon address by Presdinet Gordon Gray will climax the day, which will include church services, a picnic lunch, campus tours and a faculty reception.

The University Band, directed by Earl Slocum, will give a concert on the lawn near Davie Poplar following President Gray's talk at 4:30.

Special shows and exhibits are being arranged for the early afternoon by the Morehead Planetarium, as well as by the science and art departments.

A number of professors, instructors and members of the University administration will meet the parents at the reception in Graham Memorial from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

In case of rain President Gray's address and the band concert will be head in Hill Hall, Molter said.

WAYS & MEANS PARES DOWN LEGISLATION:

UP-Run Legislature Starts Work Tonight

By NEIL BASS

The 19th UNC legislative assembly will decide on a number of measures for the first time tonight.

Last week, at the first meeting, five resolutions and two bills were introduced before the Legislature.

Tonight, the first sample of what the 29-21 University Party plurality plans to do for the students will come out as part of the measures are voted on.

Of the total seven measures that were put before the Legislature last week, only two will be considered tonight.

The reason that most of the measures will not be voted upon tonight lies in the Ways and Means Committee.

One of the resolutions, however, was decided on last week. The Legislature suspended the rules to pass it.

OUT-OF-STATE HIKE?

The idea the Legislature was so eager to pass, even to the point of kicking aside usual parlimentary procedure, was a resolution opposing the proposed hike in out-of-state student tuitions.

The state Legislature is contemplating taking part of its subsidy — to the tune of $140 — away from students who cross state borders to get their education at Carolina.

Sound & Fury Production Starts Two-Day Run Tonight

"Satan's Saints," the Sound and Fury production for which the cast and technical staff have been working steadily for the past three weeks, will have its first showing tonight.

Tickets for the show, which will begin at 8 o'clock tonight and tomorrow in Memorial Hall, may be purchased for5 0 cents. Seniors will be admitted free tonight. They may obtain their tickets in Y-Court. Others may obtain tickets for either production in Y-Court, Kemp's, Town and Campus and the Graham Memorial information desk.

The cast of the production includes many of the students who appeared in Sound and Fury's first presentation earlier during the school year. These are Misses Bo Bernardin, Ulysses Lancaster, Patti Andrews, Jane Edwards and Blynn Durning.

Some of the student talent to be presented for the first time in "Satan's Saints" includes Bill Hayes, David Reed, John Devogt, Tom Gill, Miss Frances Bennett, Bob Hichs, Sue Fryer, Jim Sims, Milton Cooke, Elizabeth Huckabee, John Steed and Gary Nichols.

Lewis Brumfield, Geri Turner and Johnnie McClaren are "the main laugh-getters in the show," according to a Sound and Fury spokesman.

Among the musical numbers are "Two Ladies in the Shade of the Banna Tree" and "Won't You Charleston With Me?"

Musicological Society Slates Meeting Tonight

The Southeastern Chapter of the American Musicological Society will hold its monthly meeting in Hill Hall, tonight at 8 o'clock.

Dr. W. Thomas Marrocco, Professor of Music at UCLA, will give a talk on "The Development of Music Notation," illustrating with colored slides of famous manuscripts.

Marrocco is well-known in musicological circles in this country as well as in Europe through his research and publications on mediaeval music.

Emerson Stadium—Parking?

Phi Suggests Auto Solution

By PAT MCBANE

A bill suggesting an appropriate solution to the student-owned car dilemma was passed by the Philanthropic Literary Society at its regular weekly assembly Tuesday night in Phi Hall.

The bill stated, "We feel that . . . officials of the University will welcome and seriously consider suggestions of the students as to feasible programs for the enactment of the car regulations."

Article II provided for the conversion of Emerson Stadium into a parking lot reserved for cars belonging to the faculty and University employees. Proponents of the measure explained that when the new Studnet Union would be built, there would be even more need for a parking lot in this location.

The bill further explained that the baseball field would be moved to Navy Field.

Article III provided for the setting aside of the space beside South Building and a section from the Memorial Hall parking lot for cars belonging to administration and personnel having offices in South Building. Spaces within lots nearest their respective classes would be reserved for the physically handicapped.

All other parking areas on campus would be open for student parking.

The bill also suggested that Chapel Hill police place a parking limit on Fraternity Row, since two lots near the fraternities would be available to the students. This measure was brought forth" in answer to complaints of Chapel Hillians."

Speaking for the bill were Representative Matthews, who introduced the bill from the Ways and Means Committee, and Reps. Clay and Duval. Negative speakers included Reps. Downing and Glass. Speaker Frank Warren announced that the Phi will hold elections for fall semester officers at its meeting next week. All prospective members and guests are urged to attend.

The Phi meets on Tuesday nights at 8 o'clock on the fourth floor of New East.

Manners, Recitude, Duty & Faith Help

By ED YODER

The annual Leadership Training Program ended last night with a banquet address by President Gordon Gray of the Consolidated University.

President Gray, introduced by Chancellor Robert House, spoke on leadership and outlined a four-point program for leaders, including:

(1) Good manners.
(2) Devotion to duty.
(3) Rectitude.
(4) Faith.

"Good manners," President Gray said, "are essential to smooth and successful functioning of the society . . . or school. It can be demonstrated that all law is society's demand for expression of good manners."

Good manners, he emphasized "are the sum total of respect for others . . . the insistence on individual rights, tolerance, firmness, courage, stability and dependability." He admonished the student leaders to develop good manners in their work.

Devotion to duty, "a continuous follow-through," the President said, moving to the second of his four points, makes the difference between fine and mediocre leadership.

Rectitude is another demand in good leadership, he told the hallful of student leaders, faculty members and administrative officials. "Its pursuit is sometimes a very lonely objective," he said, but in his own personal experience in public service he most regrets "those times when I have failed to embrace rectitude due to various pressures."

Faith, his final demand, is required, he concluded, to implement the other qualities. He spoke of "faith in fellow man, in our country and its institutions, in the future and in oneself." The great faith, he said, is faith in God and "the hardest choice. But it is better to reject God than to make no choice at all . . . God requires choice, the essence of freedom."

Earlier in the program, Chairman Marilyn Zager extended welcome and Student Body President Don Fowler introduced the officers of student government and activities for the coming year.

A choral group from St. Anthony Hall, winner of the Valkyrie Sing in the fraternity division, and Chancellor House on his famous harmonica provided music for the banquet. Chancellor House played "Turkey In The Straw" and "Stairway To Heaven."

Brumfield Starts Off Meetings

By PEGGY WARD

Lewis Brumfield opened the second session of the Leadership Training Program yesterday afternoon with a one-man meeting of the Amphoterothen Society in which he acted as chairman, secretary and members.

The Interdormitory Council president demonstrated procedures and rules for conducting a business meeting of almost any organization or group.

Miss Marlyn Zager, chairman of the Leadership Training Program, introduced Tom Creasy, outgoing president of student government, who in turn introduced student government officers and leaders of various campus organizations for the coming year. Creasy explained the part that each organization and leader fits into the whole of the campus.

The meeting then divided according to the jobs to be performed by its members next year and discussed the differences between a leader and a pseudo-leader.

In discussion, the members in one group pointed out that the person's worth and ability in relation to others is illustrated by leaders who are equal to others in the group and who show consideration for the group, but pseudo-leaders feel inferior and must have constant proof of worth through power and prestige.

Leaders enjoy sense of communion and common feelings in a group and feel at ease, but a pseudo-leader has a constant need for attracting attention, said the group. A true leader feels that a large group is capable of governing themselves and has faith in the large group. A pseudo-leader feels that "the masses will be duped by someone, so why not me?" they said.

The leader has to show enthusiasm herself and should keep the group informed of what is going on, they decided, adding that leaders should be careful to present facts and not try to push over their own ideas, and that the tendency to try to influence the group should be curbed.

The pseudo-leader tends to choose the fellow workers who are weak and can be easily domintaed and pushed around. Delegation of work is the main duty of a leader so the feeling that to have the job well done he must do it himself, must be avoided, said the group members.

Frosh Camp Training Meet Sessions End

The second and last training session for next year's Freshman Camp counselors will be held tonight at 7 o'clock on the second floor of Phillips Hall Annex.

Mrs. Ida Friday will be the instructor.

Joe Clapp, publicity chairman, said a camp director will probably be selected tonight. He added that it is imperative that all prospective counselors be present regardless of whether or not they have attended the previous session.

Anyone interested in helping with the planning or in being a counselor may either attend the meeting tonight or contact John Riebel at the YMCA, said Clapp.

He said that, although the planning for the camp is in full swing, there is still time for anyone who wishes to work on the camp planning to do so.

Spring Carnival Plans To Be Discussed Tonight

The annual Spring Carnival will be the main item under consideration tonight at the University Club meeting at 7:30 in Roland Parker 2.

Everyone interested in entering a booth in the carnival, which is to be held May 13, is urged to send a representative to tonight's meeting, according to Joe Clapp, vice-president of the University Club.

Anyone who wishes to obtain an application for a carnival booth may get one by contacting Miss Annette Niven in 211 Smith.

Two Men On Panty Raiders

South Building and the Police Department have told two conflicting tales of the arrest of students at last week's panty raids. Here are both of them:

Police Chief W. T. Sloan, according to Joel Fleishman and Gordon Forester, said that "the big men in South Building had a meeting and decided that these boys were to be tried in Recorder's Court . . . I would have been happy for these boys to be tried in student courts."

Dean of Student Activities Roy Holsten said that Chief Sloan is "absolutely wrong." The only meeting held was one that was called by the students and included police and administrators, according to Dean Holsten. The University policy is to ask the police not to make arbitrary arrests and not to interfere with civil action, Dean Holsten pointed out.

Someone is lying, and we're not sure who.

However, student government still has jurisdiction over the offenders, so its rights have not been violated. It is regrettable, though, that student leaders did not take a firmer stand in requesting the administration to intervene.

The Daily Tar Heel thinks that the University administration should have requested the civil court to release the nine boys arrested. A police force of from 14 to 16 men cannot accurately determine just who the agitators in a panty raid are, and the fines imposed were excessive.

In the past, police have followed a policy of not arresting students engaged in so-called panty raids. But, according to Police Captain William Blake, "This is something that has been continuing for several years and we realize that a stop must be put to it."

Perhaps, Captain Blake has the solution to this confused, ridiculous affair—put a stop to the equally ridiculous (and equally expensive in damage to the University's reputation) practice of having panty raids.

Fee Raise Plug—II

We are going to follow up our efforts of yesterday morning regarding the proposed fee-raise amendment. We feel that a slight fee raise is justified at this time.

The opponents of the amendment have arguments which they plan to present in the interim between now and the vote next Tuesday. Their arguments are twofold: (1) That the State Legislature, before whom we have plead against any hike in student costs, would take any voluntary increase in student fees as an indication that we are ready to be taxed on a greater scale. (2) That costs are already at such height that a fee-raid on the average student's pocketbook can't be borne.

Both these arguments, we think, ignore certain facts and assume others about which none of us have any proof.

The first argument, that the Legislature would take a voluntary student fee raise as a sign of vast taxable wealth, assumes that the State Legislature is waiting over the student body with revenue talons which they will immediately fasten in our flesh. It assumes that they cannot distinguish between $5 and the larger sums they seek to install in student tuition and dorm-rent bills. The ability to be taxed a little is wholly different from the ability to be taxed a lot.

Is the basic cost required of students too high now? A North Carolina student who uses the University facilities pays about $350 per year, excluding food costs and that pool of funds he sinks in social expenditures and miscellaneous costs of one kind or another.

We fail to see how a change of five dollars in the statutory limit on student fees would change that figure enough to harm the average wallet.

The Ugly Head Of Crime—2A: Skivvy Parade

J. A. C. Dunn

ON TUESDAY LAST, at 2:30 p.m., there began in Recorder's Court in Chapel Hill the trial of nine UNC students all of whom were charged, in connection with the panty raid, with wilfully "disturbing, annoying or harassing women students at the University of North Carolina by rude conduct or by persisting unnecessary presence near the womens' dormitories."

Having peeled our hawk-like journalistic eye to the very core, we wandered around the Town Hall before the trials digging up all the little trivial points of interest that few people except hawk-like journalists are concerned with. We talked to one of the policemen who made an arrest, who said "I tried to explain to him, but he said he had a right to be anywhere on the campus he pleased. I said not during a riot and asked him to go home. He said "I ain't going no damn where! Those boys ought to think of their parents in a thing like this." We said, speaking personally, that when faced with a large irate policeman equipped with badge and revolver the last thing we thought of was our parents, and edged away. We went upstairs and talked to the parents of one boy, who had come to town for the occasion, were clearly nervous about it all, and who backed us tensely into a corner.

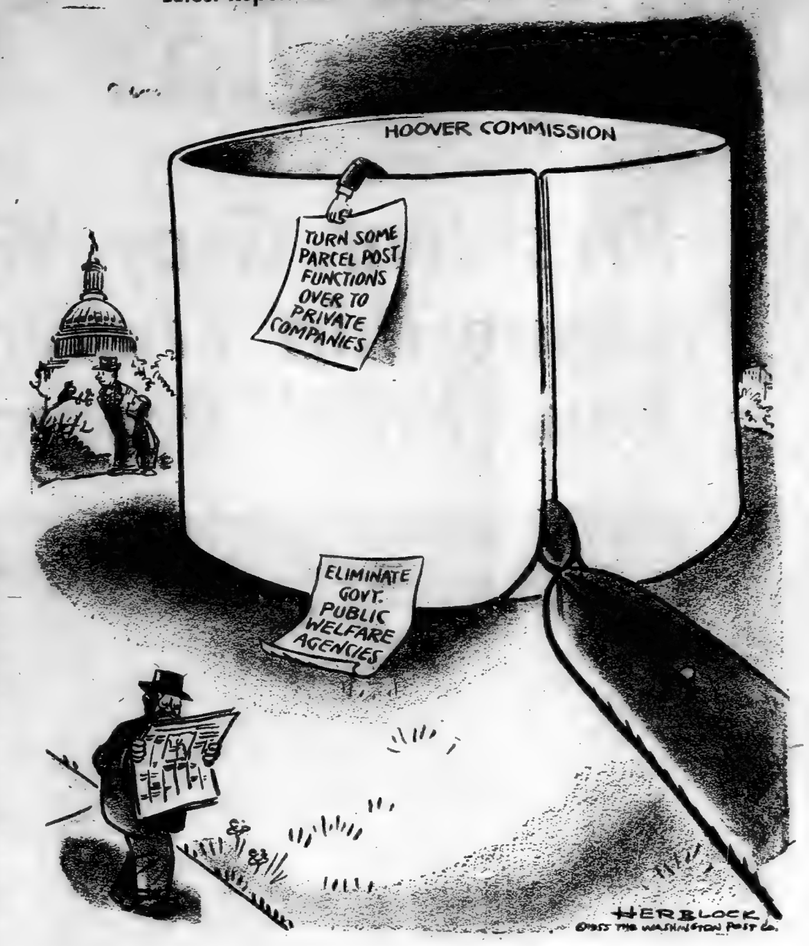
WE WENT AWAY and reclaimed our valuable second row seat in the packed court room and awaited events. A newsman with a camera strolled in and grinned fleshily. The policeman standing door guard looked completely bored. A twittering crowd of journalism majors streamed in with pencils at the ready. A well-dressed man with a book entered and sat down at one of the tables in front of the railing, at whom there was directed a comment from behind us, "That looks like an attorney type. Give him 99 years."



Judge Stewart, a young man with shell-rimmed glasses, a crew cut and a poker face, suddenly materialized behind the bench, the clerk intoned his little speech beginning with "O yes, O Yes, O Yes," the prosecuting attorney, cadaverous, pale, blond, with gigantic spectacles and a shattering blue suit, sat down and tapped a sheaf of warrants, about 5 more policemen strode in, and the show was on.

THE FIRST THREE cases, all involving traffic violations, were quickly dispensed with. Then the first panty raider was called; he appealed for a jury trial. The second boy was called, plead "not guilty," fought a losing battle against police testimony that he was "shouting and carrying on" by contending that he didn't see the policeman, and was called down with judgement deferred until the other cases were heard.

Of the next seven panty defendants, three appealed for a jury trial, two defended themselves but were found guilty, and three were defended by local lawyers. In the first of these latter, counsel for defense and 3 defendant's witnesses were overwhelmed by the penetrating cross-examination of the prosecuting attorney. The second was said by a policeman to have given a false name and lost his temper, not to mention having cavorted in the night without a shirt. The third (and last) defendant was the only one of the nine who came through unscathed: the judge's verdict was nol pros — not enough evidence. He happened to be carrying books when apprehended.

A PREDICTION ON FORMOSA:

Out Of The Twisting And Turning

Stewart Alsop

For those who enjoy guessing games, the following projection of events may have some interest. It may be, of course, dead wrong — it might be rather bitterly entertaining to read what follows six generally called "informed circles" in Washington.

First, the Chinese Communists will not now attack the off-shore islands of Quemoy and Matsu. The reasoning here is that, having made an ostensibly peaceful gesture in Chou En-lai's carefully imprecise offer to negotiate on the Formosa Straits crisis, the Chinese Communists could hardly turn right round and kick off a war.

This may turn out to be a very had guess indeed, of course. The Communist build-up opposite the off-shore islands continues unabated. Yet it is being rather confidently — perhaps much too confidently — assumed that the Communists will not soon attack.

ALARM AND EXCURSION

Instead, what is now believed to be in prospect is a long feeling-out period, a time of negotiatiing about negotiating — very much the same sort of thing that went on after Soviet Ambassador Malik made his famous offer in the United Nations to negotiate a truce in the Korean War. The feeling-out period is believed likely to continue for months, with many an alarm and excursion.

Chiang will certainly resist — and with excellent reason, especially as he was first persuaded by emissaries of this country to make his heavy commitment of troops in the off-shore islands. But eventually, it is believed, he will agree, simply because he has no alternative

The off-shore islands will thus in time be turned over to the Communists, on certain conditions. Condition number one is that the Communists will make some sort of vague promise not to attack Formosa, at least for the present.

No one seriously believes any more that the Communists are going to agree to any formal, permanent cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. Such a cease-fire would amount to abandonment of Chinese Communist claims to Formosa, and if anything is clear it is clear that the Communists will not abandon these claims.

What is now hoped for, instead, is some sort of face-saving formula. The face to be saved is, of course, that of the United States, simply because the United States cannot easily agree to abandon the offshore islands to the Communists without receiving anything whatsoever in return. But a vague statement by Chou En-lai, promising to seek a peaceful solution of the Forcosa question, or something of that sort, will probably suffice.

STRICTLY GUESSING

All this, it should be hastily and rather nervously repeated, is strictly a guessing game. But if things do work out this way, at least war will be avoided. And at least there will be another area in the world in which the lines are firmly drawn, and both sides know where they stand. Moreover — unless the Pentagon grossly over-estimates the capabilities of the Seventh Fleet — a de facto cease-fire will be imposed in the Formosa Straits, and a cease-fire has been the object of American policy in the area since the start of the crisis.

Yet there can be no disguising the cruel fact that this kind of settlement will be another big retreat in the face of Communist pressure. The extraordinary twistings and turnings of American policy in the last six months, moreover, will have the effect of making the retreat look even bigger than in fact it is.

Wrong Way To Stop Wrong Thinking

Roy Parker, Jr.

(The editorial we reprint below was written on the occasion of Junius Scales' conviction. The author, Roy Parker, Jr., is a former editor of The Daily Tar Heel and now writes for his father's Northampton County News.—Editors)

Who is more of a danger to the American Way of Life — avowed Communist party man Junius Scales, or the "undercover" FBI agent who testified last week in Greensboro federal court which is trying Scales about how he got into Scales confidence and then told of conversation with Scales?

About Scales, I have some knowledge. He was the well-publicized director of the "Southern Division of the Communist Party, USA," and his headquarters were at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. For about five years he and his activities were as well-known as the activities of the UNC football team. He spent long hours talking . . . to campus newspaper editors (including myself), to students, to faculty members, to next door neighbors in the mill town of Carrboro where he had a residence, to any number of "bull sessions."

And this FBI man was also one of Scales conversational buddies. Working in the tradition of that great Teevee Red Hunter—Herbert Philbrick of "I Led Three Lives" — he became a member of the party and spent long hours talking with Scales.

His testimony at the Greensboro trial was about these conversations. He related that, in conversation, Scales predicted that the United States would witness a revolution, would be "socialist" or "communist" (the agent said Scales used these words interchangebly). The man's entire tetsimony was a long report on Scales's spoken ideas on revolution. This type of testimony is the new and frightening kind that has been playing havoc with American civil rights for several years. For, it is in the new tradition that says that a man can lose his liberties for what he believes — for his ideas.

The testimony of the agent was, of course, only part of what the government will bring up. There will undoubtedly be testimony that Scales actually "fomented" revolution. The reports of Scales's conversations is, in the big scheme of the government's case, only corroborative, for it is still fortunately true that a man cannot lose his liberties for what he believes, and even members of the Communist Party still must be caught at revolution before they can be put in jail.

But, there is a thin line between what is revolution and what is honest dissent. At one end of the scale, there is the blowing up of defense plants, and at the other, there is the criticism of a town paving contract by a disguntled taxpayer.

Between these clearly defined limits, however, there is a great middle ground where the line blurs and liberty totters on a fragile tightrope. And, in recent years, ideas have all too often been more violently attacked as a reason for losing liberty than have actions. Thus, a McCarthy, behind the facade of the Senate, can aid in the steal of secrets from Pentagon files and never come to trial, while an Owen Lattimore can face jail because he wrote opinionated articles about the problem of China.

Many of thos who have been busy in this debasement of the right of dissent have justified their actions because "ideas are a much more potent force than action and must be stopped." And this is true. But the answer to ideas lies not in actions — in book-burning, in the jailing or ostracism of men who preach doctrine, the only effective answer is in the presentation of other ideas. If men have no more faith in the principle of freedom than to deny the free use of the mind and the right to express ideas arising from such free use, then we may as fell turn it over to "Big Brother" and let our ideas and our actions suit the whims of fascist authority.

By Prediction: War Century

H. Clay Feree

Winston-Salem Journal

Someone reminds us that when Neitzsche proclamied the death of God in the nineteenth century he predicted that the twentieth would be a century of war.

Thus far it has been just that. The two greatest and bloodiest wars of all time have occurred during the first half of the century with many smaller, more localized wars wedged between. Ironically this orgy of bloodshed, of genocide, has prevailed in what supposedly is the most enlightened and humane era of history.

War, of course, is not a phenomenon unique and peculiar to our time. It has marred the relations of clans, tribes, duchies, states and nations since the beginning. But as man gradually extended his frontiers of knowledge, as law began to supersede the duelling pistol and the sword, as individulas and groups began to learn that prosperity to all comes through cooperation rather than conflict, the men of good will throughout the world were led to hope that in our time the drums might be forever muffled, the sword sheathed and laid away.

But the coming of the new day of science and culture has brought the world no closer to a lasting peace. In fact national societies which seem more considerate than ever of the welfare of individuals within those societies, more anxious than ever to wipe out killer diseases, clear away slums and improve the lot of the impoverished and underprivileged, appear resigned to the possibly impending horrors of atomic war.

A few nights ago I saw a short play on television which reflects this great paradox. A famous speleologist and an explorer companion who loved the former's wife were trapped in a cave high in the Pryenees of Southern France. The men who had descended along the sheer cliff-like face of the mountain on a long rope were gone for hours without sending back any signal. The scientist's wife became terribly alarmed. She knew that both men loved her; she was afraid one had killed the other.

Finally other members of the party made the slow, perilous descent down the face of the mountain cliff. The two men were found. The speleologist had been seriously injured when caught in the rocks of a newly discovered cave. But both men were alive. Reading the unspoken question in the eyes of the woman he loved, his compainon said: "After all, five thousand years of civilization don't rub off too easily."

No, perhaps not for individuals. Most individual human beings today are pretty decent. Few would take advantage of an injured man in an isolated cave even if both loved the same woman. But what effect did five thousand years of civilazation have upon the Nazi and Communist perpetrators of genocide? Can five thousand years of civilization keep human hands from releasing the hydrogen bomb?

Murder committed by one man against another man seems so horrible, so wicked, so beastly, that the normal mind recoils from it. But whole societies seem to react much less humanely in relation to other societies. Murder seems to lose its grisly character as crime or tragedy when it becomes mass murder.

This phenomenon is doubtless the effect of mass psychology. The crowd is swept off its collective feet by, an alarmist, a persuasive demagogue or dictator, an idea or a sense of paralyzing fear. The persons who think are not articulate enough or influential enough to check the tide. They are engulfed and swept along protesting. Individually most members of the world mobs perhaps still deny the Neitzschean assertion. Certainly there has been throughout the West a resurgence of spiritual faith among individuals in the postwar period. It is their challenge, their task, their problem, to make the conscience of the individual the guiding spirit of the nations.

Bricker's Brick No. 2

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — That hardy perennial, the Bricker Amendment, returns to the scene this week in hearings before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee headed by Senator Kefauver. The amendment seeks to curtail the President's power over foreign policy.

Unless developments in the Red China-Formosa situation kick up an emotional storm which can in some way be made to focus upon the President's own actions, the amendment is dead for this session.

Senate leaders have quietly checked and find that the public seems to have lost interest in the proposal, at least for the present Senators confide that they are now under no pressures that will compel them to take an ostensible interest in it, if nothing stronger.

This is in striking contrast to the situation in the preceding Congress, when 61 Senators joined with their Ohio colleague in sponsoring his cherished project. Some of them were sincere. A substantial number, however, especially among the Democrats, were merely bowing to the heat put on them back home, principally by various patriotic organizations.

This year Senator Bricker introduced his amendment for himself alone.

It does not mean that all his old associates took cover. But he could not possibly have obtained 61 supporters again. By assuming the sponsorship alone, he has avoided a public confession of the extent of his losses.

The election returns tell part of the story. In at least four cases, Bricker Amendment signers of the 83rd Congress were replaced last fall by liberals who want no part of it. One of the newcomers is an Eisenhower Republican, Clifford Case of New Jersey. Three are Democrats: Senators Neuberger of Oregon, McNamara of Michigan and Kerr Scott of North Carolina.

It is probable also that the White House could gain a vote against the amendment in Colorado where another Eisenhower Republican, Gordon Allott, holds the seat occupied last year by Ed Johnson, one of the few isolationist Democrats. Johnson retired to run for governor and was elected.

All told, 13 of the Bricker co-signers of the 83rd are not in the present Senate because of death, defeat or retirement. Among the missing are Guy Cordon of Oregon and Homer Ferguson of Michigan, senior Republicans who had looked upon support of the amendment as a source of political strength.

Some Senators now feel that this was always a mistake and that what they took for the voice of the people was only an exceptionally cleyer and well-financed pressure group including both dedicated conservatives and the China lobby. Unquestionably, however, they generated real heat and among those affected was Lyndon Johnson of Texas, then minority, now majority, leader.

The Johnson solution was typical. He induced Senator George to enter the struggle and put his name on a milder substitute. Once in the fight George speedily became disgusted with the gyrations of Attorney General Brownell, who tried to dance on a tightrope stretched between the White House and the right-wing Republican faction. Since he had never admired Bricker, it was not too difficult then to stir George's missionary zeal.

The trouble was that the Senator from Georgia began to admire his own handiwork rather more than Johnson had wished. When a vote was achieved the George substitute failed by only one vote.

By common consent, because it is no longer being required to stave off the Bricker Amendment, the George substitute will not be revived

Quote, Unquote: The Seamless Coat Of Learning

Now in the process of producing a whole man which has been the dream of educators from Plato downwards, it is never wise or safe to treat fields of knowledge or experience as alternatives. The humanities, science, are not additives, but both of the essence; not supplementary but complimentary. "The alternative between a technical and a liberal education," says Whitehead, "is fallacious. There can be no adequate technical education that is not liberal, and no liberal education that is not technical; that is, no education that does not impart both technique and intellectual vision.

In simpler language, education should turn out the pupil with something he knows well and something he can do well. This intimate union of practice and theory aids both. The intellect does not work well in a vaccum." And in another place "There is not one course of study which is merely general culture, and another which gives special knowledge. The subjects pursued for the sake of a general education are special subjects especially studied: and, on the other hand, one of the ways of encouraging general mental activity is to foster a special devotion. You may not divide the seamless coat of learning."

Education is of course more than the acquisition of knowledge, for knowledge is sterile without attitude of purpose and may be dangerous without morality. The old question (propounded by Huxley) of "What knowledge is most worthwhile?" is therefore on the whole idle unless one also asks "For whom?" and "For what?" For no matter how much we theorize about it, in practice it deals with differing talents, temperaments, tastes, desires, and ideals.

It is moreover not only a giving but a taking, a reciprocal relationship, and there is never any surety that what it offers will be accepted and retained. Students take courses, but courses may not take students. That is one reason why we have different sorts of schools, with different emphasis and purposes. While we rightly deplore a too specialized education, we must not forget that a too generalized one can be as bad. As Arnold, Huxley, and Whitehead all imply, the general is bad if it is only general, just as the special is bad if it is only special.—Robert Gray at Simmons College.

DTH Sports Editor

We will not make the tactical error that a couple of our predecessors committed. Instead of coming out with a bold-faced story headed "Sports Writers Needed" and asking for bad jokes from every frustrated Bob Hope on campus, we'll stick our request in here so no one will see it.

One of the problems constituting getting out a sports page every day is that of doing it and staying in school, something that is highly recommended for DTH staffers. In order to give you the fullest sports coverage of campus and national events that is possible in limited space, more sports writers are needed. Any student who is interested in continuing (or getting a start in) sports writing is urged to contact the DTH sports deparment and we'll put you to work.

In its latest bit of scolding of member schools, the NCAA directed a reprimand to Oklahoma, first foe on Carolina's 1955 football schedule for next year. It was more of a "naughty, naughty" reprimand than anything else as it stuck a two year probation on the Sooners. Cincinnati was not so fortunate as that school was not only put on a year's probation but was ruled ineligible for any NCAA-sponsored event for a year.

Not that the wrist-slapping to Oklahoma and the real woodshed-type licking to Cincinnati are of any great significance to this school, but out of the furor surrounding the matter came an "explanation" of the NCAA's penalties. It seems that the guiding fathers of collegiate athletics have six degrees of harshness in their penalty bag. First they can reprimand a school, (2) reprimand it and censure it, (3) put it on probation for one year, (4) put it on probation for two years, (5) put it on probation and rule it ineligible for particular events, or (6) put it on probation, cancel its schedule, and suspend or expell it from the NCAA. It's up to the ruling committee to decide what number to draw out of the hat for certain violations.

Woods' Unassisted DP Halts Rally In Seventh

By BUZZ MERRITT

Big Tom Maultsby settled down after weathering a rough first inning here yesterday and shut out the Wake Forest Deacons the rest of the way to pick up a 3-2 win.

Maultsby allowed the Deacs two runs in the first but scattered five hits over the remaining eight innings to chalk up his third win against five losses this season.

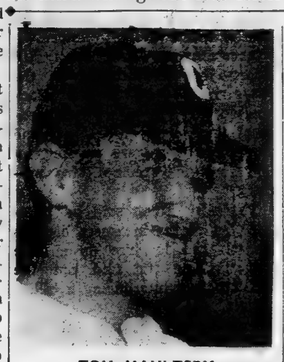
It was the Tar Heels' third ACC win in eight starts and their first over Wake Forest in three tries.

Maultsby received a big boost from third-baseman Jack Woods in the seventh when a momentary streak of wildness put him in hot water. He walked the first two men to face him and shortstop Harold Moore moved them up with a sacrifice. Maultsby then intentionally walked Luther McKeel to set up a force play. With the count 2-2, Wake rightfielder George Miller lashed a line drive to Woods at third who grabbed it and tagged the base for an unassisted double play to squelch the Deac rally. Maultsby proceeded to set the Deacs down in the eighth and ninth and get the win.

Behind 2-0 almost from the outset, the Tar Heels were forced to come back offensively to get the win.

They picked up their first run in the second when Woods singled and moved to second on an error. Maultsby came through on his own behalf with a single to right to score Woods.

Carolina picked up its winning margin in the third as Connie Gravitte opened with a walk and Will Frye poled a tremendous triple to left-center. Frye then scored on Harry Lloyd's sacrifice fly to center.



Wake hurler Jack McKinley got stingy after the third and limited the Tar Heels to three hits the rest of the way, but the locals had all they needed.

Right fielder Kenny Keller celebrated his return to the starting line-up by banging a single and a double in four trips. Maultsby rapped another single in the fourth to be the only other Tar Heel with more than one hit.

6 Intramural Games Slated

The final six games on the intramural softball regular schedule are on tap this afternoon. A meeting is scheduled Friday afternoon to make out pairings for the championship play-offs. The meeting is at 4:30 in the intramural office. All teams eligible for play-off competition are required to have an official present.

Today's schedule is as follows: 4:00, field 1, Phi Delta Chi vs. Pi Lambda Phi; field 2, Sigma Nu 2 vs. KA; field 3, Theta Chi 2 vs. Sig Chi 2.

Five o'clock, field 1, Everett vs. Graham; field 2, BVP vs. TMA; field 3, Med School vs. Grad School.

Yawkey Denies Ted Has Time

BOSTON, April 27 (AP) — The Boston Traveler today quotes Boston Red Sox owner Tom Yawkey as saying he hasn't given 'retired' slugger Ted Williams "an unlimited period" to decide whether he'll return to baseball.

In a story bylined by columnist George Carens, Yawkey is quoted as saying:

"I have nothing to add at this time regarding the future plans of Ted Williams. It is true I've talked with Ted, but I haven't set a deadline for his return. Neither have I given him an unlimited period in which to decied what he intends to do. Time alone will provide the answers."

Williams quit baseball after the 1954 season but this spring told Manager Mike Higgins he would inform him whether he would play or not.

Lacrosse Team Host To W&L

By AL KORSCHUN

The UNC varsity lacrosse team, fresh from its stunning upset victory over Duke last week, will take the field here today at 3:30 to battle the invading Washington & Lee Generals from Lexington, Va. Today's game will be the fifth regular season encounter for the Tar Heels who have a 1-3 won and lost record thus far this year.

The Generals, coached by former Maryland All-American Charlie Herbert, will invade the "Hill" today at 12:00 with a 30 man squad and will finish their North Carolina tour by playing Duke in Durham tomorrow. Little is known of W & L's strength other than that they were beaten 8-1 by the same Yale team which easily defeated Carolina earlier this season. However the Generals promise to be fairly strong as the squad is loaded with a number of experienced Baltimore players, and in addition the team is composed of 15 highly rated freshmen who are allowed to play under the Southern Conference ruling which permits freshmen to play their first year.

The Tar Heels, however, are both mentally and physically up for the game. The locals tasted victory for the first time when they bowled over Duke. The UNC stickmen have steadily improved since their opening loss to Williams College and should they play as aggressively and as well as they did in beating the Blue Devils, they should make it another Tar Heel victory.

Coach Greenbaum was especially pleased wtih the team's performance in recent practices and seingled out midfielder Sherry Smith and defenseman Ronnie Current for their fine showing Current, who injured his hand in the Duke contest, will nevertheless start at one of the defense positions. Besides Current, Greenbaum will start his usual lineup of Steve Trimble and Al Bryant at defense, Dick Baker, Smith, and Walt Sturdivant at midfield, Wilbur Jones, Hal Taylor, and Jack Spooner at the attack and Thorne Walker at goalie.

THE GIFT HORSE

Many of our friends will soon be graduating. What kind of gifts should we give them?

Here is no simple question. It is never simple to find gifts for people who have everything, and college students, as everyone knows, are the most richly endowed of mortals. They've got beauty and truth. They've got rhythm. They've got stout hearts, willing hands, and a clear vision that dispels the miasmas of the future as the morning sun sears away the last wisps of a cool night's fog. They've got heaps and heaps of money, as who would not who has been receiving such a huge allowance over four years of schooling?

What can we give them that they don't already have?

One infallible gift for the person who has everything is, of course, a stethoscope. New models, featuring sequined earpieces and power steering, are now on display at your local surgical supply house. Accompanying each stethoscope is a gift card with this lovely poem:

When you hear your heart beat,
When you hear it pound,
Remember me, your buddy,
William Henry Round.

If, by some odd chance, your name does not happen to be William Henry Round (you're laughing, but it's possible), here is another dandy suggestion for the person who has everything — a gift certificate from the American Bar Association.

These certificates, good at your local lawyer's, come in three convenient sizes: small, medium, and large. The small certificate covers title searches and writs of estoppel. The medium size covers torts, claim jumping, and violations of the Smoot-Hawley Act. The large one covers kidnapping, murder, and barratry.

If, by some odd chance, you don't know what barratry is (you're laughing, but it's possible), it is arson at sea. This interesting crime is called after Cosmo "Bubbles" Barrat, a captain in the British navy during the last century, who was addicted to burning his ships. One man o' war after another fell victim to his incendiary bent. The Admiralty kept getting crosser and crosser, but every time they called in Captain Barrat for a scolding, he would roll his big blue eyes and tug his forelock and promise faithfully never to do it again. Oh, butter wouldn't melt in his mouth, that one!

So they would give him another ship, and he would soon reduce it to a scattering of charred spars. He burned more than 120,000 ships before he was finally discharged as "doubtful officer material."

After his separation from the navy, he moved to Vienna where he changed his name to Freud and invented Scrabble.

But I digress. I was listing gifts for the person who has everything, and here is another one. This gift, in fact, is not only for persons who have everything, it is also for persons who have nothing, for persons who have next to nothing, for persons who have next to everything, and for persons in between. I refer, of course, to Philip Morris cigarettes. Here is the cigarette for everybody — for everybody, that is, who likes a mild relaxing smoke of fine vintage tobacco in a handsome brown package that snaps open with the greatest of ease. For those, if such there be, who like dull, nondescript tobacco in a package that requires a burglar's kit to open, Philip Morris is definitely the wrong gift.

Among the newer gifts that warrant your attention is a revolutionary development in the enjoyment of recorded music. This is the Low-Fi Phonograph. The Low-Fi, product of years of patient research, has so little fidelity to the record you put on it that if, for example, you put Stardust on the turntable, Melancholy Baby will come out. This is an especially welcome gift for people who hate Stardust.

Finally there is Sigafoos Shaving Cream, a brand new kind of cream that makes whiskers grow in instead of out. You just bite them off in the morning.

©Max Shulman, 1955

To Max's suggestion to give PHILIP MORRIS for graduation, the makers of PHILIP MORRIS, who bring you this column, add a hearty amen.

In The Majors:

White Sox Back Into First As Dropo Hits

CHICAGO, April 27 (AP) — Walt Dropo's two consecutive homers led a powerful Chicago attack which routed New York ace Whitey Ford for a 13-4 triumph and enabled the White Sox to recapture first place from the Yankees today.

NEW YORK, April 27 (AP)—Bobby Thomson spearheaded a 12-hit attack against his former teammates today with a home run and two singles as the Milwaukee Braves defeated the New York Giants 9-6 for their eighth victory in 12 starts.

DETROIT, April 27 (AP)—Catcher Frank House, batting only .222, slammed his first big league grand slam home run today to give the Detroit Tigers a 11-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles. It was Detroit's fourth straight triumph, and House clinched it early with his bases-loaded blast off starter Jim Wilson in the third inning.

PITTSBURBH, April 27 (AP) — Young Bob Purkey, the Pittsburgh Pirates' sophomore righthander, survived a shaky ninth inning to whip Chicago 4-1 today on four hits. The loss snapped the Cubs' three-game winning streak.

The 25-year-old righthander gave 1,044 chilly fans a brilliant pitching exhibition in going the distance for the first time in his major league career. He struck out six and walked four.

CLEVELAND, April 27 (AP) — A sacrifice fly by Bob Avila in the 17th inning today gave the Cleveland Indians a 6-5 victory over the Washington Nationals in the longest game in the major leagues this season.

Avila's fly to left field with the bases loaded and one out scored Joe Altobelli, rookie first baseman subbing for the injured Vic Wertz. The game lasted 4 hours and 46 minutes.

KANSAS CITY, April 27 (AP) — Cloyd Boyer, one of half a dozen "sore-armed" pitchers on the Kansas City Athletics' staff, breezed in with a three-hit, 6-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox today and moved the A's into a sixth place tie with Washington in the American League.

Frosh Hosting DHS Here 3:30

Carolina's freshman track team, winners of two out of three meets so far this season, will be going for its third win here this afternoon when it meets the Durham High School team at 3:30.

The Tar Babies have dropped the N. C. State Frosh twice this year while losing only to Duke's Blue Imps.

Following today's meet the Tar Babies have only one meet remaining on their regular season schedule, Duke here on May 7.

Tar Heel Golfers Meet Wolfpack There Today

Carolina's golfers turn back to Atlantic Coast Conference competition today when they invade Raleigh to battle the N. C. State Wolfpack.

The Tar Heel golfers, winners in four matches this season, will be playing their last match before competition begins May 5 at Athens, Ga., in the Southern Intercollegiates. Following that match, the Carolina team goes to Duke for a dual match before play starts May 13 in the ACC tourney at Winston-Salem.

Frosh Hit Hard To Get 9-5 Nod Over Deaclets

WAKE FOREST, April 27 — North Carolina's freshman baseball team rapped a dozen hits here today to get a 9-5 decision over the Wake Forest club. The Tar Babies came from behind to win after starting pitcher Charlie Cross's momentary loss of control gave the Baby Deacs a 5-1 lead.

The Baby Deacs touched Cross, former Statesville High School star, for two runs in the first and three more in the fourth, but that was all as Cross found himself and shut them out the rest of the way.

The Tar Babies pushed across three runs in the fifth and added two more in the seventh to go ahead.

Delon Lambert poled a home run with one on in the eighth to add to the Carolina margin. Four Tar Baby hitters had two safties each, and Jerry Bryson banged a triple.

The Tar Baby cause was aided with two double plays which stopped Wake Forest scoring threats.

The auditions are open to everyone.

—Legislature—

The reason the Legislature won't have the chance to cast votes tonight on three of the resolutions lies in its "abstractal" nature.

According to Jim Exum, UP floorleader and chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Jack Hudson (SP) has introduced measures that sound "nice, good and rosy," but they were too abstract and were "not accomplishing anything."

Therefore Exum said he planned to give the measures back to Hudson and let him do a little "investigating to find out the facts" before introducing a bill.

'JUNK MAIL'

To many observers, this unprecedented action by Exum was reminiscent of a statement made by Jack Stevens, former UP floorleader.

Stevens said in a report given at a UP meeting that the SP had passed more bills than the UP — 23-8 at that time — but that most of the measures the SP had passed were so much "junk mail."

Hudson could not be reached for comment about the apparent rejection of his ideas; but Tom Lambeth, another SP member, said the opposition to the raise in out-of-state student tuitions that the UP championed was an "abstraction," too.

The two bills the 19th assembly will consider deal with the spending of money.

One, the Legislature will probably shove out the window, and the other should get the go sign without difficulty, according to a report by the Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee doesn't want to give money to the junior class for a picnic because "there are too many other activities going on now," but it does want to give money to the All-Campus Conference because "it has already spent it."

Free Tickets

All seniors may pick up their free tickets for tonight's performance of "Satan's Saints," presented by Sound and Fury. Tickets can be obtained at the Alumni Membership booth in Y-Court.

"Satan's Saints" will be presented tonight and tomorrow night, but seniors will be admitted free of charge only for tonight's performance.

Film Series

The Eternal Mask, a Graham Memorial Film Series presentation, will be shown tonight.

The picture will be shown in Gerrard Hall at 9 o'clock. Season tickets only will be admitted.

Administration Announces Proposal For 'Compulsory Registration' Of Automobiles

Will Ask Parents To Aid Campaign

By ED MYERS

The administration announced yesterday a proposal to introduce next fall a program of "compulsory registration of automobiles and strict enforcement of regulations."

This is the action the administration has taken as a result of the Trustee Visiting Committee's recommendation that UNC attempt to improve the regulation of the use of cars and that it consider seriously the question of possession of automobiles by undergraduates."

"Our conclusion is that we do not at this time favor arbitrary denial of the privilege of keeping an automobile to any class of students except those who forfeit the privilege as a result of legal or disciplinary action," said Weaver.

According to the proposal, after next fall's registration "a letter must be sent to the parents of all students under 21 years of age who indicate that they will keep a car. The letter will remind the parents of the University request that they not permit their son or daughter to keep an automobile in Chapel except in instances of genuine need for one and ask that they file with us a notice of consent."

Another proposal is ". . . administrative enforcement of certain minimal requirements for keeping a car."

"In this," Weaver said, "we would seek student cooperation and support. For example, persistent violations of traffic rules or other abuses would lead to action ranging from a warning and probation to suspension from college."

The statement goes on to suggest a joint conference of town and University representatives looking toward improved mutual assistance in dealing with the problem of traffic control.

Discussion of the Visiting Committee's recommendations was conducted in the Council on Student Affairs, at which the student body president and other student representatives were present, along with the Administrative Board of Student Affairs and the Student Activities staff.

Student Legislature Again Postpones Fee Raise Bill

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature voted last night to postpone the proposed fee-raise referendum for another week.

This is the second time the date for voting on a fee raise has been moved to a later date.

The Legislature decided the fate of two bills on an otherwise comparitively lax agenda.

The two measures voted on were: 1) A bill to appropriate $135 to the junior class for a "picnic," and 2) A bill to appropriate $450 to the All-Campus Conference.

The conference appropriation passed without opposition.

The appropriation for the junior class failed despite an appeal by class President Bill Sanders.

The reason the various representitives gave for rejecting the bill were that the Legislature, in Larry McElroy's words, "ain't got the money;" and secondly, it might pave the way for other "special legislation," Again in the words of McElroy, Student Party floor leader.

REFERENDUM — 'ADVERSE EFFECTS'

The referendum on student fees was scheduled to be held on May 3, but a motion by Bob Young (SP) called for the vote to be put off until May 10.

The reasons Young gave for shelving the referendum on the shelf temporarily again were: 1) The newly elected Elections Board chairman had not had time to "set up" the board for a referendum, and 2) The state Legislature will be discussing "a dormitory rent hike on the same day."

Young emphasized, and the Legislature endorsed, that while a "self-imposed" raise by the students might not be incentive for the state Legislature to raise dormitory rents, there might be some "adverse effects" if the student body passed the referendum at this time."

If the state Legislature passes the dormitory rent-hike proposal, it will cost dormitory residents $30 more to stay in University residences.

If the student body passes the fee-raise referendum on the 10th of May, the student Constitution will be opened for a $5 raise per student per year in student fees.

APPOINTMENTS APPROVED

Seven new presidental appointees to student government offices were given endorsement by the 19th assembly.

The appointments were announced yesterday by student body president Don Fowler. The various appointees are listed individually elsewhere on page one.

There were seven measures slated to be decided by the Legislature, but the Ways and Means Committee declined to present three of them to the body for consideration.

The reason Jim Exum, chairman, and the committee gave for not putting the bills and resolutions before the body was that they were "so abstract" the Legislature couldn't do anything about them anyway.

Automobile Committee Is Named

Student body President Don Fowler, who promised action on the traffic problem during his campaign, yesterday appointed a traffic commitee "to expediate this ruling through student government."

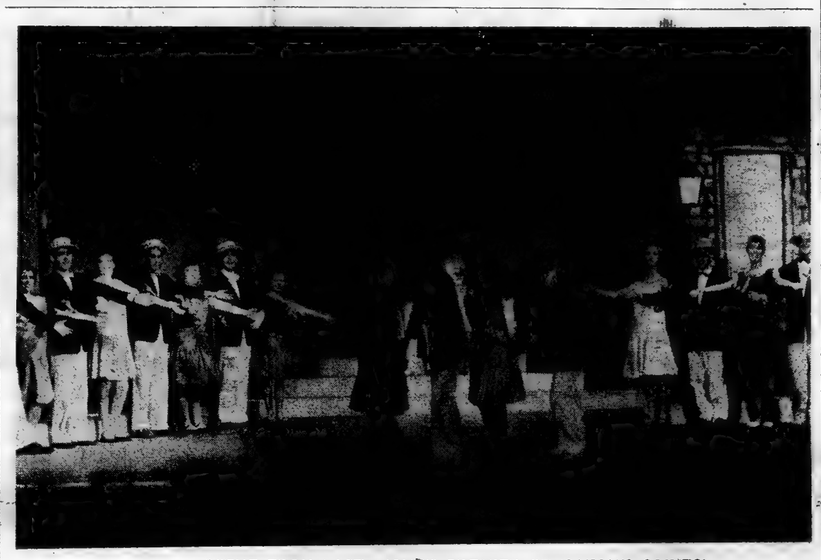
The ruling referred to is the action taken by the administration yesterday to "introduce next fall a program of compulsory registration of student automobiles and strict enforcement of regulations."

In making his appointment, Fowler said, "Layton McCurdy is the chairman of this committee and is fully aware of our position with the trustees regarding student cars. I am confident that he and his committee will receive full cooperation from the administration and the student body."

The following are the members of the new traffic committee:

Chuck Flack, Gordon Forester, Jim Monteith, Eric Jonas, Bob Mason, Gordon, Folley and Jim Dackery.

Germans Club To Bring Les Brown



The Germans Club's final fling for the year will get underway May 7 when Les Brown and his "Band of Reknown" come to Carolina, announced new Vice-president Pat Patterson yesterday.

The Germans Club recently elected T. O. Moore, SAE, to serve as president for the coming year. Other new officers are Patterson, Noel Sullivan, ATO, secretary and Bob Mason, DKE treasurer (re-elected.)

The outgoing officers are Frank Roddy, (Sigma Chi.) president, Jake Roundtree, PiKA, vice-president and Archie Croxton, Phi Gamm, secretary.

Spring Germans festivities will include a concert at 4 p.m. Saturday afternoon and a dance in Woollen Gym at 9 p.m.

The Les Brown Band has won many awards for outstanding music through the years. It has been named the number one band by Billboard Magazine, Orchestra World, Campus Magazine and major national disc jockey polls.

'Sound And Fury' Makes Hit; Large Audience Rises To Cheer

By HARRY BURLEY

Last night, a near-capacity crowd witnessed the finest student production seen in Chapel Hill in some time.

According to several old-timers, this show is the first in fifteen years or so that has been good enough to cause the audience to stand up and cheer.

At 8:20 an impatient audience was itching for a show, and they really got one. Right from the opening number, which was a singing and dancing extravaganza, the audience was electricaly receptive.

The first scene was sparked by flapper-girl Stella, played by Miss Johnnie McClaran, who then walked away with the show. Miss McClaran is a natural, and her exuberant performance alone is well worth the price of admission.

One of the highlights of the first act was a dynamic routine entitled "What Are We Laughing At?" This routine and also "Riviera," a number done by the entire cast, did much to offset a spotty but witty script, which was about ten inches too long.

The best number in act one, however, was done by Miss Bo Bernardin. This song and dance was a colorful bit of production called "One Man Ain't Quite Enough."

Lewis Brumfield's familiar and refreshing personality seeped from behind the bars of a train station ticket window. He provided good comic filler material.

The first act was rounded out by a cute number called "You've Got to be a Little Crazy."

The second act was even better than the first. Miss Frances Bennett did a particularly fine job as Miss Abercrombie, the head-

The Sound and Fury production will be held again tonight at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall. Tickets may be purchased for 50 cents at Y-Court, Kemp's, Town and Campus and the GM information desk.

Business Fair Gets Underway

Edward Margolin, program coordinator of the Office of the Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation, recommended to delegates Wednesday at the Southeastern Transportation Conference that transportation firms should, first, place greater reliance on competitive forces in rate making and, second, maintain a modernized and financial strong comcon carrier system.

The conference is being sponsored by the Alpha Tau Chapter of Alpha Kappa Psi, professional business fraternity at their 1955 Business Fair.

Yates Honor Chairman

Ogburn Yates, junior from Asheboro, was elected chairman of the Men's Council this week.

Yates, also senior class president, succeeds Herb Browne, Columbia, S. C.

Charles Katzenstein, New York City, has been elected clerk, succeeding Yates. Tom Moore, Winston-Salem, is the Men's Council's representative to the Student Council.

Judge Says Students Received Fair Trials

By DELAINE BRADSHER

In answer to a question as to whether the opinion floating around campus that the four boys convicted of taking part in the panty raid received an unfair trial, Judge William S. Stewart said yesterday, 'I had not heard of that opinion and I dissent on it."

Judge Stewart, who is the son-in-law of Chancellor Robert House, said the boys who asked for a jury trial and those who appealed would have to appear at the June 20 session of Orange County Superior Court.

Gordon Forester, student who has investigated the panty raid case, said yesterday, "According to several student government leaders with whom I have talked, the decision to have the nine students tried in Recorder's Court was not agreed to in the meeting called by Dean Roy Holsten."

Forester is a member of the Men's Honor Council, former president of the Graham Memorial Activities Board and recently initiated into the Order of the Grail.

Forester said "Manning Muntzing, also present, stated that he was against the decision which the student government was called on to agree to."

"Dean Holsten has stated that South Building has no control over the civil authorities. I hope this is true, but I believe Chief Sloan when he says that he would not have prosecuted the boys in Recorder's Court had South Building not insisted on it."

Lewis Brumfield, who was present at the meeting, said, "When we were first presented with the possibility of having the boys tried by civil court we were all against it. Finally we acquiesced in the decision. I don't think it would have made any difference what student government officials thought."

UNC Band Elects Hester President For Next Year

The UNC Band has announced its newly-elected officers.

Scotty Hester was chosen president; Johnny Wooten, vice-president; Eddie Bass, secretary-treasurer; John Martin, quartermaster, and Don Jefferson, publicity manager.

Retiring officers are Ken Pruitt, president; Hubert Wainer, vice-president; Johnny Wooten, secretary-treasurer; Charles 'Culberath, quartermaster, and Don Hall, publicity manager.

The Concert Band has five remaining performances this year.

Women Orientation Counselors Named

Miss Sara Alice Jackson yesterday announced 73 women's orientation advisors for next fall.

Miss Jackson, chairman of women's orientation, named the following coeds as advisors:

Misses Joan Adams, Grace Danhoff, Margo Edwards, Susan Hayes, Mary Jordan,

Misses Charlotte Lilly, Betty Ann Neas, Bobbie Newman, Pat Oliver, Ann Penn,

Misses Susan Quinn, Allene Wellons, Mary Jo Wright, Peggy Funk, Betsy Garvey, Misses Mitzi Hall, Ann Johnston, Virginia Johnston, Janis Lovelace, Edna Rodgers,

Barefoot Day

The senior class will continue celebration of Senior Week today with "Barefoot Day."

All seniors will attend their classes minus shoes.

BULLETIN

John W. Clark, member of the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees, has been charged with man-slaughter, it was learned last night.

According to state highway patrolmen, Clark's car ran into the side of a vehicle being driven by S. A. Brown of Asheboro; and Brown's wife was fatally injured.

The wreck, according to patrolmen, occured last Friday.

GM Dance Tomorrow

Graham Memorial Activities Board will sponsor an informal dance tomorrow night from 9 until midnight at the Carolina Inn Ballroom to conclude the week-long celebration of Graham Memorial's 23rd birthday.

Music for the informal affair will be provided by Jim Crisp and his 12-piece orchestra. Soft lights and refreshments will round out the informal atmosphere, according to a GM spokesman.

The dance will be held in honor of the senior class and their dates, said the spokesman, who added that there will be no admission charge.

He expressed regret that bad weather earlier in the week necessitated postponing the jazz concert and blanket party originally scheduled for last Monday night. He said the slight confusion caused by the postponement and bad weather prevented large attendance when the jazz concert was held in the Rendezvous Room Wednesday night.

CENTENNIAL CONVENTION:

Five From UNC Attend Y Meet

By AMY COOKE

Five delegates from UNC's YWCA recently attended part of the National YWCA Centennial Convention in New York City.

The delegates were Misses Nancy Whisnant, Marietta Everett, Amy Cooke, Ann Jones and Mrs. Kirsten Milbrath. The UNC delegates were among the 60 student delegates and the 3,400 delegates from Community Ys, Y-Teens and the foreign division attending.

Voting on policies of the YWCA for the next three years, hearing Harold Stassen, Dr. Rollo May, Dr. Ralph Bunche, Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Dr. Paul Tillich and Dr. John C. Bennett (Union Theological Seminary) were among the highlights of the sessions which the UNC delegates attended.

One of the discussion groups which the delegates participated in gave several answers to the question of "What is the YWCA?" Some of these answers were a fellowship of Chirstian women, a community agency, a channel for women to understand themselves and the world they live in, a place for leadership training for community affairs and pioneers inhuman relations.

Harold Stassen told the group that world peace through disarmament is one of the areas in which the YWCA can work in the years to come.

The convention took action on the basic standards of the YWCA and on a statement of inclusiveness which resolved that each YWCA evaluate its progress in racial inclusiveness.

DI DEFEATS RESOLUTION:

Admit India To United Nations?

By LARRY McELROY

The Dialectic Senate debated the query, Resolved, that India should be admitted to the United Nations Security Council in place of Nationalist China, with the Debating Society of Woman's College in Greensboro this week.

Opening the debate before the forensic group at Woman's College, Steve Moss asserted that Nationalist China is no longer powerful and should not be allowed to remain on the Security Council.

The first negative speaker, Pebley Barrow, pointed to the improbability of Nationalist China's consenting to her removal from the council. This consent would be necessary, he said, since Nationalist China has a veto in that body.

Jim Holmes spoke of the corruption of Chaing Kai-Shek and praised the good intentions of Nehru and the industrial progress of India.

Miss Frances Burrows said that the removal of the Nationalist China would have a bad effect on the free world. She said Formosa is a stronghold of freedom.

The third affirmative speaker, Scotty Hester, contended that the removal of Nationalist China would have a good effect on the free world.

Larry McElroy, the last speaker, spoke of the corruption of the Grant and Harding administrations and said that Nehru was a Machiavellian power politician who will strive to be on the winning side.

The query failed by a vote of the two societies, 15 to 9.

Refreshments were served after the debate.

The Car They Save May Be Your Own

The civil war is over, for awhile at least. Student government and the University administration, leaving their clash over the treatment of panty-raiders, have put their heads together in an effort that may well prevent the Trustees from banning student autos.

Much in the manner of their early warnings about Saturday classes, the Board of Trustees have been complaining about student cars, saying something must be done to regulate them. Each year, as in the case of Saturday classes, the Trustees have worded their student car objections a bit stronger.

Finally, the Trustee Visiting Committee, in its latest report, said firmly that regulation of cars must be improved; it went on to suggest that the University adminisraion "consider seriously the question of possession of automobiles by undergraduates, particularly those living on or near the campus."

Now, to prevent an even stronger Trustee action, the administration has made auto registration compulsory. At the same time, the student's privilege to keep a car on campus has been given solid backing by the administration.

Student President Don Fowler, to help ensure the privilege of keeping cars is not revoked, has anointed a Traffic Committee to work with the administration.

Apparently, President Fowler agrees with Dean Fred Weaver when the dean says that restricting student cars "is not seen as fitting into the pattern of the traditional relationship between this University and its students."

The Daily Tar Heel commends President Fowler for his foresight in this matter. It is heartening to see him working to maintain "the traditional relationship between this University and its students," a pattern of cooperation when students agree and objection when they do not agree with the administration.

This Traffic Committee can show the Trustees and the administration that students can accept the responsibility inherent in the right to drive cars in Chapel Hill.

The Best Laid Plans Of Animals And Men

Karl Marx would walk from the movie "Animal Farm" with tears in his eyes. Behind the antics of Snowball, the ropcine dictator, and Napoleon, the noble horse—and all the rest of the creatures—Mr. Orwell designed a pile-driving expression of pessimism. "Animal Farm" is the last testimony of a man's bitterness when the hopeful degenerates.

Mr. Orwell, early so sympathetic with the aims of the Soviet Revolution, later so profoundly disillusioned, steered between the attitudes we hold orthodox. Gorky warned from the first gunshot that the movement had intolerable aspects. But few, and Orwell was not among them at first, could see the immediate worth of Gorky's warnings.

Mr. Orwell lived to see his best hopes of Marxism put to ashes. He wrote two novels centered about these burnt up hopes—1984 and Animal Farm—and the last dark sentence of Animal Farm pinpoints them best. The pigs got the upper hand and the other creatures > looked from pig to man, and from man to pig, and from pig to man again; but already it was impossible to say which was which.

Drew Pearson reports that Senator Bricker has other motives for his amendment to limit Presidential treaty-making power than "fear of excessive executive power." The migratory gamebird treaty between the United States and Canadi entails certain restrictions on his duck-hunting.

The blurred distinction between pig and man can be seen elsewhere than in the pages of Animal Farm. The noblest experiments, as Mr. Orwell would have us see, can fall to the greed of the human animal.

The Ugly Head Of Crime—2B: In Retrospect

J. A. C. Dunn

LAST TUESDAY'S TRIAL of the nine boys apprehended by the police during the panty raid revealed to us three rather important things which we think it worth while to retail in this column.

To begin with we were struck by the calmness and assurance of all the students who took the stand. Without exception they were fairly young men, correspondingly inexperienced, all presumably strangers to direct participation in a legal trial; and yet none of them "clutched" when he testified, none of them either lost control or froze. Each student, whether he was a witness or a defendant, told his story, answered questions, explained details quite calmly and clearly. We admire them for this.

TO BE SURE, the atmosphere of informality in the court was fortunately in their favor. People wandered in and out, there was a gentle hum of behind-the-hand conversation through the room, the overhead fans turned slowly and lackadaisically; the policemen, when they testified, were not harsh or vindictive, and indeed, in the cases of the boys who defended themselves, we got the distinct impression that the officers who testified were making a definite effort to help the defendant when he questioned them; and above all, the court room was filled almost completely with UNC students who stood behind the nine boys in their predicament, who actually hissed one of the judge's decisions, and who laughed appreciatively at frequent intervals never at but always with the student witness.

But all the same, a court of law is a fairly serious place, and the conduct of the students who showed up to either defend themselves or testify seems to point up to us the fact that people are usually at their best in an emergency.

THE SECOND OUTSTANDING characteristic of the trials was that whereas the nine defendants were termed as being "So and so versus the State of North Carolina," curiously enough not one of them appeared to have any attitude of either bitterness toward the court or of contrition for what he had done. Every boy gave us the impression that he felt (a) he had done nothing particularly wrong in joining a panty raid, and paradoxically (b) despite this fact he felt no anger at the law for putting him through all the trouble and anxiety of a trial. They seemed to assume that a panty raid was something that one joined as a matter of course, as a simple evening's entertainment, and the fact that the police (or the administration) questioned the propriety of this entertainment constituted a conundrum of youth to be carefully made clear to a rather staid older generation. And at the same time, those nine boys seemed to realize that the law was not trying them out of spite.

AND THAT POINT of a court of law's being a serious place brings up our third observation: insofar as the conduct of the spectators was concerned, their appreciation of the situation seemed to grow with each succeeding case.

The first two defendants were treated more as a game than anything else; but beginning with the third panty raider the spectators who jammed the courtroom until there was not even standing room in the rear began to realize that those trials were no game; that the students who requested a jury trial would go on record as having been judged in a criminal court, and that those who stood trial then and there in Recorder's Court were being fined $50 and costs; undergraduates were watching other undergraduates be touched (quite hard) by the long arm of the law.

We think it sobered them somewhat. We could be wrong, but we think so.

DOWN ON ANIMAL FARM:

After The Pigs, Who Comes Next?

Ebba Freund

Louis de Rochement's movie "Animal Farm," based on the book by 1984 author George Orwell, is one of the most frighten ing movies made in recent years. More bitter than 1984, "Animal Farm" is a cruel satire on totalitarianism born out of revolution. The petrified helplessness of the "peasant" animals in face of the inevitable rise of the rule of the power-mad pigs is perhaps the most significant point the movie makes.

In this animal fable, Orwell and de Rochement are satirizing man's inhumanity to man. The bitterness of the satire is comparable to Swift's "A Modest Proposal" in which he proposed that the poverty and population problems of the Irish be settled by cannibalism.

The plot of "Animal Farm" is terrifying in its simplicity. The animals stage a revolution to over-throw their human master, who has continually maltreated them. After he has been ousted, the animals are equal. "The pigs, who spearheaded the revolution, also set up the machinery for peace. Snowball, the leader, envisions an educated farm with fewer workdays brought about by power from a windmill. But Napoleon, a big gray glutton of a pig, ousts Snowball and with the aid of a gestapo of ferocious hounds, takes over Animal Fram. The windmill is built, but all the benefits of the electic power go to the pigs who have moved into Jones' house. Animal Farm now becomes a society where "All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than other animals." Finally, as they had done before, the animals rise up against tyranny and cast out the pigs. Although the end is Triumphant and Glorious, one cannot help but wonder: After the pigs, who next?

Part of the effectiveness of the movie comes from the use of the cartoon media. A "willing suspension of disbelief" is easier to come by in a cartoon because fantasy is so removed from reality that it does not try our prejudices and attitudes.

We have become accustomed to cartoons in which nobody ever really gets hurt. The villainous cat may get his head bashed in or his hair singed off, but in the very next panel he returns, completely whole and healthy. In these cartoons there is an easy feeling of fellowship between the villain and the hero, between the chased and the chaser. Because of this, in spite of their cruelty, these Hollywood cartoons never frighten an audience.

Animal Farm, in spite of its fantastic nature is frightening; characters are killed and they stay killed. The cruelties inflicted by the pigs causes real suffering. The chase scene, which in most cartoons is a source for much low comedy, is horrible because it is a serious chase in which the dogs persue their victim in order to kill him. This absence of comedy in a media form which we have come to expect slapstick makes the satire doubly horrifying.

Perhaps the only complaint about Animal Farm is that sometimes it makes its point so obvious that the movie becomes propoganda. This is especially true of the ending, which seems to have been tacked on by some mccarthyism-minded committee in order to show that the right way (the American way) always triumphs. The point that Animal Farm makes is that most of the time the pigs are in power.

'What Do You Hear?'

Time For A Start

(St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

Most of the Southern states' arguments in the Supreme Court school segregation case appear to be aimed not at carrying out the Court's opinion in an orderly way but at postponing as long as possible the day when the southern states face up to the opinion.

We do not believe that these arguments represent the true feelings of a majority of responsible Southerners. In our opinion they represent the vague foreboding of politicians who are afraid to take any other attitude on the subject than the conventional one they have taken in the past.

The people of the southern states are loyal Amricans and we are confident that the great majority of them want to behave like Loyal Americans. They will carry out the terms of the school segregation decision if their politicians give them a chance and if the problem is not complicated by extremist behavior on either side.

It is essential, however that the Supreme Court fix a definite date for the beginning and completion of action to end segregation. There should be no doubt in anybody's mind as to what the Court's mandate is, whatever ted in carrying out that mantime and flexibility are permitdate.

Other litigants before the Court do not claim the right to decide for themselves whether to obey the Court's decisions. There is on reason why school districts which have been practicing segregation should enjoy such a privilege. As loyal citizens of a constitutional government, the people of these districts have an unquestioned responsibility to obey the Court. The only question is how they are to do so.

One simple and fair rule would be to decree that, beginning with the next school term, all new students entering elementary or high school must be unsegregated. Local districts would have the option, of course, of applying the rule to other students if they wished; but at least all first-graders and all high school freshmen entering school this year and hereafter would do so without racial discrimination.

This would certainly be gradual. Roughly it would mean that elementary schools would end segregation over a period of six to eight years, and high schools over two to four years. Missouri has shown that a much faster pace is possible. We suspect that many southern dist icts, once they got into it, would voluntarily speed up their progress. The essential thing is to make a start.

George Leads Administration To Sanity

Doris Fleeson

This country has taken a long step forward in the search for ways to ease the tensions in Formosa. The new position was first stated by Senator George of Georgia. It became official policy when accepted and amplified by Secretary of State Dulles at a dramatic press conference.

President Eisenhower was, of course, the catalyst He has the power to decide and he has done so.

Briefly stated, the American position now is that we are willing to talk to the Chinese Reds about peace and even to agree to a cease-fire without the Chinese Nationalists' presence or permission. We shall not ask either side to give up its stated goals but we are asking that they renounce the use of force to achieve them.

INCOMMUNICADO AT DUCK ISLAND

Mr. Dulles in effect repudiated cautious positions taken in his name last week end by the State Department. He explained he was incommunicado at his Duck Island retreat so was not consulted on that statement.

The President was at his Gettysbu g Farm. He will doubtless be asked at his press conference what part he played both then and now.

In their absence, Senator George, to all intents and purposes, played the role of Secretary of State. The Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee explored the possibilities of Red China's seeming change of front and called on his own country to think and act anew in the cause of peace.

BROKE THE CAST

George's achievement was that he broke the cast into which U. S. policy had been hardening. He was able to do it because his own party which controls Congress will follow him, and the President's party, even its right wing, does not really wish to contest him and knows he is very nearly invulnerable to criticism.

It is the second time he has bronken ground for a new and more flexible foreign opilcy. It was George who called for the Four Power talks desired by our European allies. Standing on the solid ground of Senator George's prestige, the President has issued that call.

From the standpoint of domestic politics, the new Administration move is of intense interest. Up to now, at high cost, the White House has avoided a break with the right led by Senators Knowland and Bridges.

Reporters raced from the Dulles interview to the Capitol to catch the explosions. For a while none came. Senators are quick to seize upon political opportunities of all kinds; they are normally more deliberate when the real issues come along. All sense this one's importance and they were taking their time.

'YOU CAN'T DO THAT'

Senator Bridges finally said in effect: you can't do that. Senator Knowland had indicated his apprehensions in a New York speech Monday when he sarcastically called for a partition of the China mainland between the Nationalists and the Communists.

Chiang's supporters will be heard from. It will be an enormous strain on the GOP family tie. But Senator George and his colleagues believe he expresses the real will of the American people and the President seems to share their confidence.

It is certainly the issue on which the next Presidential eletion will be fought, regardless of who the nominees are.

Y-Court Corner

Rueben Leonard

ON TUESDAY afternoon of this week, the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court drove the shaft of justice into four University students. Never, in the history of that court, has such a flagrant display of injustice been seen.

Nine men were to have been tried; one was freed because of lack of evidence, four were convictd on this same lack of evidence, and four more, seeing the handwriting on the wall, asked for a jury trial.

Now when I say there was a lack of evidence I do not mean that the boys involved were not in the panty party; my point is that most of the laws in Chapel Hill are so archaic that they have no place in modern times. For example: there is a city ordinance that prohobits dramatic presentations in Chapel Hill.

THERE HAS been much discussion, pro and con, concerning the Administration's position in the trial of the students arrested during the harmless raid. A Chapel Hill lawyer seemed to be convinced that the Administration did have something to do with the trial and convictions.

"The University does not like panty raids. The Administration does not like panty raids. Chancellor House does not like panty raids. Judge William S. Stewart convicted the panty raiders. The judge is Chancellor House's son-in-law." said the lawyer.

WHEN BILL Latham had finished his testimony Tuesday afternoon, it seemed evident that he would be acquitted. His testimony had been a very good one, not the kind that sways juries, but, nevertheless, one that included politeness and respect for both the prosecuting attorney and the judge. He seemed to give his account of what went on before he was arrested in a straight-from-the-shoulder and honest manner.

After Bill had called his one witness to the stand and the judge had heard the testimony by the witness, the spectators settled back in their seats and waited for the verdict of not guilty. Judge Stewart meditated a few moments, looked rather hesitatingly off into space and said, "Guilty."

Hisses and boos filled the courtroom as we made our exit.

DON'T TURN your back department. A reporter who chatted with one of Junius Scales' comrades at the Greensboro trial ended his conversation with "Glad to have met you." "You won't be," retorted the primary-colored comrade.

That's the way it goes. Little did the reporter realize that he will be one of the first ones to be sickled when the Commies take over.

NELL BATTLE-AX Lewis's column in the Raleigh News and Observer is hysterical. She criticises Chapel Hill and the University at rather frequent intervals. Latest barb thrown by Nellie at our serene community concerned the Russian flag found flying atop our flagpole. "But I can't understand why they took the Soviet flag down. Doesn't it belong there—'neath the (Red) oaks of our old Chapel Hill?" said Nell.

You had better be glad it doesn't belong there, Nellie old girl; if it did we might be inclined to find a witch to burn at the foot of the pole.

SINCE WITCH-HUNTING seems to dominate the column today, we might as well burn one more.

"The political je ne sais quoi" who's letter appeared in Tuesday's paper criticizing me for uncovering political dirt is really "that old proverbial kettle." Now, I didn't pay any attention to most of the letter, but one little paragraph got under my skin.

The writer of the letter questioned my right to call anyone "lewd-mouthed" considering that I am a former editor of Tarnation. I question the writer's right to question my rights when I think of the time that I printed the dirtiest story of the year in the Tarnation—a story that "political je ne sais quoi" had written. Ah, such is life.

NORWOOD BRYAN, ex-legislative finance chairman, stormed up to me after Saturday's column had criticized the manner in which the budget had been handled.

"You haven't got your facts straight," he said, "The Daily Tar Heel did not take a cut of $5,000—just $3,000." "And furthermore," he said, "the $3,000 was cut from what they asked for, not from their last year's budget."

According to Norwood, the DTH's actual budget was only chopped $669.

IN THE Spring a young man's fancy turns to zoology.

Yesterday morning's Zoology I class was scheduled to witness two movies. The first flick was to deal with endocrine and second one with reproduction.

As the students watched endocrines dance merrily on the screen little did they realize what was in store for them. When the endocrine film was finally over, the instructor switched on the lights, rewound the film, reset the projector, switched the lights back off, and started the projector. Much to the amazement of the students and instructor, the second film was not titled "Reproduction," but instead "Methods of Contraception."

Everybody Welcome

A news item sent out from the Department of Statistics, University of North Carolina, at Chapel Hill, read as follows:

"Sujit Kumar Mitra, graduate student of the Department of Statistics, University of North Carolina, will talk on "Some Problems in Minimum Variance Unbiased Estimation" at the Statistics Colloquium on Monday, May 2, 1955. To elucidate certain basic ideas connected with unbinsed estimation he will discuss a special case of estimating functions of the binomial proportion and the poisson mean. He will also discuss the principle of invariance used in various connections by Fisher. Hotelling, Pitman, Wald and Wolfowitz and its relation with minimum variance unbiased estimation. The meeting will be in 206 Phillips Hall at 4:00 Monday."

There is the old line to the effect that figures do not lie but liars can figure. And here is new evidence that the statistician can collect all the facts without communicating them to anybody but themselves.

Tar Baby Tracksters Romp Over Durham HS

Carolina's Tar Baby trackmen overpowered a green but game Durham High School team by a score of 76⅛ to 36⅝ here yesterday. The closing minutes of the contest saw the Carolina mile relay team in a bid for a new track record. Due to a single bad baton pass on the first lap, the Tar Babies fell slightly short of the record but turned in an excellent 3:36.1.

The Durham squad captured four first places in the 13 event field. Three of these were turned in from field events. Varnum and Drury paced the victors as they scored 10 points each in the running events. Dunson was high for Durham with eight points.

The summary:

Why do more college men and women smoke VICEROYS than any other filter cigarette?

BECAUSE ONLY VICEROY GIVES YOU A PURE, NON-MINERAL, NON-TOXIC FILTER WITH 20,000 FILTER TRAPS IN EVERY FILTER TIP!

1. Yes, only Viceroy has this filter composed of 20,000 tiny filter traps. You cannot obtain the same filtering action in any other cigarette.
2. Besides being non-mineral and non-toxic, this cellulose-acetate filter never shreds or crumbles.
3. The Viceroy filter wasn't just whipped up and rushed to market to meet the new and skyrocketing demand for filtered cigarettes. Viceroy pioneered. Started research more than 20 years ago to create the pure and perfect filter.
4. Smokers en masse report that filtered Viceroys have a finer flavor even than cigarettes without filters. Rich, satisfying, yet pleasantly mild.
5. Viceroy draws so easily that you wouldn't know, without looking, that it even had a filter tip . . . and Viceroys cost only a penny or two more than cigarettes without filters!

That's why more college men and women smoke VICEROYS than any other filter cigarette . . . that's why VICEROY is the largest-selling filter cigarette in the world!

Country's Third, Fourth Teams Hit

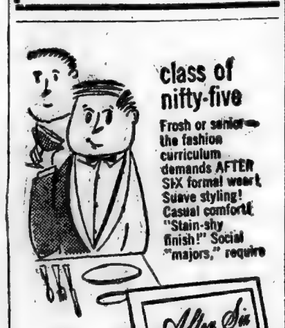
By DAVE LIEBERMAN

This afternoon at 3:00, Carolina's varsity tennis team will face the University of Miami in what will undoubtedly be their toughest match of the season. The Miami team, which plays tennis twelve months a year, will bring into Chapel Hill an aggregation that includes stars from three countries.

The match this afternoon should bring some of the best tennis ever to be played in Chapel Hill. In the No. one singles match, Herb Browne will probably meet Al Harum, who was a Junior Davis Cupper in 1954 and who is rated high by the U. S. Lawn Tennis Assn. Although the lineups will not be known until this afternoon, Bobby Payne will probably play Johann Kupferburger of South Africa, who, along with Larry Schaffer also of the Miami team, is Florida doubles champion.

Other members of the Miami team who will pose a threat to the Tar Heels are Ed Rubinoff, David Harum, the younger brother of Al Harum, who was also a Junior Davis Cupper last summer, and the Garrido brothers from Cuba, Orlando and Reynaldo, who competed for Cuba in Davis Cup competition last year.

Last year, the two teams met common foes in Rollins and Duke. Miami beat Rollins 5-4 last year, but they avenged this by blanking Rollins earlier this season, 9-0. They beat Duke last year by a convincing 9-0, score, while the Tar Heels defeated the Blue Devils 6-3 last season.



Coach John Kenfield of the Tar Heels seemed a little pessimistic as to the outcome of the match, pointing out that Miami plays tennis all year around and the players have been competing in big tournaments, such as the Orange and Sugar Bowl tournaments, during the course of the winter while our team has been playing only about a month. He pointed out that this tournament competition is the best training for college players, and none of the Carolina team members have played in a tournament since last summer.

Miami is currently rated number three in college tennis by the NCAA, behind USC and Southern California, while Carolina is ranked in the fourth position, so the Tar Heel netters will be the leading team east of the Rockies if they should upset the favored Miami team.

Try-Outs Set For Big 4 Day

The intramural department announced yesterday that a plenary meeting for Big Four sports day scheduled May 10 at Duke will be held Monday afternoon at four o'clock in Woollen Gym, room 304.

The event, featuring competition between non-varsity students from Duke, Carolina, Wake Forest and N. C. State, is one of the features of the intramural program each spring.

All students interested in competing in the event are urged to attend the meeting. Try-outs in the various events will be held and the top students in each event will be excused from classes on May 10 to take part in the competition.

Competition will be carried on in ping-pong, golf, tennis, horseshoes, softball, handball, volley ball and badminton.

Golfers Beat State For 7th

RALEIGH, April 28 (AP) — North Carolina's golf team continued unbeaten today by defeating North Carolina State, 15½ — 11½, for its seventh win of the season.

North Carolina's Larry Bell was low scorer with a two-under par 68 on the Raleigh Golf Assn. course. State now has a 5-4 record.

The summaries:

Deitch (NCS) defeated Parker, 2-1. Correll (UNC) defeated Crockett, 2½-½. Best Ball, N. C. State 3, North Carolina 0. Edwards (NCS) tied Sykes, 1½-1½. Rothrock (UNC) defeated Bruce, 3-0. Best Ball, N. C. State 2½, North Carolina ½. Bell (UNC) defeated Margotta, 3-0. Rose (NCS) defeated Henderson, 2-1. Best Ball, North Carolina 3, N. C. State 0.

Med School, Sigma Nu Win Softball Battles

Seven games were played and one game forfiete yesterday as the last games of the intramural softball season were reeled off.

In yesterday's action, BVP forfieted its game to TMA, while other games had Pi Lamb Phi 13, Phi Delta Chi 6; Sigma Nu (2) 12, KA 2; Old West 11, Old East 8; Phi Kappa Sig 8, Phi Delt 5; Everett 16, Graham 4; Med School 12, Grad School 1.

Baseballers Head North; Gravitte Tops Hitting

Carries UNC Hopes

Carolina's hopes on the two-day trip north against ACC competition this weekend will in a large part be dependent on the lusty hitting and consistent fielding of big Will Frye (above). Frye is currently rapping the ball at a .304 pace and leading the Tar Heels in triples. He is second in runs batted in.

Maultsby Has Hot 2.14 ERA

Sporting a 3-5 record in Atlantic Coast Conference play, Carolina's baseball Tar Heels start down the homestretch this weekend when they invade Virginia and Maryland on a two-day trip.

This afternoon the Tar Heels take on UVA at Charlottesville and Saturday move on to Maryland to face the Terps at College Park. One of the Tar Heels' three conference wins was a 10-5 job against Maryland. Today's game will be Carolina's first against Virginia.

Following the northern trip, the Tar Heels return home to face Duke on May 4, then play at USC, Clemson and N. C. State before returning home to round out the regular season with UVA and Duke.

Centerfielder Connie Gravitte, although held hitless in three official trips against Wake Forest Wednesday, is still the leading Carolina hitter. He has rapped 21 hits in 56 tries for .376. Tom Zachary did not play against the Deacs and backed into second place at .304 as Will Frye's one hit in four trips moved him down to .302 and third place.

Gravitte still leads in runs batted in with nine, hits with 21, home runs with four and doubles with four. Frye leads in triples with 2.

Although he has pitched the most innings, unofficial statistics shows Tom Maultsby in tops in pitching. His 2.14 earned run average is tops for the staff and he has registered the most wins, three.

W&L Lacrosse Team Tops Carolina 13-4

By AL KORSCHUN

A hard-running, fast-breaking Washington & Lee lacrosse team spoiled a hustling UNC team's bid for its second consecutive victory yesterday as the visitors handed the Tar Heels their fourth setback of the year by a score of 13-4.

The Generals, who controlled the ball practically all of the first half, unleashed an offensive attack on the UNC goal that gave them a 5-0 lead at halftime in spite of an outstanding performance by Tar Heel goalie Thorne Walker. However, in the second half the Carolina scoring punch came to life as midfielder Mike Weinman took a pass from Jack Spooner and drove in the Tar Heels first of their four scores. Several minutes later Spooner himself scored the second Tar Heel goal, unassisted. Sherwood Smith and Toby Haynesworth completed the Carolina scoring later in the fourth quarter, each tallying one goal apiece, but at that point the Generals had run up their score to 13 goals which proved more than enough for the victory.

The Tar Heels, who went into the game as the underdog, fought hard the entire way but just couldn't stop the hard pressing W & L offensive drive which was spearheaded by a race-horse midfield which time and again brought the ball down quickly for the score. Carolina coach Art Greenbaum was pleased with the team's hustle as a whole and singled out Sherry Smith, Steve Trimble, and Walker for their fine play.

MORRIS

3 UNC Stars Enter Penn Relays Today

Jimmy Beatty, Richard Waters, and Roger Morris left yesterday afternoon by plane for Philadelphia where they will represent Carolina in the annual Penn Relays today and Saturday.

The three, stars of Carolina's undefeated track team, will not be with the club when it invades Virginia for a meet Saturday.

Beatty, whose phenomenal winning of both the mile and the two mile in the ACC Indoor Games this winter established him as a rising star, will compete in the open two mile event scheduled this afternoon. Morris will enter the shot put and discus and Waters the pole vault. The discus and shot finals are today and the pole vault finals on Saturday.

Saturday's varsity meet at UVA will be the next to last dual meet for the Tar Heel cindermen before the ACC championships here May 13, 14. The final meet is with Duke here May 7.

AT ALUMNI ASSEMBLY:

Alumni Giving Program Outlined

A program of alumni giving that provides faculty research grants, travel funds to learned society meetings, and student emergency aid was outlined yesterday at a luncheon meeting of the General Alumni Assembly.

Dr. James Godfrey of the History Department told the group about a research project in current British history "that could not have been undertaken without this aid." According to Dr. Godfrey, fifty grants for research have been made in the past two years to faculty members.

"Much of the reputation of the University will depend upon completion of work of this sort," Godfrey said.

Dr. S. A. Stoudemire, chairman of the Romance Languages Department, pointed out that funds from the Alumni Giving program help help faculty members travel to meetings of learned societies. These meetings contribute to the learning of the University, Dr. Stoudemire said, because the "papers read are the fruits of research."

Dr. Andrew H. Horn, Library director, said that the alumni had helped the University Library through "many crises." If the General Assembly should cut the Library appropriation, he said, "we would drop from fourth place to 12th place in book support."

Chancellor R. B. House explained that money from the Alumni Giving fund goes to a contingency fund, from which "documents that would not be preserved" are printed, worthy students are aided, and meetings of learned groups are held here. He pointed out the importance of the liberal arts in business today, saying that the gifts that go to make up the contingency fund "contribute to that learning and aid the University."

The Alumni Giving program started three years ago on a suggestion by President Gordon Gray. Last year 2,802 alumni made contributions totalling $45.615. Thus far this year, contributions totaling over $24,000 have been received.

SHOULD U. S. RECOGNIZE RED CHINA?

Debate Tournament Starts

The second annual Atlantic Coast Conference Debate Tournament begins here today for a two day meet.

The Conference Tournament was initiated last year at the University of Virginia under the auspices of Dr. J. J. Auer. It includes the University of Virginia, Wake Forest College, University of Maryland, Duke University, University of South Carolina and UNC.

Each of the schools, with the exception of Maryland which was unable to attend, is entering one affirmative and one negative team in the tournament to debate the query, Resolved: That The United States Should Extend Diplomatic Recognition To the Communist Government of China.

Representing UNC will be Miss Donna Ashcraft and Bev Webb, affirmative, and Forbes Ramsay and Miss Carol Dickman, negative.

Contests in after dinner speaking will be held following the luncheon banquet at Lenior Hall. Contests in extempore speaking will be held this afternoon with one representative from each school competing in each contest. Sonny Evans will represent UNC's team in the after dinner contest, and Dave Burrows will compete in the extempore contest.

As an added feature to the Tournament, the Debate Council is sponsoring a subsidiary tournament to allow more participation from the various schools. Dave Burrows and Sonny Evans, affirmative; Misses Anne Huffman and Virginia Agnew, affirmative, and Dave Lieberman and Charlie Katzenstein, negative, are representing Carolina in the division.

The teams will debate in four rounds, two this morning and two tomorrow, with the best affirmative and negative teams being selected by their win-loss record.

Debates will be held in Gardner and Hanes Hall, with tournament headquarters in 211 Gardner.

The rounds, to be held at 9:30 and 11 a.m. today and 9:15 and 11 a.m. tomorrow will be open to the public.

Dr. N. W. Mattis of the speech department is Tournament director, and Dr. D. G. Monroe of the political science department is director of judges.

Draft Test Set Here On May 19

Qualification Test For Those Unable To Take Earlier

A Selective Service College Qualification test will be given May 19 for men who were unable to take the regularly scheduled tests in December and April.

Anyone wishing to take the test should apply to the Selective Service Board at 302 Morris Street in Durham anytime Monday through Friday between 8:30 a.m. and 5 p.m. Applications postmarked later than May 9 will not be accepted, according to an announcement yesterday.

A score of 70 on the test makes an undergraduate student eligible for deferment.

Students entering medical and dental schools must be in the upper 50 percent of their classes in the last ear prior to entering those schools, or make a score of 70 on the Selective Service test.

Students may secure deferment for graduate study if they are in the upper 25 percent of their classes in their last year prior to entering Graduate School, or make a score of 80 on the test.

Panty Raid At ECC Foiled

GREENVILLE, April 29 (AP)—Three East Carolina College male students pleaded guilty in Recorder's Court today to charges growing out of panty raids on the college campus last night.

The defendants were Robert Taylor, 19, of Selma, charged with disorderly conduct; William K. Curry, 23, of Southern Pines, and Milford P. Hill, 20, of Chocowinity, both charged with forcible trespass.

Prayer for judgement was continued for all three until next Wednesday upon payment of court costs. Meanwhile, the college's discipline committee was expected to act in the three cases.

The first of last night's panty raids, joined in by visiting Guilford College baseball players, was aimed about 10 o'clock at Cotten Hall, a dormitory for freshman girls. A campus policeman arrested two of the attackers and when a crowd of several hundred gathered the officer drew his pistol and the whole crowd, including the two arrested, fled.

After midnight a crowd appeared at Slay Hall, for upperclasswomen, and there the three were arrested.

ANNUAL JUNE CRAIGE GRAY

Award Monday

The Jane Craige Gray award presented by Kappa Delta sorority to the outstanding woman of the junior class will be presented Monday at 8 p.m. in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

The award, which is an annual presentation, is given in memory of the late wife of Gordon Gray, president of the Consolidated University. Mrs. Gray was initiated as an alumna in 1950.

The presentation will be given to the coed in the junior class best exemplifying scholarship, leadership and character. Last year's winner was Miss Carol Webster.

The selection committee is composed of Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael, Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies, retiring president of the student body Tom Creasy, retiring chairman of Women's Orientation Miss Luanne Thornton, retiring chairman of the Women's Honor Council Nancy Whisnant, and Miss Webster.

Presiding will be Miss Martha May, president of Kappa Delta, and Miss Babbie DiIorio, retiring president.

Mediaevalists Should Come To Earth—Keeny

Humanists in general and Mediavalists in particular should come out of their ivory tower and present their case in an intelligent and intelligible way to the public, Brown University Dean Barnaby C. Keeney said in an address last night before the Mediaeval Acaademy, meeting here this weekend.

Dean Keeney, a UNC graduate of the Class of 1936, spoke at the Academy's annual dinner in the Carolina Inn.

The gathering, the 30th annual, is the first meeting of the Mediaeval Academy to be held in the South. Around 100 scholars from all parts of the nation are attending the sessions, which will continue through noon today.

Among those presenting papers yesterday afternoon were Prof. W. Thomas Marrocco, UCLA, on "The Enigma of the Canzone;" Prof. Stephan Kuttner, Catholic University of America, on methodological problems of canon law, and Prof. Harry Caplan, Cornell University, a mediaeval commentary on "Thetorica and Herennium."

Speakers at the Saturday session in Carroll Hall will be Prof. George L. Haskins, University of Pennsylvania, and Prof. Kemp Malone, Johns Hopkins University. A buffet luncheon for members and guests in Morehead Building Dining Room will conclude the meeting.

Speaking as a mediaevalist-turned-administrator, Dean Keeney suggested that the humanists "stop driving the students away, and stop seeking the painful martyrdom of starvation." If they cannot present their case to the public, he said, they should "stop talking about the plight of the humanities."

Decision Due Today On Junius Scales' Appeal

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Apr. 29 (AP) — Federal Judge Armistead Dobie said today he will make a decision by late tomorrow whether an appeal bond will be set for Junius Scales, convicted Communist party leader in the Carolias.

Judge Dobie heard arguments for three hours here this afternoon from David Rein, Washington attorney who represented Scales, and government attorney Edwin M. Stanley and Bernard B. McCusty.

Dance To End GM's Birthday

An informal dance tonight in the Carolina Inn Ballroom will wind up the week-long celebration of Graham Memorial's 23rd birthday.

Jim Crisp and his 12-piece orchestra will provide the music.

Earlier this week Consolidated University President Gordon Gray spoke on "The University and its Responsibilities" in the main lounge of Graham Memorial. Also on Tuesday, the movie "Harvey" was shown.

Wednesday night a jazz concert was held in the Rendezvous Room.

Thursday and Friday nights saw the production of Sound and Fury's "Satan's Saints" in Memorial Hall.

Chapel Hill Man Dies After Electrical Accident

A Chapel Hill man identified as Murray Sparrow, Rt. 3, died yesterday afternoon after electrical shock received in an accident.

A Memorial Hospital spokesman had no other details.

Committee Chairmen Announced

Bob Young, Vic Sydnor and Miss Anne Wrenn have been chosen as president, vice-president and secretary respectively of the 1955-56 Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Young is a rising junior from Asheville. Sydnor, a rising junior, is from Durham. Miss Wrenn, a rising senior, is from Greensboro.

BOB HICKS

"We of the new Activities Board for 1955-56 feel that we have both an obligation and an opportunity during the coming year," said Young yesterday. The new GMAB president said the board members feel their obligation to themselves is "to continue and expand the growing work of the Activities Board." He added that they feel they have an "opportunity to give our services to the entire student body." Young said that GMAB work will be extended to any "part of the campus where we feel that we are needed and can be of service.

"Our philosophy for the coming year will be 'little things done are better than big things planned,' and our program will be for all students," said Young. "We have the passion for sacrifice. With these three P's we feel our program will not fail," he concluded.

The new officers have recently completed interviews for new committee chairmen. They have submitted the names of their choices to the Board of Directors for approval.

Miss Laura Ervin, junior from Morganton, Polls Committee; Miss

Theta Chis Announce 'Ugly Man' Competition

Theta Chi social fraternity will try again this year to determine which man on campus has the distinction of being the ugliest.

The "Ugliest Man on Campus" contest, held annually in connection with the University Club's Spring Carnival, is now open for contestants. Photographs of the entrants must be turned in to Fred West at the Theta Chi house by May 9, announced a fraternity spokesman yesterday.

Each organization on campus may sponsor no more than three men for competition. Individual entries are also permissible. There is no entry fee, and make up may be used on the contestant for the photograph.

The contest winner will be determined in a penny-a-vote contest in Y-Court the week of May 9 through 14. The winner will be announced at the carnival May 13.

Prizes will include one case of beer from Fowler's Food Store, two cartons of cigarets from Andrews-Riggsbee, one carton of cigarets from the A & P, records from the Sport Shop, five lubrication jobs from Bill Alban's Esso Station, $2 gift certificate from Knight and Campbell Hardware, two passes to the Carolina Theatre, a free meal for the winner and his date at Danziger's, a box of shaving lotion and men's cologne from Sloan's Drug Store, a loving cup and a special surprise gift, according to the spokesman.

GRAY SPEAKS, BAND PLAYS:

Parents Day Tomorrow

An address by President Gordon Gray and a concert by the University Band will cap the fifth annual Parents' Day tomorrow.

The University Band, under the direction of Earl Slocum, will give its concert on the lawn near Davie Poplar following President Grays address at 4:30 p.m. Included in the program are works by Leroy Anderson, Handel, Prokofieff and George Thomas.

Special shows and exhibits are being arranged for the early afternoon by the Morehead Planetarium, as well as by the science and art departments.

A number of professors, instructors and members of the University administration will meet the paren's at a reception in Graham Memorial from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m.

In case of rain President Gray's address and the concert will be given in Hill Hall.

WRC Officers Named

New officers of the Women's Residence Council were announced yesterday by Miss Sue Fink, who was elected president in spring elections.

Miss Jeannine Thompson, Mooresville, was named vice-president; Misses Anne Lassiter, Wilmington, and Ann Barwick, Clinton, will serve as secretary and treasurer respectively for the next year.

—FOR SMOOTHNESS AND EFFECTIVENESS—

Committee Offers Proposals For UNC's Honor System

By FRED POWLEDGE

A president's committee investigating possible improvements in UNC's Honor System yesterday released a three-point recommendation aimed at making the system "run smoother and improve its effectiveness."

The committee, appointed by former student body President Tom Creasy, spent two months on its report and came out with three main groupings of suggestions for improvement:

(1) Reminders during and after fall orientation,

(2) Mechanics within the Honor System and

(3) Rehabilitation.

Scotty Hester chaired the committee. Other members included Walt Joyner, Miss Kendrick Townsend, Ogburn Yates, Charlie Katzenstein, Luther Hodges Jr. and Bill Calvert. Yates was elected chairman of the Men's Honor Council this week.

The committee recommended an informative manual on judicial prodeeures, orientation of faculty members to University Honor System, more thorough judicial orientation in the fall, printing of the Campus Code and Honor Code on identification cards, clarification of faculty policy during quizzes and appointment of the Attorney General to position of prosecuting attorney in Honor Council trials.

Hester's group reported rehabilitation "is now being handled in an effective manner for the most part," that the five penalties now in use are "satisfactory for most cases" and that "since there were so few rules for the women already," most coed cases "should still go to the Women's Council."

The committee suggested spring meetings of " a group composed of the chairmen of each court" to "evaluate the progress and effectiveness of the year's work."

REMINDERS

Under the topic of "Reminders," the committee proposed a manual "prepared for all members of the various courts" which would include "all portions of the student Constitution relating to the judicial branch of student government," newly-passed Constitution amendments and "other such pertinent information relative to judicial bodies . . . to define precedents and general court procedure."

"The bylaws of the various courts could also be included so that courts like the Men's and Women's Councils could be more familiar with the workings of the courts," said the report. "The Student Council would have a complete list of all the bylaws of the lower courts in case a problem arose concerning practices not specifically enumerated in the Constitution."

The committee recommended that council members visit new faculty members to explain workings of Carolina's Honor System, that "the heads of various departments should orient their professors and instructors" and that current faculty members should be refreshed in Honor System procedures.

ORIENTATION

Fall orientation was a major consideration of the investigating committee. Hester's group recommended "comprehensive tests" on honor procedure for orientation counselors, a written test and greater explanation of plagiarism and of methods of running for Honor Council seats, and extension of the present Honor Code pledge to read "I have neither given nor received any aid on this quiz, and I have not seen anyone else violate the Honor Code."

The committee proposed that Campus and Honor Codes be printed on backs of identification cards in order to "help to remind us that we are expected to live by this, the Carolina Way of Life."

CAROLINA'S HONOR SYSTEM IS LOOKED INTO . . . committee releases three-point proposal

The committee urged professors and instructors to "respect the honesty of their students by leaving the classroom during quizzes as is recommended by the Honor System policy.

"Should the instructor feel that his presence is necessary in order to answer questions about the quiz," the report said, "he may use his discretion, but he should mention his policy to his students at the beginning of each course and just before the first quiz for those who missed the briefing in the rush of 'Drop-Add'."

Hester's group recommended that signs, stating "Your Honor Is Our System," "It Does Make a Difference — Our Honor System" and "It's Your Honor System — Keep It," might be "useful in helping a normally honest person who was on the verge of cheating remember that honesty is the expected code of behavior at Carolina and that it's far better to even fail an exam than to cheat."

MECHANICS

Under the topic of "Mechanics," the committee recommended that student government Attorney General serve as prosecuting attorney in Honor Council cases, if "a person outside the pertinent council could represent the accused as defense attorney."

It was concluded that if someone other than a council member served in this capacity for a defendant, it would be necessary to have someone outside the court as a prosecuting attorney," the committee found.

Other mechanical recommendations included the proposal that "before a person goes on trial, we feel that he should not only be informed of all his constitutional rights, but also given a written copy of all these rights as well as all other information in the Constitution concerned with the Honor System. Offenders should understand in particular the new grounds for appeal to the Student Council," said the report.

REHABILITATION

The committee reported that the current plan of rehabilitation is "now being handled in an effective manner." Rehabilitation the committee said, now requires that "when a person comes back after being suspended from school, he is put on probation for a period of at least one semester, during which time he may not represent the University in any way.

"During this period," the report said, "no one council member necessarily visits this student who is trying to clear his record again. We feel that this is good, because otherwise a student would feel that the council was spying on him." The committee suggested that a council member "should serve, as requested by the student, as his connecting link with the council and be prepared to answer questions and help him readjust in every way possible."

"Intermediate penalties" were discussed by the group, "but it was generally felt that the five penalties in use now are satisfactory for most cases." The committee listed current penalties as unofficial reprimand, official reprimand, probation, suspension and suspension with recommendation that the convicted student "never be allowed to re-enter the University."

A Medal For Some Top-Drawer Drama

One of the highest awards in radio, given each year by the American Exhibition of Educational Radio and Television Programs, has come to the University Communications Center for its "American Adventure" series.

This marks a late hour for us to extend the verbal flourish which writer John Ehle, Director John Clayton, and their associates merit. But their work is a continuing work, "dealing with the soul of America," as Mr. Ehle wrote in a letter to The Daily Tar Heel; because it continues, praise never comes too late.

"The decline of creative activity in Chapel Hill." That worrisome phrase—ominous if it has a kernel of truth—spins always above our heads. During the years of this student generation's experience on this campus, an experience from which we may speak, it jumps often to prominence. And you suspect, after so long, that it is a chronic phrase, a gadflyish jingle, moving always about its vital stinging and teasing and never vanishing. Too bad if it should vanish.

But the work of those in the Communications Center, particularly Ehle and Clayton and their "American Adventure," gives us at least one fast bulkhead against any such decline.

It would be selfish of us to consider their benefits to this academic locale alone. In the first place, the locales into which "American Adventure" reaches lie far beyond the academic. If they deal with the soul of America they also get down to the soul of America—to radio listeners in an auto garage, a hospital, a barber shop, a parlor.

"American Adventure" is an optimistic adventure; as Mr. Ehle wrote,

> I believe the best understanding of America begins with the realization that our country is young yet, and that she is still new and unfinished, and that she remains America's greatest adventure in time and space.

Here is top-drawer radio drama going out of Chapel Hill, part of the tradition defined by the symphonic dramas of Green and Hunter, envoy of the best thoughts and feelings of Chapel Hill; and drama to germinate the right attitudes toward the right American values.

The awards people did well to recognize it as they did.

When A Junior's Fancy Gets Fancy

Each spring, about the time saps rise from Lower Quad for panty raids and fraternity row begins its mass migration to the beach, at Northwestern University juniors are awakened early one Saturday morning by a loud speaker barking from a police squad car.

The Evanston junior class, clad in blue jeans and sweat shirts, streams from the dorms. No, they don't have a riot or (as some junior classes) a picnic. Instead, the students flock to low-budget charity institutions and municipal institutions to aid in spring cleaning. This is what juniors do as an annual spring project at Northwestern.

Now, in sunny Chapel Hill, the junior class has another type project. It converges upon the student Legislature, wearing its dirtiest pair of bucks, and begs for $135 for a "picnic."

Class President Bill Sanders voices the juniors' appeal for money, painting pictures of a junior picnic as if he were an Eisenhower press secretary explaining "mass retaliation." But the tight-fisted (for a change) Legislature, says no because, as Larry McElroy says so candidly, it "ain't got the money."

We hail the student Legislature for its wisdom. Somehow picnics will go on, though, without $135 grants, thank goodness. And, apparently, the junior class will go on having them, instead of taking a cue from Northwestern and doing something for others.

Backstage At Sound & Fury: Close Shaves

J. A. C. Dunn

45 MINUTES BEFORE the curtain went up on Sound and Fury's "Satan's Saints" we entered through a side door to the backstage, tripped over a wire and fell flat. From then on until we left about an hour later the going was pretty hectic.

The first thing we observed was an atmosphere all around of complete confusion diluted by an underlying element of purpose. Chorus members and principals fully made up ambled leisurely from one point to another; other people only partly made up moved a little faster; and people not made up at all rushed frantically from grease paint pot to grease paint pot. A girl with only small percentage of her costume on ran across the stage followed by a battery of male eyes; off to one side one girl said to another "Ite's go through it once," and they both immediately started pirouetting; in another place a boy was watching a girl do the Charleston and copying her; someone was carrying a box of flowers to some star or other, and someone else, peering around the curtain, kept saying, "Will you look at that house out there!"

We went around to the other side of the stage, dodged a flapper who flapped by straight out of the 20's, walked into a bathtub filled with indescribable odds and ends of stagecraft, and staggered into the men's dressing room. No one was recognizable.

We reeled away from the uproar in the dressing room and passed what looked like someone we had seen before, did a double take in the gloom and discovered it was a good friend of ours dressed in what appeared to be a finger-painting smock for a seven-year-old. She bummed a cigarette and we went up to the light bridge.

THE LIGHT BRIDGE is a small booth overlooking the stage on one side with a large black panel in it absolutely crawling with switches, labelled switches — dimmers, ceiling spot, upper stage pocket, borders, etc. There were a mike and earphones there. We put the 'phones on just out of curiosity and immediately a rather commanding voice came through to us: "Check that plug-in!" We looked wildly around and mouthed something bewildered and inaudible into the microphone. "Dimout!" came the voice again. We untangled ourself from a clutch of thick black wires and fled back to the stage.

Safely back in the wings away from the hell's kitchen of the light bridge we stood still for a change instead of trying to buck the madding throng of milling stagehands and actors, hoping to find something worth writing about. Someone leaned through a window in the set behind us and yelled hoarsely, "Hey Frank, you there? Well, you couldn't tell me anyway, forget it." We forgot it and went to the other side of the stage in search of peace and security. Someone was still peering around the curtain at periodic intervals and saying, "Look at that house fill up!" We peered around the corner of the curtain to see the house fill up. It was not only filling up, there were people at the windows.

EVENTUALLY, A VOICE called "cast on stage!" and a horde of grease-painted people we never even knew existed flocked onto center stage to receive last-minute instructions. We took our life in our hands and went back to the light bridge.

The orchestra started (the bongo drums were startling at first), lights began to go out backstage, a desperate voice stage-whispered, "Hey Fred! Fred!" and there was a flurry of yellow-clad chorus girls down below us. Another voice called "Places! Places every one! The orchestra finished the overture, the curtain went up, the show was on.

Tories In N. C. Business Pushed Trustee Dismissals

Weimar Jones
The Franklin Press

Much has been made of the part played by racial feeling in the decision of the General Assembly to drop such men as Dr. Clarence Poe and L. P. McLendon from the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina.

Dr. Poe and Mr. McLendon, along with others, became marked men, it is said, when they voted to permit Negro and white county agents to sit together in class, at annual refresher courses at N. C. State College. (Representatives of the two races would eat and room separately.)

This may have been the immediate cause of the firing of Dr. Poe, Mr. McLendon, and others. But we suspect the motive lies deeper. For this is not the first time outstanding, long-time members of the board have been dropped. Two years ago, for example, such members as Collier Cobb Jr., Mrs. Laura Cone, Kenneth Tanner, and John Sprunt Hill were dismissed. And other Legislatures have dropped still others who had served long and well.

There is considerable evidence that this latest action really is a part of a struggle that has been going on for decades; that it is part of the effort of the Tory element in North Carolina business (and of course all North Carolina business is not Tory) to gain control of the University.

So long as Frank Graham was at Chapel Hill, this element was balked—hence the unreasoning hatred of Graham. Since Graham's departure, it has been making progress. Liberal after liberal (many of them business men) has been dropped from the board. And a tangible evidence of what is happening is the way the School of Business Administration at Chapel Hill—and the kind of thinking it represents—is rapidly overshadowing the rest of the institution.

Basically, what has happened probably is part of the age-old clash between those, on the one hand, who believe an educated man faces facts as they are and tries to think things through, no matter how unpleasant the conclusions; and those, on the other, who consider any freedom that would endanger the status quo gross sacrilege.

Idiot, Three Atheists & A Bully

Dr. E. M. Poteat

(The Greensboro Daily News)

If we are to believe the fiction of 100 years ago every village had an idiot, an atheist, and a bully, each of whom attracted disproportionate attention to himself. The bully terrorized the timid, the atheist confounded the pious with questions they could not answer, and the idiot amused the callous or came up, on occasion, with a bit of sententious wisdom that made wise folk wonder.

Today the free-thinker — for such the atheist preferred to call himself — is so numerous as to be undistinguished; the bully is the leading spirit of the local veterans organization, and the idiot has sympathetic hospital hospital care. But the arguments go on, nevertheless.

One can bring into somewhat sharper focus the problem of atheism by thinking of three difference, of uncertainty, and of protest. This breaks the familiar stereotype of the atheist as a man to whom the believer is a sentimentalist or a superstitionist. In turn the believer thinks the nonbeliever evil and blind. He cannot prove the nonexistence of God since no-thing offers no evidence of any sort. If he demands proof of God he will be unsatisfied since there is no rational net with meshes fine enough to catch Him.

But consider the atheism of indifference. Here argument plays no part; it is wholly a matter of attitude. Whether there is a God is of no matter to him in the light of other very real concerns that engross him. His philosophy may be "eat, drink and be merry" which is hardly edifying; or it may be "work, slave, and fall asleep," for which something may be said. The shrine where he worships may be the groaning board or the night club or the laboratory, for worship he must.

The atheism of uncertainty is of another sort. It has not lost interest in religion, it has lost its confidence. Some of religion's formulations have been untenable and more plausible statements have not been satisfactorily put together. He sees beauty and power and order, and pain and deceit and death but he cannot call the first trio the garment of God without feeling the latter three are God's spite. He calls them what they are, and if he lumps them together they may be called Nature.

The third type of atheism is a matter of spirit. Here the atheist sees the anguish that living creatures, including himself, bear, and which no ingenuity or enterprise of man seems able to relieve. He also is pained and outraged by the wickedness of men and the havoc it causes, but he is powerless to do more than protest and his protest is fruitless. It is easy for him to rail against believers who seem complacent in the presence of inequality and injustice and excuse themselves from doing anything by taking glibly about the will of God. His distrust of men transfers itself easily to distrust of all power—including God who seems either indifferent or powerless. Such angry atheists want something done and neither God nor His cheerful devotees seem able or inclined to act.

What is to be done with these three moods? Perhaps little can be done with indifference, if there really is any such thing. Minimum action would be to deflect interest from one preoccupation to another. But it is almost humanly impossible to do anything to give alertness to dead Christians and dead atheists alike, and there is scant choice between them. Life may shake them awake, but only life can do it.

To the atheism of uncertainty we can say two things: Uncertainty — or skepticism if you please — is surely no sin unless it is set up as an object of worship; and the wise man moves from uncertainty to confidence — which is faith — by thrying out plausible hypotheses. Why not try God?

The third type invites our emulation. Sometimes it seems as if the church has lost its once exalted place as the forum for debating great moral issues. The reformers have left the church and joined the party or announced for office. A dozen angry atheists in half a dozen city churches might shock them into a godliness that was invincible.

Take The Cash And Let The Credit Go

Ron Levin

I am a bit hesitant to attach the term, "literary minded," to the business men of downtown Chapel Hill, but I ran across a line the other day in The Rubaiyat of Omar Khayam that set me to think they might have turned to "the meter'd line" or relaxation in the after hours of the day. The entire quatrain reads something like this.

Some for the glories of this world and some Sigh for the Prophet's Paradise to come
Ah, take the Cash and let the Credit go,
Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum.

The Senior Class Picnic out at Hogan's Lake was a sprawling mob of more than 1400 luke warm, hot dogs and at least fifty students. Accompanied by a herd of cows that mooed in key from their grazing across the lake, the Dixieland combo gave out with a brand of music that equalled, if not surpassed, the spirit prevailing at the picnic. The majority of the hot dogs literally went to the dogs themselves. The presence of an oversized, underfed brown boxer solved the problem of what to do with left overs. He strayed in during the early part of the picnic, and some several hundred hot dogs later, burped his way into freedom. To those few students who braved the elements, I should like to express my thanks for their brilliant display of class chauvinism, and to the others who stayed to drink beer at The Goody Shop, I should like to criticize their spirit, but heartily commend their choice.

After Arthur Godfrey's recent purge in the ranks of his entertainers and singers, he was seen leaving the studios with a rather pert young thing. Having been peeved all day by the insistent mob of reporters, he was in no mood for friendly conversation, and when asked who his companion was, he blurted out ". . . it's my mother" and hastily drove off leaving the bewildered reporters to speculate among themselves as to the validity of the retort.

We are deeply indebted to Governor Luther Hodges for setting aside April as "Go to the Movies Month". For a while, there, I wasn't quite sure just what to do for these four weeks, but the brilliant and far seeing policies of those in Raleigh solved the problem in no time at all. As long as we are setting aside months for various pastimes, I would like to set aside May as "Go to Bed Month". Think of the money saved, that you would have spent had you gone to the movies. Also, the bed provides time for intellectual reflections, philosophical meditations and a look at the latest copy of Playboy. What about it, guvnor?

Over The Hill

Charles Dunn

SURPRISE: The action taken by the local Recorder's Court Tuesday with regards to the nine students charged with unlawfully and willfully disturbing women students in last week's "panty raid" was a surprise to many students on the campus and seems to be unnecessarily harsh.

Panty raids are not looked upon as a recommended part of a college education, and on the day after one may wonder why they took part in it at all. And, for the most part, these raids are not harmful except maybe they result in sore throats for some raiders, headaches for housemothers, University officials and police officers and bad publicity for the school. That is they are not harmful as long as the students remain outside of the Women's dorms and destroy no property.

But at the raid last week nine boys were picked up by the local police, and, instead of their crawling out the other door of the police car (as in past raids) they were carted off to the station and booked. Nine boys were selected; probably one out of every hundred that participated in the raid.

The first surprise came when it was announced that the nine "select" boys were to be tried in the Recorder's Court, something that hadn't been done in Chapel Hill before. It was expected that those picked up would be turned over to University officials and the student courts, and that these would deal with them. The second big surprise came with the sentences handed down by the court. It had been expected that if any of the "select" were found guilty they would be warned and turned loose with little or no fine.

But no, several of the "select" were made examples of. The local police department said that the University officials had asked that the raiders be tried in the local court, and University officials replied that they had asked the police not to make arbitrary arrests at such affairs as the panty raid.

It makes no difference who was the cause of the arrests, the "select" had to pay. If whoever was responsible for the arrests wanted to make sure the raids were stopped once and for all, it could have been done in a much fairer way: the students could have first been warned that they would be arrested and tried in Recorder's Court. But this was not done, instead nine out of hundreds were selected to stand trial, probably for something they see no harm in.

It seems it was enough to try the "select" before the student courts, and certainly to stop future raids it was enough to show that students could be arrested and tried by public officials outside the University. But it is too much that the "select" who were found guilty should have to pay with their honor, and with their money for an act committed by nine hundred or more students.

LIGHTER SIDE: Letter from home regarding the panty raid: "Don't you boys have anything more to do? Try studying, you may find it safer."

F. B. I. AND REDS: Since the Scales trial ended, there has been much discussion on Charles Childs who joined the Communist Party and worked for the F. B. I., both on the campus and in the newspapers throughout the state. Some, a minority probably, look upon his informing with dim views, while others regard him as a man who did a job, and a good one for his country.

It isn't a pleasant thought to think of the United States government as using informers from the population to keep track of what the people are doing. This isn't the American way. But today the country is faced with a problem that is new and hard to cope with, namely the Communist party. There is an old idea that the best way to fight a forest fire is with another fire burning toward the original one. Such is the case regarding Communists and F. B. I. informers today.

The Communist party in the United States is for the most part a secret organization with the goal of overthrowing our present system of government. The only way to fight the Communists is with their own methods, and that includes secret informers. But this can go too far, and should it go too far it can possibly destroy the democracy of our country. The problem is to keep informers in organizations whose object is the overthrow of the government, and not let them out where they can be of harm to the freedom of citizens.

Back to Charles Childs: He has received much criticism, but as Chuck Hauser said in the Chapel Hill Weekly," . . . Instead of criticism for being a 'stool pigeon,' Charles Childs deserves to have some sort of gold medal struck for him. He risked his name, and his reputation, and conceivably even his life, in playing footsie with the local Reds in order that he could obtain information which would be of immediate use to the FBI and of immeasurable ultimate value to his country and its prosecutions of Communist leaders."

First Loss In Season

By DAVE LIEBERMAN

The University of Miami came through Chapel Hill like the hurricane for which they are named as they set down Carolina's varsity tennis team yesterday, 6-3. This was the first defeat of the season for the Tar Heels.

The Hurricanes ripped through five of the six singles matches, and the only man who could come up with a victory for the Tar Heels was Don Thompson who took a 6-4, 6-2 victory from Larry Schaffer in the no. 6 singles match.

Herb Browne played a beautiful first set against Miami's Al Harum, but Harum managed to finally take the set after having Browne at set point several times. Then he went right through Browne, taking a love set and the match, 13-11, 6-0.

In the no. 3 singles match, Ed Rubinoff of Miami, playing in his first match since January, seemed to have Tommy Bradford baffled. The Miami ace made Bradford play his type of game, slow and consistent. Then he would make Bradford come to the net and pass him.

After being behind, 1-5, after the completion of the singles matches, the Tar Heels came back to win two of the three doubles matches. Herb Browne and Tommy Bradford took Reynaldo Garrido and Dave Harum thre sets before losing, but Pete Green and Bobby Payne beat Johann Kupferburger and Larry Schaffer after having split with Miami in the first two sets.

The results of yesterday's match left Miami in the third position in national ranking.

The tough competition should help the Tar Heels prepare for a northern swing beginning next week.

The summaries:

Singles: A. Harum (M) defeated Browne, 13-11, 6-0; Kupfergurger (M) defeated Payne, 6-4, 6-2; Rubinoff (M) defeated Bradford, 6-3, 6-1; Garrido (M) defeated Green, 6-3, 6-3; D. Harum (M) defeated Kerdasha, 6-0, 6-2; and Thompson (UNC) defeated Schaffer, 6-4, 6-2.

Doubles: Garrido and D. Harum (M) defeated Browne and Bradford, 7-5, 1-6, 6-4; Green and Payne (UNC) defeated Kupferburger and Schaffer, 7-5, 3-6, 6-4; and Kerdasha and Thompson defeated A. Harum and Buliosi, 6-4, 6-4.

Raugh Tops Big Four Hurlers In Strikeouts

DURHAM, April 28—Slender Lowell "Lefty" Davis, mainstay of the Wake Forest moundstaff, is the leading pitcher among the Big Four schools, according to figures released here today.

Statistics include games through April 23.

The stringbean lefthander has three victories to his credit, without a defeat. Davis is also the leading twirler in the ACC, with six wins and no defeats to his credit.

The curve-balling Deacon has pitched in four games and has completed two. He has toiled a total of 22 innings, giving up 25 hits and five runs. He has struck out a total of 21 opposing batsmen and has issued only two bases on balls.

Davis is the only pitcher to have more than one win to his credit, but five hurlers have a 1-0 record. Hal Turner, Duke; Sam Welsh, Tommy Hargrove and Hill Franklin of State; and Buck Fickter of Wake Forest, all have one win to their credit.

Jim Raugh, Carolina twirler, is the leading strikeout artist, chalking up a total of 23 in 23 innings pitched. Raugh has also allowed the most hits of any pitcher, giving up 29 blows in his 23 innings on the hill.

Also released today was the batting leaders of the Big Four teams. Dick Kreutzer, Duke University leftfielder is way out in front of the field with a blazing .778 average, having collected seven hits in nine trips to the plate.

Frosh Hosting H-P HS Today

Carolina's freshman baseball team will be looking for its fifth win in seven starts here this afternoon when it meets High Point High School on Emerson Field at three o'clock.

The Frosh have defeated Wake Forest twice, Hargrave Military Academy, and Cranbrook High School so far this season while losing once to Wake Forest and once to Duke's Blue Imps.

Al Long, Gravitte Pace Carolina Win

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 29 (AP)—North Carolina balanced its Atlantic Coast Conference baseball ledger at 4-4 here today by defeating Virginia 7-2 behind the six-hit pitching of right-hander Bill Johnson.

It was the eighth straight setback for Virginia in conference play and left the hapless Cavaliers with a 3-9 record over-all.

The Tar Heels collected 10 hits off the slants of Joe Forys and Ken Turner, seven coming off Forys, who was replaced in the sixth inning. Al Long had three hits for Carolina.

Pairings For Mural Playoffs Completed

By JIM GAY

Beginning Monday, the finals of the intramural softball tournament will be played between the leading teams of the fraternities and dormitories on the Carolina campus. In the fraternity division, Sigma Chi, winners of the 1954 series, will open the playoffs against SAE on Field No. 2, Phi Kappa Sig and Zeta will duel it out on Field No. 3, and Chi Psi will compete against Kappa Sig on Field No. 4.

On Tuesday, Pi Kap Phi and Sig Nu play to determine which team plays the winner of the Chi Psi-Kap Sig game on the following day. Also on Tuesday, the winner of the Sig Chi-SAE game goes against the victor of the Phi Kap-Zeta scrap to determine which team plays in the finals. The winner of the Pi Kap Phi-Sig Nu game plays the winner of the Chi Psi-Kap Sig contest and the victor of that game will meet in the finals against the winner of the other bracket. The finals will be played on Thursday.

In the dormitory division, TMA (Town Men Association) meets Dental School on Tuesday on Field No. 5 and on Wednesday, the Med School plays Alexander on Field No. 3. The finals of this division will be played on Thursday, Field No. 2.

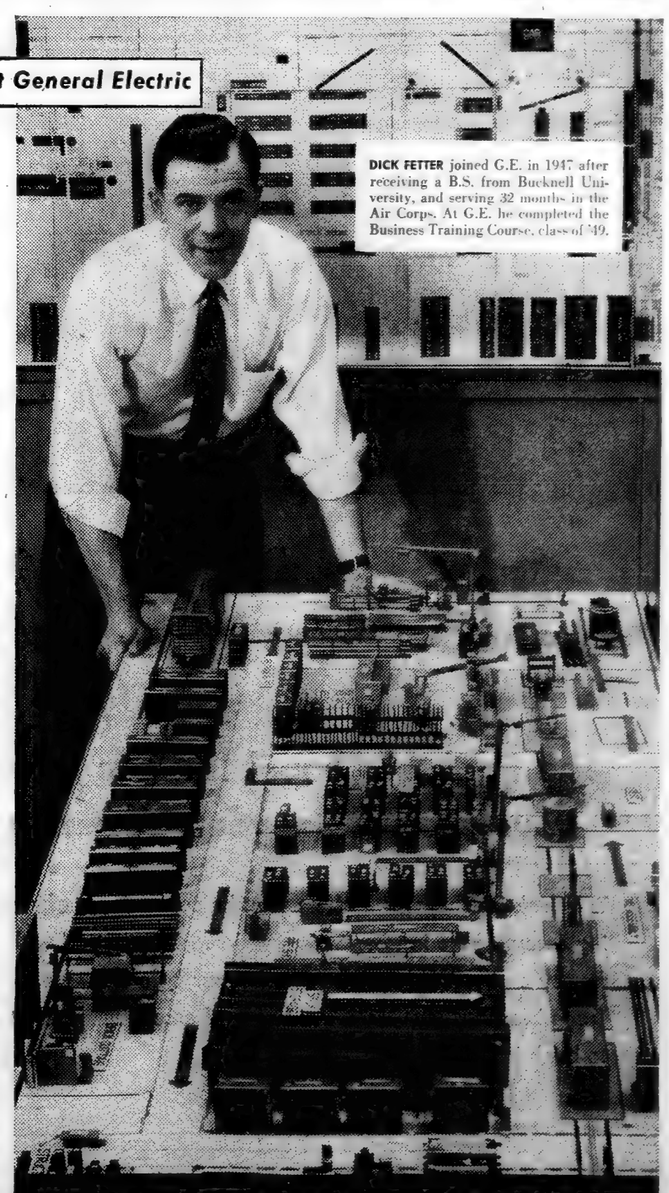
What young people are doing at General Electric

Young manager handles finances for building of $5,000,000 plant

In the next ten years, the demand for General Electric industrial heating equipment will double. To meet this demand, a giant new plant (model at right) is being built at Shelbyville, Indiana.

The plant will cost $5,000,000, and the man responsible for handling finances for the entire job is 32-year-old R. E. Fetter.



Fetter's job is important, responsible

Dick Fetter's work as Financial Manager of the Department began long before General Electric started building the plant. He and his group first had to estimate probable operating costs and predict whether the plant would be profitable.

Now, during construction, Fetter's chief concern is keeping track of all the expenses on this multimillion-dollar project. When the plant is completed, he will set up a complete financial section and manage everything from tax, cost, and general accounting to payrolls, budgets and measurements, and internal auditing.

25,000 college graduates at General Electric

This is a big job. Fetter was readied for it in a careful step-by-step program of development. Like Fetter, each of the 25,000 college-graduate employees is given his chance to grow, to find the work he does best, and to realize his full potential. For General Electric has long believed this: When young, fresh minds are given freedom to make progress, everybody benefits—the individual, the company, and the country.

DICK FETTER joined G.E. in 1947 after receiving a B.S. from Bucknell University, and serving 32 months in the Air Corps. At G.E. he completed the Business Training Course, class of '49.

HAPPENINGS ON THE HILL:

Beach & Hogan's This Weekend

By MARY BURNETTE

Arithmetically speaking, dark suntans plus rolled-up shirt sleeves plus occasional panty raids plus a deserted campus on the weekend equals out to the season of spring.

Also added in are a few logarithms of beach parties and several square roots of trips to Hogan's. The sum total of this magic formula is fun and more fun and an amazing whirl of activities that would leave December dizzy.

The ATO's are partaking in this gala season by shipping off to Myrtle Beach this weekend. About 30 couples will reign supreme at the Kit-Kat. For fun on the home front they are busily working on their patio which, when completed, will probably be the scene of many a spring party.

Also arriving on the scene at Myrtle will be the Phi Delts, who are having their annual spring houseparty there this year.

The Theta Chi's will be joining the company of the ATO's and Phi Delts and will complete the crowd at Myrtle. They recently elected new officers for fall semester next year. They are Donald Monroe, Ashboro, president; Buddy Clark, Louisville, Ky., vice-president; Hill Johnston, Norton, Conn., secretary; Boyden Henley, High Point, treasurer, and Bill Giles, Perth Amboy, N. J., social chairman.

Not far away from Myrtle and with just as much enthusiasm the Phi Kaps will be celebrating and housepartying at Crescent Beach.

HOGAN'S STILL TOPS

he Chi Psi's are leaving Friday for a full weekend at Morehead. However, the beaches aren't the only drawing card on the weekend. Hogan's still rates high on the popularity list. The Kappa Psis had a picnic there Friday night followed by an open house. This afternoon they will move into the Castle in Durham and have a champagne party followed by a banquet. The day will be rounded out by a dance in the Naval Armory.

Last week Hogan's was again the scene of a Friday night picnic. This time the picnickers were the Pi Kappa Phis, who held their annual Rose Ball in the Carolina Inn last Saturday. Donna Ashcraft, ADPi from Fairmont, West Va., was crowned Rose Ball Queen.

Speaking of dances, the Lambda Chis had their annual Inter-Zete dance at the Sir Walter in Raleigh last night. All of the Lambda Chi Chapters in North Carolina attended. Many of the Tar Heels left directly after the dance for Crescent Beach.

Indeed, spring is the season when a young man's fancy turns to the inevitable and sweethearts are selected. The Kappa Sigs fell into line and selected as their sweetheart Margaret Kelley, Tri-Delta from Charlotte. Kappa Sig officers for next year are Ed Borden, Goldsboro, president; Charles Wickham, Kinston, vice-president; Bill Carter, Morganton, secretary; Hal Farrell, Graham, treasurer, and Eloy Doolan, Savannah, Ga., master of ceremonies.

The Plantation Club in Greensboro will be the scene of a Pi Lambda Phi party Saturday night. Sunday they will have Parents Day at their house. Pi Lambda Phis who recently became pinned are Skip Pearlman, Asheville, to Sallie Krauss, a Duke coed. Also, Gilbert Rathstein, Raleigh, pinned Marlene Braver, Petersburg, Va., student at WC.

The Pi Phis held their annual faculty tea Sunday and entertained Duke Pi Phis at a Founders' Day program in the Rendezvous Room on Wednesday night. Next week the Chi O's will hold their annual faculty tea.

One Of Them Will Be Sigma Chi Sweetheart

Last Petite Musicale Slated Tomorrow Night

The last of the year's Petites Musicales will present Miss Marjorie Still, pianist, Sunday at 8 p.m. in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

Her program includes works by Couperin, Beethoven, and Debussy.

Miss Still has been studying piano since she was seven and is now a pupil of Dr. Newman of the University Music department.

Julius Caesar Set For Next Weekend

The cast for Julius Caesar, the Carolina Playmakers' final production of this season, was announced here yesterday by Director Thomas M. Patterson of the Playmakers staff.

The famous Shakespearean classic will be produced outdoors in the Forest Theatre next Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Playing Julius Caesar will be Walter L. Smith, with James Sechrest as Octavius Caesar; Don Treat, as Marcus Antonius; Robert Sonkowsky, as Marcus Brutus, and Donnell Stoneman, as Cassius.

Other roles will be played by Terry Chronaki, Al Gordon, Lloyd Skinner, William Casstevens, Gene Williams, James Hager, John Byers, Jim Heldman, Carl Williams, Terry Beaver.

Joel L. Fleishman, Harry Coble, Phil Kennedy, William White, Taylor Williams, Pete Cothran, Len Bullock, Charles Barrett, Clint Lindley, Robert Champion, Robert Sneed, John Sneden.

Robert Andrews, Clinton Andrews, Al Isaac, and Nick Lauterer.

Jan Saxon will portray Calpurnia, Caesar's wife, and Marion Rosenweig will play Portia, wife of Marcus Brutus. Women attendants will be Barbara Beasley, Mary McGuire and Mary Smith.

John Hamilton is stage manager for the production and settings will be designed by James Riley. June Craft is costumer.

Performances will start at 8:30 each night.

Tickets are now on sale at the Playmakers business office, 214 Abernethy Hall. No reserved seats will be held, according to a theatre spokesman. In case of rain, said the spokesman, performances will be held over.

Picnics, Exhibits, Gray Talk Featured In Parents' Day

The fifth annual Parents' Day will be held on campus today, sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, Carolina's service fraternity.

The program which has been planned by APO for UNC students and their parents is as follows:

At 11 a.m. students and their parents have been invited to attend the church of their preference in Chapel Hill. From noon until 2 p.m. the group is scheduled to have lunch. Picnics may be held on the campus.

Demonstrations and exhibits at the various science and art buildings will be open to all visitors this afternoon.

The greenhouse of the botany building will be open from 2 until 5 p.m. The greenhouse is located in the Arboretum near the botany building.

The physics department will have an exhibit located in 204 Phillips Hall open to visitors from 1 until 4 p.m.

The geology department will open the geology museum, located on the first floor of New East, open from 2 until 4 p.m.

Person Hall will be open from 1 until 5 p.m. The 18th Annual North Carolina school art exhibit will be on display. There are 1,610 pieces from 152 North Carolina Schools on exhibit.

Swain Hall, in which the television studios are located, will be open to the public. The main observation room has been reserved so parents and students may watch rehearsals and the live show which begins at 6 p.m.

The Morehead Planetarium will have its regular shows today plus and open house for parents and students from 1 until 5 p.m.

From 3:30 until 4:30 p.m. a faculty reception will be held in the main lounge of Graham Memorial for students and their parents.

Dormitories will be open to parents from 1 until 5 p.m.

At 4 p.m. President Gordon Gray will address students and visiting parents on the lawn beneath Davie Poplar. The University Band will give a concert following President Gray's speech.

Parents have been invited to attend the Petite Musicale at which Miss Marjorie Still, pianist, will perform. The event is sponsored by Graham Memorial and will be held in the Main Lounge of the Student Union building.

Panty Raid

GREENVILLE, April 30—(AP)—Two East Carolina students have been suspended from their dormitory and another has been allowed to withdraw from school as a result of Thursday night's panty raid.

(See RAIDERS, page 3)

Orchestra Will Play 'Tribute'

The University Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Edgar Alden, assistant conductor, will play in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m. in a concert sponsored by the Music Department.

The 60-piece ensemble, composed of students, faculty members and residents of the community, will give the first performance of "Tribute" from Suite for Orchestra by Roger McDuffie.

Composer, arranger and trumpet player, McDuffie is a graduate student in the Music Department, completing requirements for an M.A. degree and teaching certificate. He received his B. A. degree from UNC in 1949.

Other works on the Tuesday Series program are: Beethoven's Symphony in D Major, No. 2; Debussy's Petite Suite; Wagner's Perlude to Die Meistersinger, and Handel's Concerto Grosso in C Minor.

Edgar Alden, instructor in theory, music appreciation and strings, is a graduate of Oberlin Conservatory and of UNC. Formerly concert master of the North Carolina Symphony and the Mozart Festival Orchestra in Asheville, he was appeared as soloist with both of these as well as other orchestras.

SP Elections

The Student Party will hold election of new officers at its regular weekly meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Roland Parker Lounge of GM.

11th Sigma Chi Derby Will Be Held Friday

The 11th annual Sigma Chi Derby, highlighted by selection of "Miss Modern Venus" for 1955, will be held here Friday, beginning with a 2 p.m. parade.

Known as "The Battle of the Coeds," the Derby will feature competition between representatives of sororities, residence halls and the nurses' dormitory.

Heading Derby arrangements for sponsoring Sigma Chi Fraternity are Hosea E. Wilson and Mickey Chamblee.

Among the post-parade events in Kenan Stadium will be the Grand National relay race, a pie-throwing contest called "Hit the Geek," original skits by participating teams and a secret event which may range from milking a cow to catching a greased pig.

Trophies will be awarded to the winner of each event, including a team trophy for the group winning the most points.

The beauty competition for the "Miss Modern Venus" title will climax the afternoon celebration. Fraternity officials said judgment will be based solely on figure, with girls wearing shorts, sweaters and high heels.

Contestants will include the following coeds: Alpha Delta Pi Sorority — Sue Crumpler, Barbara Stone and Harriette Watson.

Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority — JiJi Rainwater, Anne Page, and Alice Eison. Chi Omega Soroity — Nancy Buran, Sally Edgerton and Sara Fair.

Kappa Delta Sorority — Sylvia Yelton, Elizabeth Floyd and Marcia McCord. Independent Coeds — Lib Whitfield, Jackie O'Brien and Joan Palmer.

Nurses — Nancy Nussear, Donna Blair Booe and Mary Lou Okey. Pi Beta Phi Sorority — Barbara Fleshman and Trish Permenter, Delta Delta Delta Sorority — Carol Taylor, Pat Oliver and Jane Howie.

More than 150 door prizes, donated by the Chapel Hill Merchants Assn., will be distributed during the Derby program.

Denied Bond

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. April 30—(AP)—An application for an appeal bond for Junius Scales, convicted chairman of the Communist party in the Carolinas, was denied today by Federal Judge Armistead Dobie.

Scales now may approach either John J. Parker, or Morris A. Soper, the other two judges

Two Named For Alumni Positions

R. Mayne Albright of Raleigh and George M. Stephens of Asheville have been nominated for president-elect of the UNC General Alumni Association.

Nominations were made at the annual alumni assembly. Elections of these and other officers will be made by mail ballot and announced at commencement.

The president-elect would succeed John Harden of Greensboro, now president-elect who succeeds Associate State Supreme Court Justice William H. Bobbitt of Raleigh, who presided at tonight's session.

Other nominations were:

Second vice-president, W. Lunsford Crew, Roanoke Rapids, and Terry Sanford, Fayetteville.

For two places as director, Alumni Association, George D. McDaniel, New York; Maury Long, Washington, D. C.; William D. Snider, Greensboro, and Ed Rankin, Raleigh.

One place on athletic council, Dr. M. D. Bonner, High Point, and Marion R. Cowper, Kinston. Cowper is at present a member of the council but his term expires this year.

Members of the nominating committee were Charles W. Phillips

Purks Speaks

Dr. J. Harris Purks, provost of the University, will speak on "Academic Planning" at the Faculty Club luncheon Tuesday at 1 p.m. at the Carolina Inn.

MRS. JANE CRAIGE GRAY

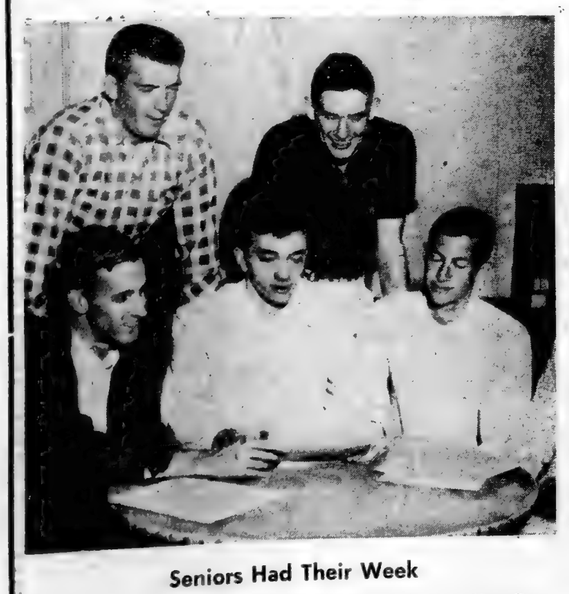
. . . annual award to be made tomorrow

Jane Gray Award Slated Monday

The second annual presentation of the Jane Craige Gray Award will be made tomorrow in the main lounge of Graham Memorial at 8 p.m.

The award is given each year to the most outstanding woman student in the junior class, in memory of the late Jane Craige Gray, wife of University President Gordon Gray.

The award is given by Beta Chi Chapter of Kappa Delta Sorority. Mrs. Gray was initiated into the sorority as an alumna in 1950.



The presentation will be made by Dean C. P. Spruill. Dean Katherine Carmichael will speak as a representative of the women students of the University. Following the presentation the award winner will be honored with a reception.

The committee that selects the recipient of the award is composed of Katherine Carmichael, dean of women; Ray Jefferies, assistant dean of students; Tom Creasy, retiring president of the student body; Miss Luanne Thornton, retiring chairman of women's orientation; Miss Nancy Whisnant, retiring chairman of the Women's Honor Council; and Miss Carol Webster, last year's recipient of the award.

Friends of the Gray family from all parts of the states are expected to attend the program and University students and faculty members are invited. The program has been arranged by Miss Martha May, new president of Kappa Delta, and Miss Babbie Dilorio, retiring president.

Mrs. Gray was the former Jane Boyden Craige of Winston-Salem. She attended the National Cathedral Academy in Washington and graduated from Vassar with honors. In Chapel Hill she was active in the organization of the School Art Guild, Newcomers Club, Colonial Dames and was organizing president of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital Auxiliary.

News Of The Week In Review In Pictures

Seniors Had Their Week

Seniors had their own week last week, with Class Free Day, Barefoot Day and a picnic at Hogan's Lake. The people who have guided the graduating class through its last year are (top) Committeemen Rueben Leonard and Martin Jordan, (bottom) Rollie Tillman, President Charlie Yarborough and Committeeman Herb Browne.

Alumni Assembly Gathered Here & Checked Progress

University alumni officials attending the Alumni Assembly held here this week are shown inspecting progress report made by senior class leaders, currently enrolling members of the 1955 graduating class in the General Alumni Assn. Judge William H. Bobbitt, of Raleigh and Charlotte (third from left in picture) is president of the General Alumni Assn. Shown conferring with Judge Bobbitt are (left to right) Ogburn Yates Jr., president of the rising senior class; John Harden, Greensboro, Alumni Assn. president-elect; Judge Bobbitt; Tom Creasy, former student body president, and Bill Calvert, chairman of the senior class alumni committee.

Fowler Moved In As President

Don Fowler, shown being sworn in by Student Council Chairman Walt Joyner, moved into his job as president of the student body. Thursday, Fowler made his first appointments. He named Dave Reid attorney general, Jake Phelps was chosen assistant attorney general, Jack Markham is Yackety-Yack editor and Pat Hunter was chosen NSA coordinator.

Welcome To Our Groves Of Academe

The annual Parents Day, now in its fifth season, has claimed a niche among the classic proceedings of the year.

Alpha Phi Omega, an organization which almost daily undertakes unsung service roles on the campus, crowns its calendar with this conclave of parents, professors, administrators, and students.

Too often, parents suffer their children to come up unto the University's gates rather than send them. A program like Parents Day serves a special purpose for those whom this shoe fits. For this is a day when they may savor, and test for approval, some of the atmosphere which daily surrounds their sons and daughters.

We offer welcome to Chapel Hill's groves of academe. These groves shelter something worth savoring again and again. For those who have been here one or a dozen or a hundred times before, for those who spent their days of formal tutoring here; this welcome is hardly necessary.

To other parents, equally welcome: We hope you discover this intangible charm among the groves. The charm is, as we have heard Dr. Archibald Henderson say of the Mecklenburg Declaration, "out there somewhere." We know you will find it.

Getting Honor Into The Student System

The failure of an Honor System at one university was ascribed to the fact that "the faculty had all the honor and the students had the system."

This week a student committee, after two months study, came up with plans for avoiding the separation of honor and system at Carolina. While the work of this group touched on court mechanics and rehabilitation of offenders, the emphasis seemed to be on the need for more contact between the Honor System and students.

The student committee, headed by Scotty Hester, suggested manuals for court members, "comprehensive tests" during orientation, reminders on the backs of student identification, and signs with such inspiring mottos as, "Your Honor Is Our System." Aside from the "Big-Brother-Is-Watching" tone of the sign idea, all the suggestions would help the campus feel and understant the presence of an Honor System.

However, the Hester committe did not point up one of the biggest failures of the present student courts—the failure to report cases to the campus newspaper. Only if students can read regular accounts of the various courts' work, will they realize that the Honor System is a living, breathing element of campus life, instead of a string of shining ideals tossed about during orientation.

Unfortunately, this past year's student courts have not seen fit to report cases regularly to the campus; there have been a few general summaries of court action, but they have not appeared on a regular basis and were too abbreviated.

Assurances from the new Men's Council that it wil report cases to the campus on a regular basis have already been made, though. The Daily Tar Heel is heartened by the Council's awareness of this problem.

Perhaps with this improvement and implementation of some of the Hester committee suggestions, there will be more honor than system at Carolina. We hope so.

Show Biz Fine, But . . .

In the shadows of a local bistro we heard Sound and Fury's "Satan's Saints" cited enthusiastically for "sheer undergraduate verve." We hereby echo that citation.

Bo Bernardin, writer-star of the musicale, and Joel Fleishman, so lately gone from the GM haunts of coot and politician, have, along with their hardworking and talented troupe, done themselves proud.

So 1955 becomes the year of resurrection for Sound and Fury. Warm-handed reception indicates that mutiny will follow if it is interred again. Only one thing bothered us, though, as we sat hysterical through "Satan's Saints." When a Thomas, a Bowles, a Humphrey, a Saltonstal, a Douglas mount the stages of this campus where are those interminable rows of absorbed, enthusiastic faces?

Show biz is fine. But let's balance things up a bit.

The Daily Tar Heel

Pigs Is Pigs On Orwell's Animal Farm

J. A. C. Dunn

ON THURSDAY WE went and saw "Animal Farm" in cartoon version at the movies, and were forcibly struck by two or three items.

To begin with, of course, there was the cartooning itself, which was brilliant — better than Walt Disney because as well as soupsweet drawing there was genuine satire in attitudes, gestures and facial expressions; and better than the Mr. Magoo type of cartoon because the satire was leavened, at points, with beautiful artistry, found mostly in the landscaping.

The satire in the drawing was effected not only through caricature of humans through animals, but caricature of humans through humans. Farmer Jones has an unforgettable face, almost Frankenstinian in its ugliness, and a staggering case of five o'clock shadow that would make Burma Shave lick its lathered lips and softly rub its hands in capitalistic glee. Whimper, the sharp trader who supplies Animal Farm with pam and other unnecessary but scrumptious goodies makes on think of merchants in university towns who know quiete well just where it's safe to drive a bargain too hard.

We cannot remember having seen animals in animated cartoons drawn with such lacerating vraisemblance. Napoleon, the pig who takes control of Animal Farm by means of a police force of labradors with filed teeth, is so like Big Brother it is heartening to know that Big Brother really does look that much like a pig. And it is curious to note that any Big Brother the world has seen fits perfectly easily into the character of Napoleon. Labradors make excellent hoodlums, horses make excellent working classes, sheep are inimitable martyrs and fowls are indescribable "unthinking followers."

But the pigs are the best. It is not because they are fat and sloppy; it is not because they are greedy; it is simply that their eyes change much too readily from the wide, innocent, vacant stare, to the paternally grandiose, through deceptive emotion, blandness, cool intelligence, and finally to with fierce, sneering cruelty. The pigs are the best tyrants. They look as if they're thinking one thing, and actually they are thinking something else .

OF COURSE THE whole story is nothing but a parody of the rise of the common people and their revolt against one master at the instigation of a Marx or a Lenin (in, curiously enough, pig form), their allegiance to another master, their betrayal by a third who becomes a tyrant, and their final victory over the dictator by means of mass revolution effected with the help of the fact that the needle-toothed dogs get drunk while the Kremlin has a party. The movie ends with this defeat of the Big Men with ribbons on their chests (but, we suspect, very little hair); and when one compares the ending of the movie to the present state of Communist Russia, one seriously wonders if the awesome reign of Communism isn't as near the end of its demise as its counterpart in "Animal Farm" indicates that it is.

There is a similarity to the Roman Empire, the French Empire and the Russian rule of fear that sets us thinking. The upper echelons of the Communist Party are certainly not too steady at the moment. People are getting a rather clear picture nowadays of the ways of Communists and how they come and go — mostly go. We wonder if the Kremlin and all the little Kremlins are not quite near a fall from which all the king's tanks and all the king's secret police cannot repair it.

The Blues & Sorrows Of Jazz

Tom Spain

The life of a jazz musician has always been anything but easy. The blues and sorrows brought out in so many jazz styles have seldom been created for effect, but rather they have reflected a way of life and a standard of living. A bright young musician should think twice before entering the jazz field, for it often leads to misery in the keenest sense of the word.

There are those who are highly successful, materially speaking, but all too often, their monetary rewards are not due entirely to their jazz talents. Louis Armstrong exemplifies this, as he has become more of a showman than a musician. Likewise with countless other successes.

Many have turned to the commercial side of popular music. Here they can find means by which they can support their families, but it is well known that they must sacrifice the freedom that is essential to jazz. Bobby Hackett, an all-time great Chicago artist, earns his bread and butter by trying to cage emotions with Gleason's tearful bits of sentimentality. Bix Beiderbecke was engulfed by the slushy Whiteman band, where he was placed behind a music stand, never again to perform as he wished.

Others pursue different fields and wind up life insurance salesmen or restaurant owners, while some seek to enlarge upon their talents. Teddy Wilson, Benny Goodman, and Mel Powell have studied formal music and composition. Their contributions to this part of the music world are not to be overlooked. But few jazzmen have been able to maintain a comfortable living standard. Those that stick to it are sometimes able to earn large incomes, but suffer an existence of one-niters and constant travel. Honest jazz devotees who hang on for no other reason than for jazz alone, care little for material comfort and normal hours. They seldom live long.

Occasionally, departed musicians return to the fold, if only for an hour or two. Public demand brought Goodman out of the Julliard school, and he made a short road tour, a few nightclub stands, and some recordings. Now and then, a benefit concert will reveal an almost forgotten star. After hours jam sessions of pit-orchestra musicians, studio bands, and old friends are becoming more widely known, and reminiscent of the days when jazz was an almost secretive form. These impromptu meetings haven't escaped the ears of the recording industry, and in one of Columbia's latest releases, we find some former dixieland stars, long-since considered foreign to the jazz world.

RAMPART AND VINE is good-time jazz. Although the student of the American folk art might scream "commercial corn", the talents portrayed are nonetheless excellent. A conglomorate organization of representatives of all towns and phases of dixieland jazz, the Rampart Street Paraders know well what they're doing. Their presentation proves that one does not lose his touch, though his tastes may change. The music cannot be compared with any strict style, as it has a style of its own, heretofore seldom attempted.

The musicians are Hollywood studio performers. Their jobs are steady and incomes probably good. Being only part-time jazz artists, they play for fun, and fun they have. Perhaps the only other group to which they might be compared is the Fire House Five comedy group. The difference lies in that the Rampart Street Paraders rely on music rather than buffoonery for effect. The red-shirted clowns of the Disney studio cannot be classified with the Paraders for the sole reason that they are not real musicians.

Nick Fatool, Abe Lincoln, Matty Matlock, and Eddie Miller made excellent reputations in the twenties and early thirties. Their latest release does not impair them. Lincoln's trombone solo in the lengthy version of Hindustan might be considered one of the best ever recorded. Fatool's drumming in the same number, is clever and thoroughly effective. Fatool has not only maintained his subtle touch, but has developed a more imaginative style since his Condon days.

Hindustan is truly in the hot jazz category. The many solos swing with a drive and life seldom found in jazz recording of today. The accompanying selections also have a clear, clean and loud sound, perhaps a trait found only in music of well-fed performers. One admirable attribute found in the Parader's interpretations is an element of discipline which doesn't allow for hamming. This alone makes the remording worth the attention of the jazz fan.

The West Coast interpretations of dixieland jazz have been generally awful, due primarily to the absence of first-rate talent and a strong element of corn, a favorite cover-up for incompetence. It is worthy to note that the better jazz musicians can come out of hiding at times, and reestablish their supremacy. The individual talents of the Rampart Stree Paraders are excellent, and their combined talents make up a form of jazz as yet unnamed. It is an orphan of the jazz forms, but the total effect is a good one.

Lifting Morale Of Professors

(The Sanford Herald)

Some restriction in the use of automobiles by on-campus students at the University of North Carolina and State College has been recommended by the Visiting Committee of the Consolidated University. It brought out the amazing facts that there are 1,932 student-owned automobiles at the Raleigh school and 1,492 at Chapel Hill — that 42.8 per cent of the State Freshmen and Sophomores and 17.8 per cent of those at Carolina have cars. No explanation was offered as to why the State lads are so much better wheeled.

Parking is a major problem on and near both campuses. Visitors and townspeople are inconvenienced by the motor-vehicle saturation — and so, of course, are the students themselves. Whether automobiles add to the campus snobbery with which fraternities generally are associated, we don't know; also, we have no statistics on the relative scholastic quality of driving and nondriving students

We are sure, though, that faculty morale would be improved by restrictions on cars at the colleges. Think what must be the effect upon a Kenan Professor of History, say, at Carolina, when he is blocked out of a parking space for his '49-model Chevrolet by a C-average Sophomore in a '55-four-hole Buick. Or consider what might cross the mind of a Chairman of a Department who, after saving gasoline money a month to drive up to the Library of Congress, overhears some lout deficient in quality points planning to motor down to Daytona Beach, Fla., for a week-end house party.

More than mental attitudes is involved here. If officials of the Consolidated University don't reduce the campus car count, half the Instructors and Assistants and more than a scattering of the Associates are likely to put away their books and go into the gasoline and tire business.

Secretary Dulles Climbs A Tree

Ralph McGill

'An' den," said Uncle Remus, "Brer Rabbit, he clime er tree."

"But, Uncle Remus," said the Little Boy, "rabbits can't climb trees."

'Dis time, chile," admonished Uncle Remus, "Brer Rabbit is bleeged to clime er tree."

Secretary of State Dulles has climbed a tree.

He was "bleeged to."

He has announced that this country will, if Red China is sincere in wanting a discussion, meet with her representatives in talks pertaining to a cease-fire in the Formosa Straits . . . and will not insist on Chiang Kai-shek's presence.

This is another of the many "turnabouts" which have featured the Eisenhower foreign policy.

This last one is what the man in the White House wants. He apparently has had a rude awakening to facts earlier not revealed to him.

He had been led into a position during the campaign of 1952 which tied Chiang tightly about his neck. He was still uninformed of the true conditions when he "unleashed" Chiang Kai-shek. He was led soon thereafter into the "massive retaliation" policy. And now, after having said for two consecutive days there would be no talks unless Chiang was included, the Secretary reluctantly and fearfully climbs the tree he just naturally was "bleeged" to climb.

OPINION

He knows the Knowland-McCarthy faction will shake that tree mighty hard.

The overwhelming opinion in this country is against any warfare over the two offshore islands, Quemoy and Matsu.

The American people want a cease-fire—as they wanted one in Korea. There was much more reason to continue the war in Korea than there is to begin one over Quemoy and Matsu.

They will support defense of Formosa. But except for morale value the two islands are of no strategic or tactical value either as bases for an assault on the mainland or as steppingstones for one against Formosa. To so insist is to ignore the fate of atomic weapons. One of the larger ones, cynically referred to as "the large economy size," instantly would wipe out any life on either island.

Never have the American people been so uninformed as they have been about the entire Quemoy-Matsu-Formosa problem. In this day of atomic weapons, to continue harping on the Seventh Fleet's ability to come in close and shell the islands is complete folly. The Communists have enough air bases nearby on the mainland to put the fleet in the very cornea of the eye of danger.

MUST!

We defend Formosa—and must defend it—because it a part of the present perimeter of defense.

But this brings us to another tree which the administration may be "bleeged to climb."

If the Red Chinese are sincere—as they well may not be . . . a cease-fire may be had. Presumably it would then be followed by discussions of the whole Asian problem, including Formosa. Assuming what now is the unlikely fact—that this stage should be reached, the tree to be climbed would then be at hand.

Chiang would have to be removed and that island left to the Formosans under trusteeship of the United Nations.

We will either have a settlement of the Formosan problem with either the Reds nor the Nationalist Chinese there, or we will fight about it.

Maybe we will have to go to war about it.

But if we don't want to fight there, then we must know and face the fact that a settlement of the Formosan problem will mean a Chiangless island.

Meanwhile, Communist gains continue in Indochina and Indonesia.

Because of the trap into which this administration was pushed by the Knowland fraction of the Republican Party, we are necessarily preoccupied with the Formosan Straits . . . and unable to conceive or execute an over Asian policy.—The Atlanta Constitution.

Maryland Gets By Tar Heels, 3-2, With Three Hitter

Frosh Down HPHS, 8-7

By JIM FINE

The North Carolina Tar Babies, aided by two inside-the-park home runs, defeated a hustling High Point high school team by the score of 8-7 at Emerson Field yesterday.

Jim Harwell and Roger Honeycut were the big guns in the Tar Baby hitting attack, each collecting a home run.

The game was nip and tuck all the way down to the wire, with Carolina untying the score in the bottom of the eighth inning.

A big Tar Baby rally was halted in the fourth when pitcher Doug McCall hit into a double play.

High Point rallied in the top of the fifth on a pinch hit by Joe Jones. Pitcher Jack Hunt was safe on a fielder's choice. McIver replaced McCall on the mound, and threw wild at first base on a hit ball that should have been an easy out, but which let in two big runs.

Two high lights of the game came when UNC left-fielder Delon Lambert made a sensational shoe string catch and threw to second to double off a High Point runned and end the inning. Jerry Bryson, Carolina catcher took a beautiful throw from Rick Orr in the top of the ninth inning to cut off a potential run and help the Tar Babies go on to victory.

Charles Cross, the fireman of the freshman mound corps, came on in the top of the ninth to snuff out the late High Point rally.

Score by innings:

High Point	011 020 030-7	4	2
Carolina	Frosh 210 020 12x-8	6	5

Batteries: Hunt, Whitford (7) and Russell; McCall, McIver (3), Gilliland (8), Cross (9) and Bryson.

Raugh Loses Five Hitter; Strikes Out 12

COLLEGE PARK, Md., April 30 (AP) — Russ Duffey, Maryland right hander, let North Carolina down with three hits today and Maryland won a 3-2 victory on an error, a wild pitch, a fly and a single in the last half of the eighth.

Jim Raugh, North Carolina hurler, allowed only five hits and struck out 12, but he twice hit Maryland's Ralph Ward and a wild pitch figured in the winning run.

The score was tied at 2-2 when first baseman Ernie Berliner led off the Maryland eighth by getting aboard on an error. He moved to second on the wild pitch and to third on a long fly. Charley Pratt, Maryland second baseman, singled to center to bring him in.

Maryland scored a single run in the second and Connie Gravite, Tar Heel center fielder, tied it in the fourth with a bases-empty home run, his sixth of the season.

The win was sweet revenge to the Terps, who lost to the Tar Heels, 10-5, at the season's start. Unc has a 4-5 record in ACC play.

Beatty Cops 2-Mile Event In Penn Relays

Three top North Carolina tracksters participated in the Penn Relays in Philadelphia yesterday and Friday, and one of them, Jim Beatty, came away from the big meet the holder of an individual title.

Beatty, Roger Morris, and Richard Waters represented the Tar Heels, and Beatty captured the two-mile run in 9:19.8, a new University of North Carolina record for that event. No report had come in late last night to The Daily Tar Heel concerning Morris' performances in the shot and discus and Waters' jump in the pole vault.

Beatty dethroned defending champion Bob Sbarra of Manhattan in taking his two-mile crown. Beatty crossed the finish line about 10 yards in front of Sbarra, who had appeared to have the race wrapped up before Beatty whipped out of the pack on the first turn of the final lap, passed Sbarra and inched further ahead with every step.

Sbarra apparently spent too much time consentrating on Don Townsend of St. John's of Brooklyn, who led in the early stages. Beatty at that time was far back and drew little attention from Sbarra, a fatal mistake.

BEATTY'S TIME was the best of his young career, and established him as the best two-miler in the history of the University. His time beat the old record by seven-tenths of a second. Jack Milne ran a 9:20.5 in the 1947 Penn Relays to set the mark that Beatty broke.

Yale's Stew Thompson won the discus, one of the events Morris was in, with a heave of 162 feet, 2½ inches. Morris' best this year was a 157'5½", the eighth best throw in the nation this spring according to NCAA statistics, but no report was given of his Penn performance. Morris also took part in the shot but was expected to place higher in the discus.

POLE VAULTER Richard Waters took part yesterday, but no word had come to Chapel Hill of his jump. Waters cleared 13'3" at his last outing, to set a new UNC record here a week ago. He had been previously hampered by a leg injury, and his 13'3" had been the first time this season he had really gone all-out. He was expected to make the Penn jump the best of his career so far.

Duke's ace, Joel Shankle successfully defended his crowns in the high hurdles and broad jump. He set a new meet record in winning the highs in 14.1 and won the broad jump with a leap of 23 feet, 10 inches.

In the relay events, power racked Manhattan carted off three titles and Villanova won two.

A couple of meet records went by the boards in the field events. Al Cantell of LaSalle of Philadelphia smashed the javelin mark and in the process became the first competitor ever to win the event three times, while Marty Engel of Ft. Dix, N. J., and Bob Taylor of Rhode Island both shattered the hammer throw standard.

Cantello got off a throw of 223 feet, 1 inch to erase the old record of 223-10½ set back in 1938 by Nick Vulmanic of Penn State. The winning effort came on Cantello's final throw.

Engel, a former New York University muscle man, actually won the hammer throw but since he is in the Army and the top collegian also is recognized as the winner, Taylor got a share in the prize.

Engel's throw was 183 feet, 4 inches, breaking the old record of 177-1⅝ set in 1952 by Steve Dillon of Manhattan. Dillon, now a GI stationed in Ft. Devens, Mass., took third with a 176-2 toss. Taylor's best throw was 180-7½.

Former UNC Tennis Ace Here May 21

Former United States Davis Cup player and one of the greatest tennis players in the history of UNC, Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, Ga., will appear in an exhibition here Saturday, May 21.

Grant deemed the immortal little man of southern tennis, will appear in both singles and doubles competition against the 1955 Atlantic Coast Conference champions, which will be determined in the ACC tournament heme May, 12, 13 and 14.

The North Carolina Tennis Association is working jointly with UNC in bringing Grant here.

ONE OF GREATEST

Regarded as one of the greatest clay court players the game has ever known, Grant's long list of accomplishments include numerous Davis Cup wins, 11 Southern Championships, and other tournament wins.

His last Southern Championship crown same in 1952, when he, at the age of 42, battled and beat opponents 20 years his junior in 105 degree heat in Memphis, Tenn.

Big Four Day Meeting Mon.

Any students interested in participating in the annual Big Four sports day scheduled for May 10 at Duke are urged to meet Monday at four o'clock in 304 Wollen to arrange for try-outs.

Competition among students from Duke, Wake Forest, Carolina and N. C. State will be carried on in golf, tennis, ping-pong, volley ball, badminiton, horseshoes, softball and handball.

UNC's Intramural Department will conduct try-outs for students who are interested, with the department naming those who will be excused from classes on the day of the event.

Carolina Tracksters Top Va., 96-36, To Remain Undefeated In Six Meets

Without the services of its three top men, who were taking part in the Penn Relays in Philadelphia, the North Carolina track team won its sixth dual meet of the season, whipping Virginia 95½ to 35½, in Charlottesville yesterday.

The Tar Heels won all three places in four events while taking top honors in all but four contests.

Charles Yarborough and Claude Rhule were double winners for the Carolina team, scoring ten points apiece. Yarborough took the pole vault and broad jump with little difficulty, while Rhule was winning both hurdle events.

BOB WILSON was the Tar Heels' high scorer, however, as he placed in four events for a total of 12 points. Wilson copped first in the javelin, tied with two team mates for first in the high jump, took second in the broad jump, and placed third in the low hurdles.

Bob Barden and Glenn Nanney each won a distance event, and placed second in another for eight points each.

THE MILE ended with Barden winning in 4:32.6 and Nanney second. Nanney won the two-mile and Barden took second in this race.

John Russel took two of the Cavaliers four first places with wins in the 100 and 220-yard dashes.

of the 4th Circuit, or Chief Justice Earl Warren.

Scales was convicted under the section of the Smith Act which forbids membership in an organization advocating the overthrow of the government by force.

Judge Bryan, in sentencing Scales, said that once convicted under federal law, a man is not eligible for appeal bond unless a question of law is involved. Bryan denied bond when notice of appeal was given. Both Stanley and McCusty told Judge Dobie yesterday that no question of law was involved.

Students Visit Mount Airy

Twenty-seven UNC students will travel to Mount Airy this weekend for an International Student Deputation, sponsored by the University YMCA and YWCA.

The visit is the last in a series of monthly trips made to various communities in the state during the past school year. In the program, students from other countries stay overnight with families in the communities. During the past year over 100 North Carolina families have been visited by students from abroad as a result of the program.

The planning committee on the UNC campus consists of Miss Ginger Currin, Meredithville, Va.; Miss Alice Eison, Marceling, Mo.; John Bielefelt, Royal Oak, Mi., and Ram Desikan, Madras, India

Jurgensen To Give Lectures

"The Crimes Against Ibsen" will be the topic of the Humanities Faculty Lecture for spring, which will be given by Prof. Kai Jurgensen of the dramatic art department.

The lecture will be given Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Professor Jurgensen will discuss what has happened to Ibsen in the process of being translated into English and in the process of being presented in the American theatre by people who have either tampered with his plays or people who worship him to the point of not being willing to change the plays in any particular.

The lecture is one of the established series of Humanities Faculty Lectures and is open to students, faculty and townspeople.

Professor Jurgensen has been on the staff of the Dramatic Arts Dept. since 1944 and is the translator, with Prof. Robert F. Schenkkan, of 11 Iben plays. His translation of Peer Gynt was used in the American National Theatre and Academy production of that play in New York, with John Carfield taking the leading part, and was used also in the Playmaker production.

Coordinating Group Created To Erase Conflicts In UNC Events; Compiles Calendar

A new Campus Recreation Coordinating Council, which has as its purpose the elimination of conflicts in scheduling campus activities, has been formed. Michael Epstein, junior from Middletown, Conn., is chairman of the council.

Tommy Smoot, sophomore from Greenville, was named vice-president, and Miss Ancy Hoover, junior from Concord, was elected secretary.

The CRCC is comprised of representatives from various agencies promoting campus recreation and will serve as an advisory capacity to the Dean of Student Activities, according to Epstein.

The new chairman said the Council, organized during the past semester, anticipates accomplishing the following goals:

(1) "To serve in an advisory capacity to the Dean of Student Activities;

(2) "To develop cooperation among all groups and organizations interested in promoting and providing campus recreation programs and services;

(3) "To encourage the coordination of these agencies in order that each may more effectively meet the recreation needs of the students;

(4) "To study and appraise the recreation resources and needs of the campus;

(5) "To plan for the maximum use of each facility;

(6) "To eliminate duplication of services and activities by serving as a clearinghouse for ideas and recommendations."

Epstein pointed out that the council has no power over the activites of any agency or organization on campus and cannot conduct recreation programs or legislate in matters that are the within the province of any other group.

"The purposes of this group," he said, "is to coordinate the activities of campus recreation agencies, to advise the Dean of Student Activities in matters dealing with student recreation needs and to stimulate new ideas and programs which will enrich campus living."

The CRCC will compile a calendar of weekly events which will appear weekly in The Daily Tar Heel.

The speaker is currently a private research consultant.

Act Debaters Finish Series On Red China

The second annual Atlantic Coast Debate Tournament concluded its events with the announcement of results last Saturday.

In the affirmative division of debating on the question, Resolved: "That the United States Should Extend Diplomatic Recognition to the Communist Government of China," Duke University won first place with the best win-lose record in the four rounds of debate. The UNC team of Miss Donna Ashcraft and Bev Webb tied for second with Wake Forest, South Carolina and Virginia.

In the negative division there was a tie for first place between South Carolina and Virginia, with UNC's team of Miss Carol Dickman and Forbes Ramsay placing second. Wake Forest placed third in the division.

In the affirmative division of the subsidary tournament, the UNC team of Miss Anne Huffman and Miss Virginia Agnew tied for first place wtih Duke. University of Virginia placed second, with a tie between the UNC team of Dave Burrows and Sonny Evans and South Carolina for the third place slot.

In the negative division, there was a tie between the UNC team of Dave Lieberman and Charles Katzenstein and Duke for first place. University of Virginia and Wake Forest tied for second, and South Carolina placed third.

In the after dinner speaking contest, Miss Marjorie Thomas of Wake Forest placed first. Her speech was entitled "Communism in the Girls' Dorms?" Bill Parsons of Virginia placed second with "The Essentials of A Debater," and Sonny Evans of UNC placed third with a speech entitled "Resolved: That the United States Should Extend Diplomatic Recognition of the Confederate Government of Dixie."

In the extempore speeches, which were all concerned with the aspect of contemporary education, speakers from Wake Forest and South Carolina tied for first place, Dave Burrows of UNC tied for second place with the University of Virginia speaker.

Dr. J. Jeffrey Auer of the University of Virginia was named director of the Atlantic Coast Forensic Conference in a meeting of the coaches and debate directors last Friday.

The conference concluded the year's activities for the Carolina Debate Squad. The Debate Council will meet tomorrow afternoon to elect officers for the coming year.

Wagner Coming

Robert F. Wagner Jr., mayor of New York City, will speak tomorrow night at 8:30 in Hill Hall.

Mayor Wagner will speak under auspices of the Carolina Forum.

He will be introduced by Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial. His talk will be followed by a question and answer period in Hill Hall and a reception in Graham Memorial.

Symphony Concert Is Tonight

The University Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Edgar Alden, assistant conductor, will give a concert in Hill Hall tonight at 8 o'clock.

The 60 piece ensemby, composed of students, faculty members and residents of the community, will give the first performance of Tribute by Roger McDuffie. Composer of Prelude for Brass, Septet, performed at Davidson College last spring, and of the incidental music for Julius Caesar, to be given by the Carolina Playmakers here this week, McDuffie is a graduate student in the Music Dept. He received his B.A. from the University in 1949. After three years in the United States Air Force, he returned to Chapel Hill last fall to complete requirements for the M.M. degree and for a teaching certificate.

HANDEL

Handel's Concerto Grosso in C Minor will be performed with soloists Bert Davis, Houston ; Mrs. Jean Heard, Chapel Hill; Miss Mary Gray Clarke, Washington and Melvin Bernstein, Chapel Hill.

SP Names Harrington New Party Chairman

By NEIL BASS

The Student Party elected Bob Harrington chairman for 1955-56 in a session last night.

The meeting, highlighted by elections and final approval for the revised party by-laws, was spiked by pleas for "unity."

In other elections, Donna Ashcraft, former party secretary, was picked vice chairman over Jim Turner and Frank Warren.

Pat McBane, long-time party member, was named party secretary to succeed Miss Ashcraft.

Jim Holmes, former SP legislative whip, was named to the treasurer's spot by acclaimation.

Elected to serve on the Advisory Board were four veteran SP members: David Reid, Tom Lambeth, Frank Warren, and Bob Young.

In the last election of the night, Al Issac was awarded the sergeant-at-arms job.

In accepting nomination for the chairmanship Harrington said, "We need reunion . . . revitalization . . . the party should be one big, harmonious family."

Harrington's chief competition for the chairmanship, Frank Warren, told the group in a booming voice that the reason the SP lost most of the posts in the last election was because, "We strayed too far from our ideals."

"We don't need concrete, little, dangling tidbits to hang in front of the electorate," Charlie Wolf told the body. Wolf was answering a plea by Warren for the party to do something "tangible for the student body.

Legislative Training Session Slated Today

A Legislative Training Session will be held today at 4 p.m. in 105 Gardner Hall for all the new members of the student Legislature.

Miss Joan Purser Honor Council Head

Miss Joan Purser, junior from Charlotte, has been elected chairman of the Women's Honor Council, according to past chairman Miss Nancy Whisnant.

Miss Palmer is a secretary of the YWCA, treasurer of Tri Delta sosority, member of the Graham Memorial Reception Committee and is on the campus coordinating council.

Miss Connie McMahon, Asheville, was elected to the postion of House Coordinator.

Miss McMahon is president of McIver dorm, treasurer of the Newman Club and a member of the Studen Party.

Miss Peggy Ballard was elected representative to Student Council.

Miss Ballard, Charlotte, is a member of the YWCA, the University Party and is pledge trainer of Pi Beta Phi Sorority.

Miss Mary Ann Keeter, sophomore from Shelby, was elected clerk.

Miss Keeter, a nursing student, is the secretary of the School of Nursing, social chairman of the sophomore class and a member of Wesley Foundation.

The outgoing officers are Miss Nancy Whisnant, chairman, Miss Betsy Goodwin, house coordinator, and Miss Carol Webster, clerk.

Miss Still's Recital Was 'Delightful' One

Last Sunday evening, in one of the delightful informal recitals organized by the Graham Memorial Activities Board, Miss Marjorie Still, a talented young pianist, afforded us an opportunity to judge her growth as an artist by offering a well-chosen program.

Her first presentation was Couperin's "La Visionnaire," one of those rarely heard works of this early French master. Marjorie's comprehension of the character of this music, her careful use of the pedals and the harpischord-like tone she obtained from a modern grand piano were surprisingly good and her playing of Couperin was neat and clear, as well as satisfying, all of these prime conditions for a good performance.

The piece de resistance was Beethoven's Piano Sonata in C Major, Opus 53, known as the "Waldstein." Miss Still's approach to this monumental work was one of humility, coupled with confidence and full understanding of what Beethoven intended. Good tempo, pergect clarity and fine coordination were characteristic in the first movement, Allegro con Brio, which flowed smoothly and poetically to the end. Due regard to proper tempo initiated

Cited For Scholarship, Leadership, Character

Miss Jane Cocke, UNC junior from Asheville, has been named winner of the second annual Jane Craige Gray Memorial Award given by Beta Chi Chapter of Kappa Delta Sorority to the outstanding junior class woman.

Presentation of the award was made last night by Dean C. P. Spruill of the General College in special ceremonies in Graham Memorial Lounge, with Miss Cocke the honoree at a reception following.

The Award was established by the Beta Chi Chapter in memory of the late wife of UNC President Gordon Gray. Mrs. Gray was initiated into the chapter as an alumna in 1950.

Selection for the honor is based on "high scholarship, leadership and character," according to the citation read by Dean Spruill.

Miss Cocke

Miss Cocke, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip C. Cocke of Asheville, attended Greensboro College, where she was active in student government. Her activities at UNC include membership in the Women's Residence Council, a dormitory council, YWCA and orientation committees. She is vice-president of Delta Delta sorority, secretary of the University Party and YWCA president for 1955-56.

Dean Katherine Carmichael represented the women students of the University at the ceremony. Among Kappa Delta Alumnae who assisted at the reception were Mrs. Louise Burns, Mrs. Kay Kyser and Mrs. W. D. Carmichael.

The ceremonies were attended by students and faculty, as well as numerous friends of the Gray family from throughout the State.

The Award Committee which made the selection included Dean Carmichael, Ray Jeffries, assistant dean of students affairs; Tom Creasy, retiring student body president; Miss Luanne Thornton retiring chairman of women's orientation; Miss Nancy Whisnant, retiring chairman of the Women's Honor Council, and Miss Carol Webster, last year's award winner.

Law School Holds Its Spring Fete

"The good lawyer, in every age and time, remains a student," said Dean Henry Brandis Jr. after presenting the scholarship awards at the recent annual spring banquet of the University Law School.

"The absolutely indispensable element of good scholarship is a good student," said Brandis. "This," he said referring to the awards," is a time for a heartfelt 'well done' from the faculty to those students who have developed and demonstrated their own capacities."

Urging them to accept and live with the law, Brandis told the students, "Today the horizons of law are unlimited."

The Block Improvement Award, given to the senior who in the opinion of the faculty has made the most constant improvement in his academic work from the time of his enrollment to the end of his fifth semester, was presented to Robert C. Vaughn Jr. of Winston-Salem.

Covering The Campus

There will be a meeting of orientation counselors and women orientation advisors tonight at 7:30 in Carroll Hall.

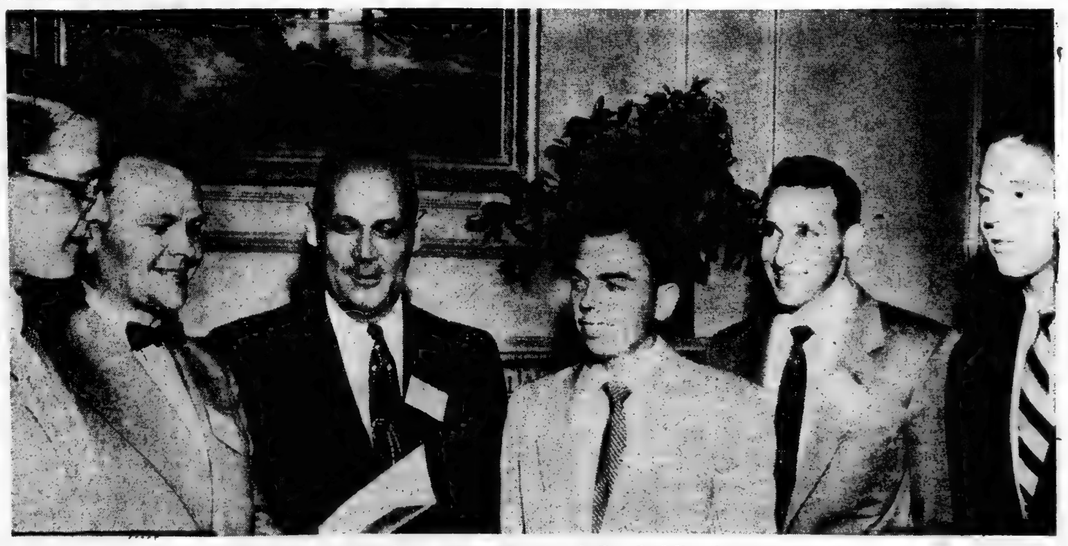
The problem of "Integration in Education, Especially As Pertains To Our Local School Situation" will be the subject of a public forum to be held at 6 p.m. Friday at the Watts Street Baptist Church in Durham.

Firecracker? What Are You Talking About?

According to a resident of Smith Dormitory, a firecracker was thrown at the building, near enough to be heard under one window, Sunday morning between 1 and 1:30 a.m.

When the housemother, Mrs. Sedalia Gold, heard the noise, the resident reported, she called the police.



Next a second firecracker was said to have exploded inside the building. It was found on the stairs from the second to the third floors.

Girls were muttering fears of an impending panty raid, engineered from the inside. A few voices declared they suspected the presence of men in the dormitory.

In the midst of all this, a fire drill was organized. All the girls left the building. It was reported that the police arrived when the girls were all out on the lawn.

Mrs. Gold denied there had been any fireworks at Smith, although she did say there was a fire drill. Asked if there was any trouble Saturday night, she replied, "I don't want to perjure myself."

The police said they had no record of a call from Smith.

Accounting Students Are Honored By Public Accountants

Outstanding accounting students were honored at a recent spring awards dinner held here by the North Carolina Assn. of Certified Public Accountants. Those named to receive medals as "Outstanding Student in Accounting" at their respective schools are (left to right) Thomas Land of Wake Forest College; Dean Gaines Rogers of Wake Forest; Richard M. Hunter, association president, who presented the awards; Tom Huston Jr., Duke University, and Richard E. Byrd Jr. and Harvey Max Harris, both of UNC.

Sissies, Shoes & God's Chillun

A history professor, pacing and peeking under the rows of hard-backed classroorm benches, announced just before class began last Friday (Barefoot Day) that he sought barefoot senior girls. He wanted, he said, to step on their toes. None of the senior girls had come barefooted.

"Sissies!" he thundered and laughed a huge asbestos laugh.

We felt like thundering and laughing with him. The beshoed Seniors had the joke on them. Not only sissies were they for not enjoying the pleasures of barefoot day, but downright foolish.

Why? Here's the point, made in a recent Greensboro Daily News editorial. That worthy journal took a native Southern woman to task for implying there's a correlation between bare feet and barbarians, recalling Longfellow's lines about departing and leaving footprints on the sands of time. Their idea was > that the men who made the best footprints on those sands didn't wear shoes. A shoe is hardly the criterion of a civilized man. Take David, Solomon, Pericles, Plato, Socrates, Aristotle, Caesar, Asoka Gautama Buddha, Mohammed, Ghandi and so on; they didn't wear shoes—sandals maybe that they could scuff off at a moment's notice, but not shoes. On the other Hitler, Mussolini and Stalin were confirmed shoewearers, but you would hardly call them civilized.

Whether certain seniors' unappropriate shoefulness last Friday was dictated by some inner voice whispering of that now-debunked link between naked soles and uncivility or from sheer modesty we just don't know. But Friday's "Sissies!" muffed a chance to move into a pretty fast caravan.

The moral of the story, and prespectives for next year's Barefoot Day had better take note, is that false modesty can harm.

Not all God's chillun ain't gotta have shoes.

Hear The (Hot) Wind Blow, Dear

Down in the galleys, the galleys so low, you can, today, lean your head over and hear the (hot) wind blow.

Once in a while one of those ill winds through and through which blows no good at all puffs into our office, aimed for print. We, as good Voltairians, believing in defense of even tawdry disagreement, must satisfy it. Today's appearance is the second for this particularly humid, ill and hot wind.

But if you have your clothespin securely clipped atop your nostrils you may, perhaps, find more than humidity and heat within that missile marked "You Will Cease." We didn't.

Our Crossed Puzzles

Newspapers rustled to the classroom floor, and the professor valiantly tried to ignore the sound. Perhaps he was thankful that this particular morning's paper carried no crossword puzzle; he probably lectured with new confidence as the papers fell.

Every other day, when professors go before their undergraduate charges, students are deeply engrossed in the terribly important task of figuring out three-letter words for ancient Greek rulers, or synomyns for "endurance."

All this strikes us as rather odd that folks pay their money to attend the University, hear in classes about the world's various and painful plights (from Formosa to lung cancer), yet still center their energies on word puzzles.

This is one puzzle, we wish they'd work on, too.

Oh! My Dear! Do You Know, In Sweden . . .

J. A. C. Dunn

IN TIME MAGAZINE of April 25 we were brought to a grinding halt on page 29 by a letter from one of Time's correspondents in Sweden concerning the astounding candor and unconcern with which the Swedish have legalized unwed motherhood. "The sex education given in public schools would make even the most modern, broadminded American blanch," says writer Joe David Brown. A Mrs. Ottesen-Jensen, Swedish sex educator, informed Mr. Brown, "I tell them that the important thing is that they must be in love. I tell the girls it is all right to sleep with a boy — but first they must be in love. When I tell them that you see them smiling and nudging each other."

At this point we looked around to see if there was anyone within nudging distance, were disappointed to find that there wasn't and read on.

". . . What is the use of trying to change human nature?" said Mrs. Ottesen-Jensen. Mr. Brown asked her incredulously "How can a boy or girl of 17 or 18 know the difference between love and plain old biological urge?" to which Mrs. Ottesen-Jensen replied, "Oh, they can tell love. They can tell real love."

NEED WE SAY that this matter is interesting? Of course not. It's fascinating. We wonder what happen if that phase of undergraduate extra-curricular activities were transferred to this country. In fact, since, as we said, the matter is fascinating, we wonder very hard.

To begin with, a whole new branch of public counselling would probably crop up. We would not only have marriage counsellors, we would also have unmarriage counsellors. In all liklihood another offshoot of psychiatry would develop based on the practice of helping people decide whether or not they were really in love. This field of specialization would probably not last long, since those who went into it would, we daresay, soon discover that most people with one thought in mind are not going to take the trouble (and money) to salve their consciences by waiting for a go-ahead from a psychiatrist. They would conduct their own experiments.

The Swedes also take care of illegitimate children, instead of ostracizing them and their mothers, and we can see bobby-soxers and coeds comparing notes on their offspring — fathered, perhaps, by a star football player or a well-heeled fraternity man. Of course if the Swedish outlook on young love was transferred to this country intact there probably wouldn't be many illegitimate children, since the Swedes go in for abortions (good ones, performed by creditable doctors) to quite a considerable extent.

Without a doubt there would appear motels that specialized . . . And honeymoon lodges for very short honeymoons. "True Confessions" would take on a new look, and there might well be some changes made in the Lonely Hearts Club.

BUT FOR ALL the airy offhandedness of the Swedes, we think Mr. Brown's question as to how people of 17 or 18 can tell the difference between love and plain old biological urge is a good one. Ivory castle attitudes may be obtainable in Sweden, but we doubt, Americans being what they are (and don't ask us what an American is), if love's young dream would see much of the light of day in this country.

In the middle of writing this column we went downstairs to the Rendezvous Room and listened for a moment to the jazz combo playing there. We peered maliciously through the gloom to see if anyone was nudging anyone else, but (and perhaps fortunately) the gloom was too gloomy.

'You Will Cease . . . That Is A Fact' (Number 2)

Editors:

Once again the stench of Daily Tar Heel liberalism oozes from its editorial page. This time The DTH "concurs" with ideas set forth by the defense comrades at the Scales trial.

The DTH follows the party line remarkably well, for nigger loving and communism go hand in hand in America. It is recognized that only cheap lackeys of the Kremlin will stoop low enough to try to deceive and exploit the free American Negro in order that he and all other Ameiricans might ultimately be enslaved. Scales admitted the value of racial agitation to the "revolution."

The DTH stood almost alone in its position on the Scales trial. The chief journalistic organ of our state university defended the defenders of a recognized, and now convicted, Communist. It spoke of Scales in terms of "sincerity" and "dignity," while those patriotic men who helped to reveal the true nature and methods of the scum who would destroy our entire concept of life and individual dignity, were referred to as "paid performers", and "spies." It praised men like Charles Jones, who was relieved of his church because he distorted the belief that "all men are created equal" into the doctrine that "all men shall be dragged to the dead level of mediocrity."

The communism of The DTH, the blindness of a Chapel Hill minister, and the unfortunate association of such trash as Scales with Carolina, have done incalculable damage to the reputation of our great University.

Again, as I have said before, a handful of political freaks are degrading an institution loved by thousands of North Carolinians. Those now attending the University are within striking range. These students must recognize their vantage point. They must realize that the many who love Carolina are watching for them to remove you and the red stigma from their university.

"You will cease. That is a fact." Even now the guillotine of Southern Pride is in motion. There is activity both within and from outstide the University. Lewis Brumfield seems to have had your number, and he, unlike you, speaks for the students. As I predicted, the state legislature, via the Board of Trustees, has intervened by eliminating those among them who were making integration noises.

Because of you, the Carolina student body is getting a raw deal. They are being accused of things of whch only you are guilty. They must rid themselves of you.

One of our state's great lady journalists, Nell Battle Lewis, said the hammer and sickle belongs on the campus flag pole. If I may, I will amend her statement and tell you that it should fly, instead, from Graham Memorial, proclaiming that you, not true Tar Heels, are communists.

Yes, justice does go on. Scales can now vouch for that. Justice is slow, methodical . . . but ever so sure, someday you and your fellow travelers will find this out. That I may see you get yours!!

'Oh, This Takes More Time'

Some Thoughts At 4 A.M.

Ken Pruitt

Busy people — sleeping, sleeping.
Busy people — breathing, breathing.
In the hall — someone sneezing,
Roommate, roommate — wheezing, wheezing.
Nodding, nodding at hy desk.
Slumber, sleep; futile quest.
One more hour; one more round.
One more page.
Then lie down.
Wonder, wonder where is dawn?
Ponder, ponder night is gone.
Eyes that throb and lids that sting.
Seconds tinkle; minutes ring.
Coughing, coughing; blue-gray smoke.
Hating, hating tower's stroke.
Silly words dance on the page.
Stillness mulls a quiet rage.
Dizzy, dizzy; burning ears.
Blinking, blinking unwept tears.
Musty books and musty air.
If — but, no! — I wouldn't dare.
Time and worry; buzzing sounds.
A spigot leaks, a cockroach drowns.
Hurry, hurry, cloudy mind.
Scratching pencil; weary grind.
Fog is drifting through the door.
Clouds are rising on the floor.
Snow is covering all the wall.
Chair — sliding — must not — f-a-l-l——

Quote, Unquote: Using Differences Well

The democratic conception is based on the assumption that conflicts between individuals and groups will always exist. This assumption in turn derives from the principle of diversity. In nature, and hence in man who is part of nature, difference is a given fact. Important differences will inevitably lead to confict.

If the democratic theory were left at this point, those who follow in precepts would soon find themselves living in chaos. Differences should lead to increasingly chronic conflicts which, if unresolved, would weaken and destroy the capacity to achieve common goals. A democracy without a sense of direction would be like a ship with sails and no rudder. The right to be different is the basis of freedom and where this right is not respected, and protected, democracy cannot flourish . . . A funetional democracy, if it succeeds, becomes therefore a method for utilizing differences from common ends. One of the rules of conduct to whch citizens of democracies must subject themselves is, then, the discipline of finding experimental methods for dealing with conflict. — "The Democratic Way of Life," by T. V. Smith and Eduard C. Lindeman.

Stevenson & Harriman

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON — The relationship between Adlai Stevenson and New York's Gov. Averell Harriman is the most interesting personal equation in American politics today. Stevenson and Harriman are at one and the same time close personal friends and potential political rivals.

Harriman made his position entirely clear to Stevenson, before Stevenson left for his carefully timed sojourn in Africa. Harriman told Stevenson, in effect, not to worry about the nomination — if he wanted it, it was in the bag. All he had to do was to pass the word to five or six key men — including Harriman — and they would get behind him and push.

But this time, Harriman said, there could be no indefinite delay. This time, in Harriman's view, the problem is not the nomination but the election.

Harriman strongly beleives that the notion that Eisenhower is unbeatable is a myth. But he also believes, and has so counselled Stevenson, that in order to beat Eisenhower, Stevenson has got to start building for election day, not just after the convention next year, but almost right away. Harriman has also been completely frank with Stevenson about his own role — he is a Stevenson man all they way if Stevenson wants the nomination, but if Stevenson does not, he will try for it himself.

The implication of all this is plain. At some unspecified point, if Stevenson does not pass the word, Harriman himself will "go." To "go" in Harriman's case, simply means giving a tacit green light to Carmine DeSapio, able chieftain of Tammany Hall and Harriman's principal political backer.

Just when the point of decision will come is uncertain. But it could come rather soon. DeSapio reportedly favors starting quietly to build a Harriman organization by early autumn, if Stevenson does not pass the word before then. Meanwhile, DeSapio is keeping open his lines of communication to such key figures in the party as Mayor David Lawrence, of Pittsburgh, and Sen. Earle Clements, of Kentucky, who has the role of honest broker between the northern and southern wing of the party.

Thus — provided Stevenson does not let it be known that he is avaiable fairly soon after he returns — Harriman must be taken seriously as a possible contender. Already, he is certainly being taken a lot more seriously than in 1952, when he first tried for the nomination, and did surprisingly well.

The simple fact of being Governor of New York has added a cubit or so to his political stature. So has publication of the Yalta papers, which show him in an admirable light — there is a certain irony in the fact that the only man to benefit politically from the Yalta papers is a New Deal Democrat. Those close to him say that being elected Governor of the biggest state has also "done something to Harriman. His old diffidence is gone, he has discovered in himself a natural bent for politics, and he is immensely enjoying his job.

Harriman is an essentially uncomplicated man. When he wants something he goes to work to get it — and usually succeeds. Thus his advice to Stevenson, to nail down the nomination and start right away working to win the election, is perfectly in character. It is precisely what Harriman would do in Stevenson's position. Indeed, if it were not for Stevenson, his friends believe that Harriman would be out beating the bushes for support right now.

But Stevenson is a much more complex character. Those who know him well believe that he really wanted the nomination very badly last year — or at least that he very badly wanted to be sure that he could have it if he wanted it. Then the election by a smashing majority of his friend and protege, Paul Butler, as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, proved to Stevenson that he could have the nomination by lifting a finger. At this point — or so friends of his believe — he began asking himself, in his introspective, Wilsonian way, whether he really wanted to run after all.

Over The Hill

COMPLIMENT: Fellows coming back in from dates react in different ways. Some are quiet and go right to bed; other make all grades of noise and seem to want to stay up all night, and then there are some in-between who come in quietly but want to talk. The following comes from one of the latter:

The boy and girl were coming in from their first date. They had been to a movie and had had an ice cream cone. As they neared the girl's residence, the boy spoke: "Well, I sure hope you have had a good time tonight."

The girl smiled and said she didn't mean to sound mushy, but that she "didn't see how anybody could date him and not have a good time."

The boy was speechless. That is he was speechless until he got back to the dormitory, and then oh brother!

FOLLOW UP: Two nights later he came quitely home and went straight to bed. His dream had popped. She had refused to date him ("because of studies") and he had seen her with a friend.

REACTION: The little girl from the far western part of the state who came to Carolina to learn how to write and talk (in the column on Sunday, April 24) replied with a poem:

I wish I wuz a writer—
With words all bright and flow'ry,
A tribute I could pay to you
As you have done to me!
Alas, I've no such talent
Sad case, don't you agree?
That I could not do HALF as much as you have done for me!

WANT TO BET: The cutest coffee seller in the Monogram Club was telling a sleepy early morning coffee customer that she "wouldn't get up" if she were as tired as he "just to go to an eight o'clock class."

SEX IN HISTORY: Every year about this time a history professor reads the following Freudian, or sexual, interpretation of the statesmanship of Cavour, one of the leaders in the unification of Italy in the last century. Needless to say, the interpretation was written by a Frenchman, probably for the like of Carolina gentlemen in the springtime:

"From the day Cavour left the Military Academy at Turin his gallantries were beyond all reckoning: he was always worshipping at a woman's shrine; his youthful passions grew, wore out, and again revived. Cavour's numerous amours bear witness not only to his physical virility but also to the numerous traits of mind and personality, and the many little idiosyncracies, to whcih presently he was to owe his success in polities.

"For example: his strong emotionalism, his calculated readiness to accept risks, his exact conception of the object he was pursuing, his perseverence in its pursuit, his skill in manipulating a situation for his own ends, his rapid power of recovery after a rebuff, his keen appreciation and understanding of human psychology, his promptness and ability to seize an opportunity, and finally his intuitive sense of when to make, and his courage in making, the decisive move."

COULD BE: The professor was asking about different kinds of partnerships. Students had volunteered: partnerships of doctors, lawyers, engineers, tec. Brght coed writes down: "and Indian Chiefs."

ANOTHER BY ACKER: Many people have spoken to us with regards to the poem entitled "Integration and the D.T.H." that appeared in the column last week. The great majority who commented liked the poem and wanted to know more about the work of its author, Bill Acker, a freshman from South Carolina. Today we print another of Acker's poems. The title of this one is "Just Last Night, or The Night Before."

Just last night, or the night before,
A hundred-fifty coeds came banging at the door.
I hurried downstairs to bar the doors.
They hit me on the head and they took my drawers.
I went upstairs for another pair.
I looked into the dresser and there weren't any there.
Then I saw my roommate, with the window open wide,
Throwing my long fannels to the mob outside.
I shoved him out the window because he wouldn't stop.
I then went to the telephone and called a big, brave cop.
He came and took the coeds to the Chapel Hill jail.
And they were all convicted for robbing the male.
All this happened, and maybe even more;
Just last night, or the night before.

Netters Open Six-Day Northern Swing With 8-1 Victory

Carolina Cage Prospects

Basketball Coach Frank McGuire, (center) who's no midget by any standards, still has to look up to a couple of giants he hopes will be performing for the Tar Heels in a couple of years. On the right is six-ten Bill Hathaway, one of the high school cagers featured in Life magazine during the winter. Left is six-five Dan Lotz of Northport, N. Y. Both boys are expected to enter Carolina in the fall.

Tar Heels Bounce Back From Defeat

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass, May 2 — Carolina's once-beaten tennis team began its six-day Northern swing auspiciously here today by trouncing Williams College 8-1.

The Tar Heels, who dropped their first match in 30 starts to a strong Miami team in Chapel Hill Friday, had little trouble with the Williams team which they had defeated 15-0 in an earlier match.

The defeat handed to the Williams College squad today was the first home loss of the season for the Massachusetts netters.

The Tar Heels were bouncing back today after suffering the loss to the Miami team which has not lost a match since 1952.

Tuesday the Tar Heel club moves to Amherst, and from there to Cambridge to meet Harvard, on Wednesday, then to Yale, Princeton and Virginia on successive days before returning to Chapel Hill to wind up the regular season against William and Mary and N. C. State. On May 12-12 the Tar Heels are the host team in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

UNC Stars Get NCAA Ratings

Two UNC athletes figure in the National Collegiate Athletic Associations track and field statistics released today.

Roger Morris, shot-putter who recently broke the state record for that event, is listed as having made the eighth longest discus toss registered this year. His toss of 157' 5½" is the one listed by the NCAA as being approved.

Beatty's time of 4:16.3 which he turned in in the ACC Indoor Games is listed as the fifth best indoor mile of the year. The best time is 4:09.9. Beatty also rated in the upper dozen in the two mile with 9:22.0 performance. The top time in the two mile is 9:09.7.

STUDENT WIVES MEET

IN PENN RELAYS

Beatty And Morris Set New Records For State

A check of the records has shown that the performances of Carolina's Jimmy Beatty and Roger Morris in the Penn Relays in Philadelphia over the weekend resulted in two new marks.

Beatty, who won the open two mile event with his well-known finishing spurt, ran the best outdoor two mile of any North Carolina athlete in history on Friday as he turned in a 9:19.8. The mark also constitutes a new University record.

A 52' 2¾" shot put by Morris also set a new North Carolina state record and University record.

He was the holder of the old record which he set April 16 at Maryland with a 51' 3" heave.

Both boys, along with pole vaulter Richard Waters, missed Saturday's meet with Virginia which the Tar Heels won 96-36, but they will be with the squad when it meets Duke in an important ACC meet here Saturday afternoon.

Frosh Wallop Imps By 9-5

By ROY TALLEY

North Carolina's Tar Babies came from behind in the seventh inning with explosive power to down a strong Duke freshman team yesterday afternoon at Emerson Stadium. Delon Lambert supplied the crucial punch to pull the Carolina team from behind with a long grand-slam home run, which barely cleared the retreating leftfielder's head to put the Tar Babies in front to stay.

Charlie Cross went all the way for the freshmen in picking up his third win against two losses.

University Symphony Has Many Non-Student Musicians

By SUE QUINN

When the University Symphony Orchestra presents its free concert in Hill Hall tonight, there will be many players on the stage who obviously are not students.

Since there are far too many of these for all of them to be members of the Music Department faculty, the average onlooker would probably assume that quite a few of them were "ringers"—professionals brought in only for the concert.

In making this assumption, you would be dead wrong. The people you are wondering about will be faculty members and graduate students from other departments and their husbands or wives. For these musicians, playing with the symphony is simply a pastime, like reading or gardening. As J. L. Morrison, violinist and professor in the School of Journalism, comments, "Being able to relax in this way is one of the compensations for those who teach in Chapel Hill."

A glance at the orchestra roster reveals that the string section seems to contain more than its share of these "spare-time" players. This, according to one of them, can be explained by the fact that very few students are now studying the stringed instruments, probably because they're more difficult than some of the others. This seems strange, when you consider the popularity of the string band in North Carolina, but it's a known fact that this is the most difficult section for which to find players. Therefore Dr. Glen Haydon, head of the department, whose specialty is the clarinet, is playing the viola, and Dr. Wilton Mason, a pianist, is listed with the violoncello section.

Once they begin playing with the group, most of the musicians continue in spite of their other duties and the baby-sitter problem. Familiar figures to anyone who attends the concerts are the two "Mac's"—Dr. D. A. MacPherson, head of the Bacteriology Department at the Medical School and Dr. Fred B. McCall of the Law School, both of whom have been with the organization since its founding, about 30 years ago. And Mrs. Sidney vom Lehn, whose husband is a graduate student, commutes from Burlington for each rehearsal.

Typical of the women who play with the symphony is Mrs. Pat Mackay, whose husband is working for his doctorate in mathematical statistics. A former school teacher, with one small child, Mrs. Mackay hasn't much time for home practice, but attends the weekly rehearsals just to "keep up" her music.

Some of the players, of course, have had professional training but are now occupied in other fields. Hans Grainer, a graduate student, and his wife Margaret, both viola players, hold degrees from the Eastman School of Music.

And Mrs. Jean Heard, wife of Dr. G. E. Heard of the Political Science Department, has studied violin under Ottokar Cadek, and at the Birmingham Conservatory, the University of Alabama and the Juilliard School of Music. Raised in a musical family, Mrs. Heard also plays with the University String Quartet, and finds time to practice at home in spite of the demands of her three young sons. She has been with the orchestra for about four years.

Mother is a Big Girl Now

The days are gone when Mom was somebody to hide from when you were riding high, and cry on when you were in trouble. Mom's not such a whale of a lot older than you are now-a-days. She can enjoy the same sort of thing you enjoy, and laugh at the things you laugh at. Odds are she'll go on laughing for a long time if you don't break her spirit by treating her like a perishable has-been.

Give Her a Book

Mom will enjoy a gift that lets her know you think she's still a lively number. A good novel, perhaps, or something to fit her hobbies, like a bridge book, or a garden book. Matter of fact, you might be surprised to find she gets a laugh out of those same books you chuckle over at our humor table.

the Adagio Molto, which was nicely phrased, although a little more sureness at the passage of transition from the Adagio to the Rondo would have given more brilliance to the introduction of the main theme of the Rondo, which, however, was very well played, and our artist did not, for one moment, lose sight of the great poetry and deep human feeling which are Beethoven's, and the whole constituted a very creditable performance, of which more seasoned pianists could have been rather proud.

The second half of the program began with Debussy's "Images," of the Second Series for Piano Solo, in which Marjorie gave us an excellent presentation of each one of the three numbers of this small suite: "Cloches a travers le feuilles" (Bells through the leaves); "Et la lune descend sur le temple qui fut" (And the moon descends upon the ruins of the temple), and 'Poissons d'Or" (The Goldfish) were portrayed with delightful imagination, as well as delicacy in fingering and in tone.

The Nocturne in F. sharp minor, Opus 48, No. 2, of Chopin was begun at a rather fast tempo, with more attention paid by the performer to the mere playing of the notes, than to the bringing out of the beautiful music contained in this Nocturne.

This was a pity, since this piece happens to be one of the rarely performed works of Chopin and this writer would have liked to enjoy it without having to notice the failings of the performance. A deeper study of this Nocturne will enable Miss Still to differentiate between the great poetry which it possesses and the adornments which surround this poetry.

Only one "encore" was given by Marjorie Still, and this was a prelude, by Shostakovich, presented with good taste, a fine lyrical touch and excellent phrasing.

The whole recital was a very enjoyable one. The attendance was somewhat disappointing and not at all encouraging for a young and striving artist who deserves a much greater audience, on account of her already demonstrated great talent and musicanship.

JURGENSEN TO DELIVER:

Humanities Lecture Tonight

KAI JURGENSEN

Prof. Kai Jurgensen of the UNC Dramatic Art Dept. will give the Spring Humanities Faculty Lecture tonight at 8 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

Dr. Raymond Adams of the English Dept., Lecture Committee member, announced yesterday that Jurgensen will speak on "The Crimes Against Ibsen."

Jurgensen, who has collaborated in the translation of 11 Ibsen plays, some of them produced nationally, will discuss what has happened to Ibsen in the process of translation into English.

He will show the effect of "Ibsen's being presented to the American theater by people who tampered with his plays and by those Ibsen-worshippers who refused to alter the plays at all."

The lecture will be one of the quarterly series held for students, faculty and townspeople.

A member of the Dramatic Art faculty since 1944, Professor Jurgensen worked with Prof. Robert F. Schenkkan in translating the 11 plays.

His translation of "Peer Gynt" was used in the National Theatre and Academy's New York production, with the late John Garfield taking the leading part, and has been used also in a Carolina Playmakers production.

Student Waivers Due Soon

Applications for student deferments from selective service must be made by May 31 according to an announcement yesterday.

Applications may be made in 315 South Building, at the office of Col. F. C. Shepard, Advisor, Military and Veterans Affairs. Students wishing deferment must also write to their local draft boards giving notification that they are returning to school for the next year and wish to be deferred as a student, said the announcement.

Students whose grades for last year did not make him eligible for deferment for this year may still qualify for deferment for next year on the basis of his grades for this school year ending in June, said the announcement.

Press Banquet Set

The University Press Club's annual awards banquet next Tuesday night at The Pines Restaurant will be in honor of O. J. Coffin and Phillips Russell, two long-time members of the faculty of the School of Journalism, according to an announcement last night by Press Club President Earl McGuire.

Coffin has been a member of the university faculty since 1926. Russell, now editor of the Chapel Hill News Leader, has taught here since 1931. Coffin served as dean of the School of Journalism until 1953.

"This is our small way of showing our appreciation for the years of service these two gentlemen have given the School of Journalism and the university," McGuire said in making the announcement. The two men will also be given gifts by the club.

Medical Fraternity

Elwood Morgan was elected president of the North Carolina Beta Chapter of Alpha Epsilon Delta, National Premedical Society in a recent meeting.

Other officers elected were Tommy Williford, vice-president; Bill Michael, secretary; Willis Riddick, treasurer; Bob Richardson, historian; and John Curtis, program chairman.

WATCH OUT FOR THE STATE

Leaders Comment On Fees

By NEIL BASS

A poll taken among student government leaders yesterday concerning the May 10 referendum on a proposed hike in student fees resulted in a wide range of opinions.

The present consideration the State Legislature is giving possibilities of a hike in dormitory rents and tuitions influenced several opinions.

Four of the six questioned made some stipulation about the "danger" of "raising" fees while the State Legislature threatens to demand more money from students.

Student body President Don Fowler, maintaining the same position he announced some time ago, said:

'I am opposed to any student fee raise. I believe it is not advisable to be raising our fees when the State Legislature is still in the process of considering a tuition or dorm rent raise here at Carolina.

"If the State Legislature sees us raising our own fees, they will be more likely to levy an increase on our present tuition and dorm fees," he concluded.

'NOT FOR RAISE'

Jim Exum, floorleader of the University Party, said he opposed a "change in the student constitution."

'If the student body passes the referendum, the path will be paved for a $5 raise in student fees. As the Constitution now states, the fee limit is $20 per year.

Has Anybody Seen Smith's Baby Turtle?

Residents of Smith Dorm have been left grief-stricken at the mysterious departure of the dorm mascot, one small turtle.

The turtle either walker, strayed or was spirited away in the pocket of some visitor sometime last Sunday night, and its whereabouts constitutes a large-sized mystery to the turtle-loving girls of Smith.

Miss Marlyn Zager, dorm spokesman in the mystery of the vanishing turtle, said yesterday "the whole dorm is upset about it (the turtle). He is to Smith what Rameses is to the football team."

General Assembly Gets $640 Million Appropriations Bill, Including UNC Out-Of-State Students' Tuition Raise

Tuition Bill In Assembly

The appropriations bill which reached the floor of the North Carolina House of Representatives yesterday after four months of study in committee includes a tuition raise for non-resident students at all state - supported colleges and for resident students of some smaller schools.

The tuition raise, which would increase the amount now paid by out-of-state students at the three branches of the Consolidated University by $140 per year, will not apply to non-resident students attending state supported schools on scholarships unless the bill is amended by either the House or the Senate.

According to the University Record, the out-of-state tuition for UNC is $360 per year.

The proposed non-resident tuition raises affecting other schools are $50 at Winston-Salem, Elizabeth City and Fayetteville State Teachers' Colleges. Together with the proposed $140 hike for the Consolidated University's three branches would bring in an additional $1,027,742 for the biennium.

The increases are slated to go into effect at the start of the next biennium in July unless amendments are made by the House or Senate.

MAYOR ROBERT WAGNER OF NEW YORK CITY
. . . Carolina Forum brings him here tonight

MAYOR OF NEW YORK CITY:

Wagner Talks At 8:30

Mayor Robert Wagner Jr. of New York City will speak here tonight.

Mayor Wagner's talk will be sponsored by the Carolina Forum, which brings to the campus political and other leaders. The speech will start at 8:30 p.m. in Hill Hall, and will be followed by a question and answer period and reception in Graham Memorial.

Graham Memorial Director Jim Wallace will introduce Mayor Wagner.

Mayor Wagner, elected to his position in November of 1953 by a plurality of more than 300,000 votes, is the youngest man to hold the mayorship, and one of the youngest mayors in the nation.

Wagner was born in 1910 and has been in public office since 1937, when he was elected to the New York State Assembly, with time out for service in the Air Force.

He was graduated from Yale, studied business adminstration at Harvard and later attended Yale Law School.

Wagner won the bitterly-contested Democratic primary election for mayor from incumbent Vincent Impellitteri in the summer of 1953, and came out on top in the three-cornered race for mayor against a Republican and Liberal candidate that November.

As mayor of the world's largest city, Wagner has introduced the City Administrator into the city's government, whose duties are to modernize the methods and procedures of the various city departments and to make their functions more efficient and economical.

He revised the New York City Civil Service Commission, has given New York its largest police force in the city's history and has named a Port of New York Council to assist in promoting commerce and the expansion of the facilities of the Port of New York.

Grail Officers Named

The Order of the Grail yesterday announced that Ed McCurry, junior from Shelby, has been chosen delegata for the coming year.

Luther Hodges Jr., sophomore from Leaksville, was named scribe, while Gil Ragland, junior from Oxford, was chosen exchequer, and Jim Exum, junior from Snow Hill was named vice-exchequer.

The Grail's officers for the past year have been Osborne Ayscue, delegata; Ed Patterson, scribe; Ed McCurry, exchequer and Johnny Medlin, vice-exchequer.

Hitler & Friends Set Germamy Back—Weyl

"Adolph Hitler and his political party set Germany back at least 50 years and placed that country in a position where it will never again rise to be a world power," a noted mathematician said here Monday.

Professor Hermann Weyl, a native of Germany and a citizen of the United States since 1939, was here to speak before the UNC and the Duke University Chapters of the Society of the Sigma Xi. He spoke on "Practice, Theory and Magic in Numbers."

Dr. Weyl, Professor Emeritus of Mathematics at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton, N. J., and often described as the greatest living mathematician, was a personal friend of the late Dr. Albert Einstein. He had worked with Dr. Einstein from time to time during the past 40 years and stated that Einstein's death "was a shock to the science world."

Dr. Weyl, often described as the greatest living mathematician, said he was considering leaving Germany to live in the United States when two things happened that led him to America. "In 1933 the Institute for Advance Study at Princeton was organized and I was asked to join it and about this same time Hitler took over the government of Germany," he explained.

Dr. Weyl said it was impossible for scholars in Germany to have any academic freedom under Hitler's rule, and that intellectuals who defied the regime were imprisoned and put to death.

The Universiy Library is now exhibiting a scale model of the Monastary of Cluny situated in Burgundy, France. Included in the exhibition are plans, drawings and pictures of the excavated monastary.

Les Brown & Band, Slated To Play For Spring Germans

Bandleader Les Brown and friends, shown above, will play for a concert and dance next Saturday, sponsored by the Carolina Germans Club. The band is shown at the noted Hollywood Palladium, where Brown is known as "Mr. Palladium." The Brown band has played there for 16 engagements, the standing record for the ballroom. Brown, a graduate of Ithaca Conservatory of Music, has been featured as guest conductor for symphony orchestras in several cities.

Debate Starts Today

RALEIGH, May 3—(AP)—An appropriations bill authorizing state spending of about 640 million dollars for the next two fiscal years reached the House floor today.

The Joint Appropriations Committee approved the budget last week after four months of study.

The appropriations bill was placed on the House calendar for debate tomorrow. Rep. J. K. Doughton of Alleghany, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, reported the bill to the House floor.

The budget recommended by the Governor and the Advisory Budget Commission called for expenditures of about 637 million. The Appropriations Committee made changes—additions and reductions—which brought the figure to 640 million.

Highway fund expenditures were raised by almost four million. The general furd was decreased by more than $1,115,000.

Cuts in the general fund budget included reductions in supervisory instructional services and the child health program in the public schools, and sharp reductions in state spending for travel, printing and binding, and merit salary increments for state workers not under the State Personnel Act.

Upward revisions included a half million for support of indigent patients in four county-supported tuberculosis sanatoriums, and half million for five state teachers' colleges. More than $400,000 was added to the budget of Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

A constitutional amendment for annual General Assembly sessions, revived after an unfavorable vote, found the strength to pass the House and go to the Senate.

If the Senate approves it, the proposal will be submitted to a vote of the people in the next general election.

The House vote today for the measure was 74-33 on second reading, and 73-36 on third reading. Constitutional amendments require a three-fifths majority, or 72 votes, to pass the House.

On its first test last Wednesday, the bill missed the necessary majority by three votes. However, the House reversed its vote the following day and set it for further action.

At present the Legislature meets every other year. Supporters contended annual sessions would make it easier to deal with fiscal problems, while opponents claimed annual sessions would give rise to a class of "professional legislators" wealthy enough to afford the trip to Raleigh each year.

Annual sessions are held by legislatures of a number of states, including neighboring South Carolina.

The constitutional amendment for annual legislative sessions was introduced by Rep. David Clark of Lincoln, who sponsored a similar bill in the 1953 Legislature. It failed to pass the House by a narrow margin.

Under the proposal, legislators would still be elected for terms of two years. Committee assignments and other organizational work would be completed at the first session after their election. The second session would deal solely with financial matters unless a joint resolution was adopted to take up other legislation.

Buffalo Students . . .

Buffalo students, won't you come out tonight? Not, we hope, to dance by the light of the moon, but to hear Lord Mayor Wagner of New York City.

We address this invitation to the stay-at-home 98 per cent who leave Carolina Forum attendance to a thimbleful of faithful who huddle in one corner of an empty, echoing auditorium. Will you be thought indifferent or linger behind the dusty doors and remove all doubt?

Planning For Breathless Days

This time of year—when the days begin with breathless mornings and books pile up in dorm rooms as symbols of duty—news of a coordinating group for easing conflicts in the scheduling of campus events soothes the term paper-bent mind.

Spring brings too many activities at the same time: the pace from parties at Hogan's to cramming for finals needs some planning. This problem is not a new one, though. Chancellor R. B. House, as an undergraduate, wrote an essay in the University Magazine on the need for intellectual endeavor amid the array of activities competing for a student's time and energy.

The new Campus Recreation Coordinating Council, as this conflict-easing group is tagged, deserves the praise and cooperation of the campus for tackling a problem that has harassed both students and professors for academic eons.

Let's Look To Doomsday

While A. E. C. scientists waited on the New Mexico desert to fire Bomb 14 of the running test series, the question of Sunday explosions arose.

Some of the scientists observed, as reported by a New York Timesman, that "as far as observation of the Sabbath was concerned, Sunday detonations in one respect were preferable to Monday ones, since the day before any test is taken up with arduous preparatory work."

Somehow, we can't find it in us to register concern about the exact day, holy or not, on which the bombs are to be triggered. The scope of the weapon is vast. The cost of delay is huge. The blast is convulsive and can break miles-distant windows. But Sabbath ritual will go on, bomb or no bomb.

In short, the scientists on the Yuca Flats are worrying about a fringe area of the ethical Sahara that faces them. Here, in the concise wording of J. Donald Adams, is what we mean:

> Mankind is still as answerable to divine justice as it was when Dante wrote; the relations between man and his Creator are still as important as Milton made them in "Paradise Lost." Science has pulled colossal rabbits out of its hat, and will no doubt pull others, but can it help us find our way to their best use?

Atomic science finds itself in a rapidly changing position. Its work is no longer amoral. The establishment of lay control on the ends and procedures of science would, we fear, lay the way open to dangerous results; the problem is the scientists' alone. The Washington University Conference made it clear that more and more scientists are awakening to the need for moral and ethical consciousness of what they are doing.

But our point, again, is that the scientists are emphasizing the trivial when they stand on the New Mexico desert and try to rationalize their way to a Sunday explosion. They hold in their brilliant hands the power to denude the planet, but they express (or feign) concern about marring the Sabbath with a brief roar.

If their concerns awakens too slowly to the ethical Sahara which lies beyond and they allow their brainchild to pulverize civilization none of us will be around to debate the propriety of Sunday explosions. There will be countless Sundays. But only one Doomsday.

Carolina Front

The NY Times Thrills The Ol' U S an' A

J. A. C. Dunn

THE NEW YORK TIMES is evidently of the opinion that along with their recent frenzied advertising campaign, centered around a series of pictures showing hawk-like reporters and green eye-shaded - editors posed imaginatively in attitudes indicative of journalistic zeal, there should be a few morsels of meat to prove the worth of the sauce. What we are actually getting at in this breathless sentence is that we have seen a couple of arresting items in the New York Times which we think worthwhile passing on to those gutsy individuals who have in them the sheer stamina to combine "Carolina Front" with their morning coffee.

THE FIRST OF these two gems is datelined London and concerns "A prominent Russian scientist (who) solemnly went before a microphone today to allay Russian jitters that a space ship invasion from Mars had taken place . . . The Moscow radio talk . . . disclosed that space ships and Martians are favourite topics with Soviet youth."

This is curious. One would have thought that the Russians, having already discovered everything first, would have tired long ago of the capitalistic outer space and turned to something else; we can imagine Russian youth idolizing Big Brother's Little Brother, who carries a rubber truncheon to school to impress the teacher and who appears at youth rallies armed with a bull whip wrapped in sandpaper and a water pistol loaded with sulphuric acid. But no. Death rays and glass globes over the head for the Soviet little ones, it seems.

AND SPEAKING OF Mars and all that, we wonder if anyone has ever considered the fact that while the whole of the east coast may go into a panic when Orson Welles frizzles the air waves with blood-chilling reports of Martians dropping in on Hoboken, or whatever it was he did back in 1938, think what mass hysteria would commandeer the hearts and minds of the Martians if they were suddenly invaded by a yodelling horde of Gene Autrys all rearing picturesquely on spirited stallions they rented for the day and firing eleven shots from a six shooter killing fourteen Indians thereby?

OUR SECOND TIMES item is a little story from Syracuse about a group of English teachers who were asked to fill out a thirteen-point questionairre and whose unsupertstitious but cautious minds were relieved of the horror of answering thirteen questions by the simple device of having question number thirteen repeated twice, giving them fourteen questions.

This is dangerous business. Suppose it spread? What would happen if this practice got into the law courts? We can see the defendant now, the prosecuting attorney having asked him the thirteenth question, answering "I refuse to answer on grounds that it might bring me seven years' bad luck." And we can see the college student, writing down his answer to examination question number thirteen: "I feel this question is unfair since it puts me in danger of being run over by a speeding truck when I leave the exam."

And there are peace conferences, too. We picture foreign and domestic dignitaries squandering thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money hiring language experts and political and military authorities in a desperate effort to condense a treaty down to only twelve "whereases", or whatever it is they put in treaties.

NO PRUDISH LITERARY PABLUM

The Quarterly Dons Long Pants

Earl E. Stevens

(The writer of this review is an instructor in the University English Department.—Editors.)

The Spring issue of The Carolina Quarterly, published today, is, to my mind, the best single issue of UNC's literary magazine that I can recall having read during these past four years. Moreover, when one considers its two predecessors, I believe it can be said that the three issues since September have raised the Quarterly to a new standard of excellence. Much of the credit for this improvement should undoubtedly go to the Quarterly's editor, J. A. C. Dunn. In his first editorial he set forth a policy which for its good sense and sincere interest in the students has been too long absent from past editorial policies. Mr. Dunn wrote:

"The Quarterly is primarily a student magazine published for the benefit of the student body; but up until now its policy has eliminated the majority of the student body from its reading public by apparently refusing to recognize the existing diversity of tastes among the students . . . a college magazine should, we believe, be intended not for one intellectual level within the student body, but for as much of the student body as is possible without jeopardizing the interests of the magazine itself."

The present issue ably justifies the editor's attempt to publish a magazine for the benefit of the student body; I interpret the phrase "benefit of the student body" to include the idea that the creative work published therein will be representative of the students on this campus. All too frequently in the past the Quarterly has seemed more interested in imported vintages than in the writings of UNC students. If we must have avant-garde writing or even nonsense of an esoteric sort, let it at least be of a domestic vintage.

Without a doubt the finest offering in the Quarterly is Ed Yoder's article, "The Tale of Junius Scales." Mr. Yoder has done a refreshingly objective job of reporting on a difficult subject—a subject which has caused far too many writers to lose their regard for truth. His treatment of the Scales case reminds me of the excellent reportage usually associated with writers like John Bartlow Martin and John Hersey.

Of the three stories the finest was Claire Russell's "Josie." This well-conceived story of a young girl who has to sit by helplessly and watch her parents split-up, wrecking their home and her world in the process, is tellingly executed. The more effective control of her material leads me to consider this story a finer piece of writing than Mr. Dennis' "Region of Innocence." The latter story is one worth the telling, but it lapses several times into an incongruous laboriousness which mars the overall effectiveness of the story.

It goes without saying that the intelligence shown in printing in the Quarterly a writer who uses artistically effective sailors' jargon indicates that like the protagonist, Fred, the Quarterly has come of age. At last its readers are treated as adults and not as children who have to be spoon-fed on literary pablum of a prudish and effeminate sort.

With the limits of its class as the best freshman writing for the spring semester Mr. Shaw's story, "The Disillusioned" is a good performance that shows promise; there is, however, a stilted quality about its writing and a "patness" about the whole situation that leave the story where it began—as a promise of better things to come.

Concerning the poems two things can be said: 1. they are very like the past poetical performances found in the Quarterly; 2. fortunately they are all short.

Of the five book reviews it is amusing to note that the one written by a man whose vocation is other than literary was the most effective. Commander Edwards in his own way has done as good a job as Commander Krause of the Keeling. Mr. Dennis' review strikes me as being the poorest of the lot because of its cavalier attitude and its painful pretense at profundity — a pretense so often found in very earnest young writers.

In sum, this issue is one well worth reading by any one interested in the University and its students.

St. George And Old Knowland de Formosa

(The Greensboro Daily News)

Now from all sides was the White Prince beset by the importunings of his great officers of state and the chief nobles of his faction, urging him to lead his divided hosts now one way, now another, so that the merchants and the peasantry knew not whereof the morrow might fetch forth, whether grim war or uneasy peace.

And there was in the land rumor and report of yet other rumor and report, how that this knight had said a certain thing, while another knight had declared just the opposite to be true. It was a parlous time.

On the one hand there stood the puissant baron from the western marches, Knowland de Formosa, he of the massy chins and sonorous tongue, imperiously bidding the White Prince make immediate and most terrible war upon the Great Khan of Cathay.

On the other hand stood, full much bemused, the Lord Chancellor, the devious Earl Dulles, bidding the White Prince be cautious in the morning and as the raging lion in the evening, or sometimes vice versa.

Yet did the White Prince seek to maintain his realm at peace, but more and more it became plain to see that he was illserved by his advisors; that his liegemen grumbled among themselves and might, in very truth, force their leader to their wishes. The kingdom trembled as before a dragon breathing flame and bringing disaster.

Then, in this most grievous hour, there appeared from the vast provinces to the south an ancient knight, full of years and honors, who had oft-times sat in the high council of state when good King Harry had held the throne in an earlier time, Sir Walter of Georgia.

"Thou art old, Knight," they told him when he entered the gates of Camelot-by-the-Potomac, "and thy faction is long since in deep disgrace, and Harry is in exile in the midlands. Wherefore come you?"

For answer the aged knight smiled a sweet and Christian smile.

"I have come," quoth he, "to slay the dragon of dissension and apathy, and thus to save your precious White Prince from his own supporters."

Thus it came to pass that when the Great Khan spoke with deceit and cunning vile, there was at the side of the White Prince the ancient knight to give sage counsel and guidance instead of warlike cries and shouts or soft, meaningless words that meant one thing in the morning and another in the afternoon. And, for a time at least, the peace of the kingdom was preserved.

The moral of this tale is simple and oft repeated in the humble cottages up and down the land: "Save your Confederate money, boys. The South will rise again."

'I Weep For You,' The Walrus Said: 'I Deeply Sympathize.' With Sobs And Tears He Sorted Out Those Of The Largest Size, Holding His Pocket-Handkerchief Before His Streaming Eyes.

Passing Remark

From Bombs To Bermudas

Ron Levin

With regard to the letter written by William C. Grimes, I should like to commend him on the style of humor that he uses in his letter. My friends and I read it in a class and laughed, until we almost cried . . . cried because we were angry that Tarnation had not found Grimes and recruited him as a contributor to their magazine. I only wish Mr. Grimes would write more of these letters, so we students here, caught in the web of daily routine, could enjoy an occasional early morning laugh. Tell me, Mr. Grimes. Who is your script writer? Milton Berle might be able to use him on weekends when the going gets tough.

I don't suppose Marlon Brando might drive up this weekend on his motorcycle and deliver the funeral speech in the Playmaker's production of Julius Caesar, but it should be well worth our while anyway to trot on down to The Forest Theatre and dig a few iambics. For those of you who care to take dates, I might add the back rows are dark and secluded for your comfort and protection. Just a thought.

I was musing over a few things the other day that might make college life a bit easier for those unfortunate few who find it difficult to keep up the pace during spring afternoons. How about inventing a combination ball point pen, can opener and cigarette lighter . . . or starting a regular course in Theory and Practice in Higher Cross Word Puzzles? Then there is a luminous sorority pin that glows in the dark, and a pocket size book of Kinsey, The Bartender's Guide and Best Known Trails in the Arboretum. Which all goes to remind me of the world literature class in which the prof asks the members of the class what one book out of all the world's literature would they choose to take with them if they were going to be stranded on a desert island. One bright eyed student replied, "a copy of The Collected Works of William Shakespeare." Another looked out the window and in a humble voice filled with emotion named The Holy Bible as his choice. Finally a sweet young thing in the back row held up her hand. The prof asked, "and what is your choice Miss Fumley?" The pert coed instantly replied, "A Beginner's Guide to Practical Boatbuilding."

Speaking of Shakespeare, I am reminded of a line in King Lear that brings to mind our old friend, none other than William C. Grimes. The line is one spoken by Edmund, the illegitimate son of Gloucester. It symbolizes the hope that Grimes and those of his ilk have when they say their prayers at night. It goes something like this, "Now, Gods, stand up for bastards . . ."

Burning Trees And Putts Before Snatus

The Daily Tar Heel's nomination for the least-unusual headline of the week goes to this one, from yesterday's Greensboro Daily News: "Formosa Report Delayed, President Goes Golfing." The Administration policy is, of course, "first things first." Burn Tree before burning issue; Augusta National before august national problems; and putts before snatus.—Clio.

Y-Court Corner

Rueben Leonard

AT APPROXIMATELY 12:30 p.m. on Monday May 2, 1955, the administrative offices in South Building were terrorized. Forty Thousand swivel-hipped secretaries swiveled their way out of their swivel desk chairs and peered out the windows at the spectacle below. South Building was on fire. Gloom settled over the trapped inhabitants of the building. Many of the secretaries weren't afraid—they were mad—they couldn't take three more coffee breaks before lunch.

Smoke billowed out of the basement. Fire extinguishers were hurried to the scene. The local fire department was summoned. The fire raged on.

Students gathered quickly. Soon the building was surrounded by interested onlookers. One boy, noticing the Secretaries hanging out the windows, urged them to jump. A ripple of laughter went through the crowd.

But alas, South Building did not burn. A cup brigade of loyal students lined up from the coffee counter in Y-Court to the origin of the blaze and extinguished it immediately. Y-Court coffee will extinguish anything.

EVER GO to the polls, look over the long list of candidates, and wonder what and whom you were voting for—sure you have—it happens all the time. When you vote next Tuesday you won't have to decide on any candidate, in fact, there won't be a candidate's name on the ballot.

When you vote for the five dollar raise in student block fees, you will be voting for yourself. Your five dollars won't give you nearly the enjoyment by itself as it will if you combine it with five dollars from the rest of the students. If you want better and more complete publications, more student entertainment, and a better Student Union, don't be a horse's posterior — gallop down to the polls next Tuesday and vote for the raise. Just two-fifty a semester. Every penny of the money will be spent on the students.

LAST SUNDAY was truly "Parent's Day" here at school. Parents drove into Chapel Hill from everywhere. Big parents, little parents, and middle-sized parents looked high and low for their sons and daughters who were probably at the beach—high. It's a funny thing about the beach, you say you are going down to the beach, but you're usually high before you get there.

BILL "PUNCHY" Grimes has again graced the editorial page of the DTH with one of his comical letters, but the editorial page is not the correct place for the letter. Bill, with his letter in his hand, should be run up the flagpole and left to fly over the campus as a symbol of American Freedom and equality of man.

Yes, Bill, you and Nell Battle Lewis would make a good team. She could pour it on and you could rub it in.

"THE VILLAGE of Chapel Hill is strictly of yore . . . That is to say, Fowler's Food Store and Belk's have recently retained the services of a town policeman on Friday and Saturday afternoons to direct traffic in their parking lots." says the May 2 Chapel Hill News Leader. Well, how about that, all the students have now started doing their shopping at Fowler's and Belk's on Friday and Saturday afternoons. Oh for the good old days when students walked and the cars were horses.

A YOUNG southern miss appeared on Herb Shriner's TV show last Saturday. Talk about southern accents, she had one. She sounded as if she still had a southern fried drumstick in her mouth. Since the show was one of those give-away deals, Shriner explained the rules to her. She was supposed to name comic strips and her partner was supposed to give the leading female character in the strip. She really blotched. "Maggie and Jiggs," she said. "No, No," said Shriner. "Bringing Up Father." "I'm sorry, but that's what we cawl it dan sath," she retorted. She tried again—"Blondie." "Blondie," replied her partner. "Pogo," she blurted. Ugh!

Jimmy Stewart was also on TV Saturday night. Jimmy was making a guest appearance on the George Gobel show.

Near the end of the program, Gobel asked the different members of the cast where they were going after the show. They all said that they were going to a Stewart movie. Gobel then asked Stewart if he was going to see one of his movies too. "Oh no," replied Jimmy, "I'm too busy making them. In fact, I am leaving right after the show for Africa."

"What's the name of this African movie going to be?" asked Gobel.

"The Last of the Red Hot Mau-Maus," quipped Stewart.

AN ENTERPRISING young fraternity man was stewed completely out of his mind. Evidently he thought he needed exercise so he ran wildly out into the street and started flagging cars. The first car that came by pulled to a screeching halt, two policemen hopped out, put the floundering frat man in the car, and hauled him off to jail. Some days you just can't win.

DON'T FORGET. Get out and vote for the fee raise next Tuesday. As they say in the politico circles, "Vote early and often." No kidding, kiddies, we really do need a five dollar additional fee to enable us to have a student program that a school the size of Carolina deserves.

Fifth In ACC At Stake As Duke-Tar Heels Clash Here Today

Athlete Of The Week

Jimmy Beatty (above) is a sophomore but his distance running feats are already earning him and the University a name. His latest effort, winning the open two-mile in the Penn Relays last weekend, earns him the title of Tar Heel Athlete of the Week. Beatty, using the finishing kick that gave him amazing wins in both the mile and two-mile events in the ACC Indoor Games this year, toured the distance in 9:19.8 for a new Carolina record and first place in the Relays.

Maultsby To Get 2nd Shot At Duke

Fifth place in the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball standings will be at stake this afternoon when the Tar Heels play host to Duke on Emerson Field. Game time is 3:30.

Both Carolina and Duke sport 4-5 records in ACC play this spring. Clemson is currently holding the fifth spot with a 5-6 record. Today's winner will move into the fifth slot with a .500 record.

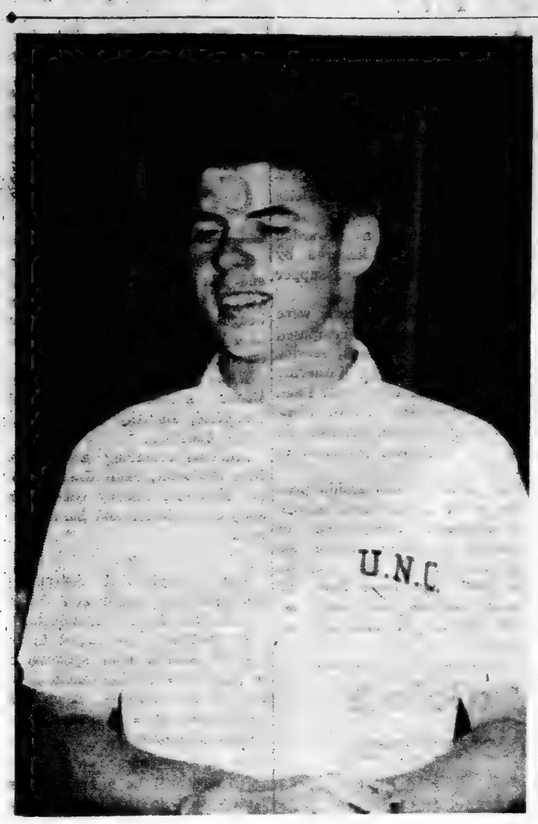
The Tar Heels moved into the tie with Duke as they split a pair of ACC games with Maryland and Virginia on a northern swing over the weekend.

Tom Maultsby will get his second shot at the Blue Devils today, according to Coach Walter Rabb. Maultsby was the victim of Duke's first 2-1 win over the Tar Heels this year as he worked 11 innings before a Duke base hit gave the Blue Devils the win.

The big footballer has a 3-5 record on the season, including a 3-2 win over Wake Forest, Carolina's only Big Four win of the year. He tops all Tar Heel hurlers with a 2.07 earned run average.

Friday the Tar Heels leave for a two-day swing into South Carolina when they will meet USC Friday and Clemson Saturday. Only three games—State away, and UVA and Duke here—remain on the regular season schedule following the trip into South Carolina.

Netters Get 8th Shut-Out



AMHERST, Mass., May 3.—Carolina continued its long northern trip here today by walloping Amherst 9-0 in an intersectional tennis match. The Tar Heels, starting another win string after losing to Miami to end an old streak of thirty in a row, have won two matches in two starts on the trip. Their overall season record now stands at 16-1.

Wednesday the Tar Heels move to Cambridge to take on Harvard, whom they defeated 14-1 earlier in the season. Following that match they go to Yale, Princeton and Virginia before returning to Chapel Hill.

In today's match the Carolina club rolled through Amherst without losing a set to take its eighth shut-out of the season.

The summary:

Payne, North Carolina, defeated Hurlbut 6-1, 6-2; Bradford, North Carolina, defeated Hanschka 6-2, 6-3; Browne, North Carolina defeated Gardner 6-3, 6-1; Green, North Carolina, defeated Dillon 6-0, 6-1; Kerdasha, North Carolina, defeated Williams 6-2, 6-0; Thompson, North Carolina, defeated Cogan 6-1, 6-4; Green and Payne defeated Cogan and D. Hurlbut 6-2, 6-3; Kerdasha and Thompson defeated Heicks and Williams 6-4, 6-0; Bradford and Gustanson defeated Dillon and Gardner 6-2, 6-2.

UNC Team In Tourney

Nine Carolina golfers will take part in the Southern Intercollegiate Golf Tournament in Athens, Ga., this Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Larry Parker, who has been playing No. 1 on the undefeated UNC team all this season, heads the list. Aubrey Rothrock, Spartanburg, S. C., Ace, Bobby Sisk, outstanding sophomore from Charlotte, and Jim Sykes, who copped second in the March azalea tourney will be among the leaders for Carolina.

Larry Bell, who has been medalist in two of the matches to date, Tuffy Henderson, Billy Ford, Joe Correll, and Bill Armfield round out the Tar Heels' leaders.

North Carolina has gone undefeated in seven outings this season, with wins over Maryland (twice), Michigan, Wake Forest, N. C. State, Michigan State, and Virginia. In addition to this, they participated in the Azalea Tournament in Charleston, and took second place behind Duke in the team race, Sykes, Rothrock, Ford and Correll finished second, ninth, tenth, and eleventh, respectively, while Bell finished sixteenth for Carolina.

The University of Georgia will be host for the big three-day affair which will determine the top individual and team among southern colleges.

Kap-Sigs Move To Net Finals

Kap-Sig 2 took Beta 2 in the quarter finals match yesterday in the intramural tennis playoffs to move into the semifinals against SAE next week.

The winner of that match will play the victor of the ATO—Sig Chi match in the finals scheduled for next week. In the dorm division, yesterday, neither Med School nor Aycock showed up so Law School-2 won its match with the would-be winner due to a double forfeit. Law School-1 plays Alexander dormitory today at 5:00.

Tomorrow at 4:00, Joyner-1 duels it out with Law School-2 and at five, Graduate School plays the winner of the Alexander-Law School-1 match in the semi-finals.

Kaline's Homer Wins For Surging Tigers

DETROIT, May 3 (AP)—Al Kaline, Detroit's boy - turned - slugger hammered a two-run homer high into the upper left field seats today, giving Billy Hoeft and the Tigers a 4-2 triumph over the Boston Red Sox, in the only major league day game.

Kaline, the Tigers' sensational 20-year-old outfielder, connected for his sixth home run with Harvey Kuenn on base in the fifth. He drove one of Ike Delock's serves down the line but well back into the upper seats.

The Chi Psi's will meet the Phi Delta Chi's today at 4:30 on Field 1 to determine who plays the Sigma Chi's for the Intramural Fraternity Softball Championship Thursday.

Yesterday the Sigma Chi's bowled over the Zeta Psi's by a score of 18-10. Kelton hit a home run for the winners while Von Noppin and Williams collected homers for the Zetas. Mitchell went the distance on the mound for Sigma Chi to get credit for the victory.

The Phi Delt Chi's edged the Pi Kappa Phi's behind the work of their little pitcher, Smith. Kirby played a fine game at shortstop for the winners. The final score was Phi Delt Chi 9, Pi Kappa Phi 8.

In the Dorm Division, McGinn pitched Joyner to a 9 to 1 victory over Alexander. Thursday on Field 2, Joyner will meet the Dental School for the Dormitory Championship.

Mother is a Big Girl Now

The days are gone when Mom was somebody to hide from when you were riding high, and cry on when you were in trouble. Mom's not such a whale of a lot older than you are now-a-days. She can enjoy the same sort of thing you enjoy, and laugh at the things you laugh at. Odds are she'll go on laughing for a long time if you don't break her spirit by treating her like a perishable has-been.

Give Her a Book

Mom will enjoy a gift that lets her know you think she's still a lively number. A good novel, perhaps, or something to fit her hobbies, like a bridge book, or a garden book. Matter of fact, you might be surprised to find she gets a laugh out of those same books you chuckle over at our humor table.

Send Her a Lively Card - - -

Our Mother's Day cards avoid the Lavender and Old Lace stuff. They carry their message of love with sophistication and gaity. Be daring this year. Give Mom a lift with a 1955 card!

3 Named Tri Delta Winners

Misses Betty Jo Rorie, Monroe; Barbara Willard, High Point, and Lynn Zimmerman, Marshall, have been announced as winners of the annual Service Projects Scholarship, offered by Delta Delta Delta sorority.

Each recipient was awarded $100. They will be honored by the sorority at a chapter supper tonight.

The scholarship winners were chosen by a committee composed of, Miss Joanne Christian, service projects chairman; Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women; Dean E. L. Mackie; Mrs. W. O. West, the sorority's alumni advisor, and Miss Cary Caperton, president of Tri Delta.

The sorority's scholarship program is an international service for students, irrespective of fraternity affiliation. Since the establishment of the program nine years ago more than 900 women students have been assisted by awards totaling over $110,000.

McGuire Is New Press Club Chief

Earl E. McGuire Jr., rising senior from Danville, Va., was installed this week as president of the UNC Press Club for 1955-56. He succeeds Bill Venable of Mt. Airy.

The club, whose membership includes students in the UNC School of Journalism and representatives of all campus publications, was organized several years ago to promote fellowship among students interested in journalism. Several famous writers and prominent North Carolinians have participated in the club's meetings this year.

Other officers are Bill Isenhour, Hickory, vice-president; Barbara Willard, High Point, secretary; Bernard Weiss, Norfolk, Va., treasurer, and J. D. McRorie, Troy, publicity chairman.

Retiring officers, in addition to Venable, are Clinton T. Andrews Jr., Hickory, vice-president; Hazel Crawford, Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla., secretary, and Bill Wright, Shelby, treasurer.

Medical Students May Reserve Dorm Rooms

Dormitory rooms will be available to all medical, dental and pharmacy students who wish to remain in Chapel Hill to take state, national or other required examinations, announced James E. Wadsworth, director of housing, yesterday.

The procedure is to pay the Universiy cashier $5 and take the room card to the Housing Office for a definite assignment, said Wadsworth's announcement.

These rooms will be available from June 1 through the last day of the exams, according to Wadsworth.

Students who are graduating in June and wish to reserve room accomodations for members of their families during Commencement should go to the Housing Office, 2 New East Annex, said the announcement.

Wadsworth added summer school room assignments for men and married couples will be mailed sometime during May. Fall room assignments for men will be mailed during June, according to his announcement.

But a stamp of approval given by the student body will mean the limit will be set up to $23.

Exum favors raising the fees the $2 that is already allowed in the student constitution, but he doesn't want the extra $3 thrown in, too.

This same opinion was shared by student body Treasurer Jim Martin. Martin said, "I am in favor of raising fees the $2 already stipulated in the Constitution." But like Exum, Martin says that is enough without the additional $3.

'WISE TO WAIT'

Larry McElroy, Student Party floorleader, said he would "not support any fee raise before the State Legislature" adjourned.

McElroy refused to say what his opinion on the raise would be after the State Legislature concluded its session.

"The danger of raising our fees is too great, and a great many students attend this University on a shoestring," the SP floorleader concluded.

Recent attorney General appointee David Reid said there was "little doubt" that Graham Memorial needed an increased appropriation.

"I favor a fee raise only at such a time, however, as would not affect the opinion of the State Legislature, which controls our budget," Reid said.

Bob Young, new president of Graham Memorial Activities Board, said he would favor a fee raise if the student body could see something "tangible" that would result from it.

Young added, however, that if the State Legislature passed the proposed measure and took more money out of the student's pockets, he would "oppose" the hike in student fees.

Modern Indian's Work Now On Exhibit Here

An opportunity to view original and creative work of the contemporary American Indian is currently being offered by the Morehead Art Gallery with the showing of an exhibition of "Contemporary American Indian Watercolor Paintings." The exhibition will continue through May 15.

The water colors were assembled and are being circulated by the Museum of New Mexico to acquaint the public with present day work of the Indians.

Also on exhibit is a collection of water colors by Gifford Cochran, made possible by the North Carolina Arts Council of Winston-Salem.

Although America's native Indian art has been gaining steady recognition since the 1920s, contemporary Indian water colors still are relatively little known. But it is interesting to note that acceptance of the art form was stimulated by European exhibitions of Southwest Indian paintings, and that the French government last August awarded Les Palmes Academiques to more than a dozen artists. This marked the first time a foreign government has so honored the American Indian. Several recipients of this award are among artists in the Morehead Art Gallery.

The exhibit includes works by natives of the Pueblos, Navajos, Apache and Plains tribes, who in spite of modern trends and tools, have not lost artistic traits of their heritage.

The Chicago Tribune has called the water colors in the exhibit "utterly delightful and refreshingly simple and direct."

The Morehead Art Gallery is open from 2 to 10 p.m. daily, 10 a.m. to 10 p.m. Sundays.

A description of the missing mascot revealed that although it is just an average-looking turtle, one month old, it is easily recognized by its depth of character.

Every effort is being made to discover the new-found residence of the pet, and any information leading to its capture and subsequent return would be greatly appreciated by the coeds, possibly in the form of a small reward.

Directors Study Model Of Julius Caesar Set

Director Thomas M. Patterson (left) and Technical Director James Riley look over the set model for Julius Caesar, which will be staged by the Carolina Playmakers this weekend at the Forest Theatre. The set model is a near-exact replica of the stage Playmakers will use in presenting William Shakespeare's famous play. Tickets for Julius Caesar are now on sale at 214 Abernethy Hall, and will also be available at the door. No reserve seats will be held. Performances are scheduled for Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights at 8:30. In case of rain, performances will be held over.—Tom Owen photo.

House Passes Budget Bill Calling For Hike In Out-Of-State Tuition

Educational TV Money Still Included In Bill

RALEIGH, May 4 (AP)—The House took just two hours today to pass and send to the Senate a 640-million-dollar appropriations bill to operate state agencies for the next two fiscal years.

Except for a clarifying amendment sent up by Rep. J. K. Doughton of Alleghany, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, the vital budget bill went through the lower chamber exactly as approved by the Joint Appropriations subcommittee.

Doughton took an hour to explain the bill. Another hour was spent in debating amendments to increase appropriations slightly for A&T College in Greensboro and North Carolina College in Durham; plus a proposal to eliminate appropriations for the University of North Carolina educational television station. The three proposals were voted down.

As explained on the House floor by Doughton, the principal reductions in the General Fund budget from the Budget Commission recommendations were made in the following fields:

1. Printing and binding, reduced by $278,000.
2. Travel, reduced by $265,000.
3. Salary increments for employes not under the State Personnel Act, reduced by $470,000.
0. State-supported colleges, reduced by $872,000, the funds to be replaced by increased tuition receipts from all non-resident students, and from resident students at some of the smaller schools.

Here are some other highlights of the bill:

Doughton pointed out the appropriation for public schools will total 18 million dollars more during the coming biennium than during the two fiscal years ending this June 30.

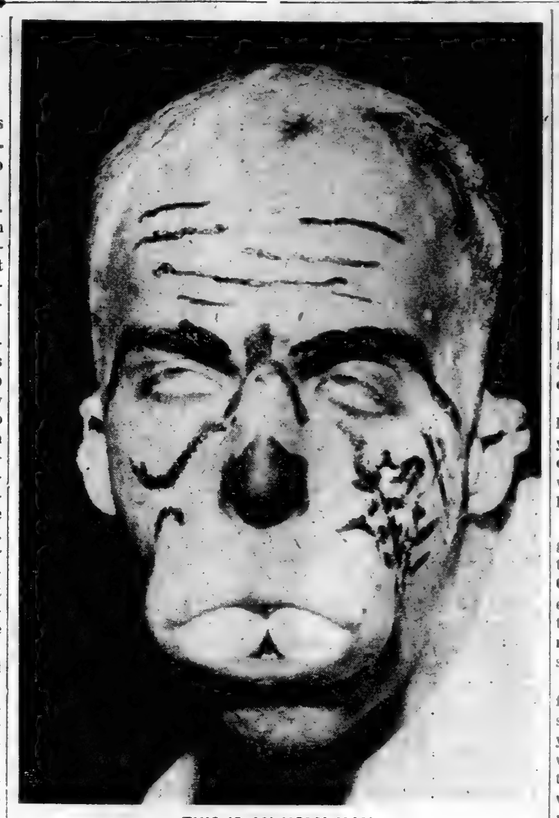
Most of this will go into providing 1,050 new teachers and 41 principals during the next fiscal year, and 1,015 new teachers and 43 more principals the following year, plus three million dollars for continuing salary increment increases.

To support the nine months school term alone during 1955-56 will cost the state $123,718,752 and during the following year $126,986,046.

Jurgensen Tells Of Injustices To Ibsen

By LOIS OWEN

"Ibsen is blamed for the shortcomings of his translators. This is the basic crime against him," said Prof. Kai Jurgensen, of the Dramatic Art Dept., in his Humanities Lecture, "Crimes Against Ibsen," delivered last night in Carroll Hall.



Mentioning the difficulty involved in translating literature, Jurgensen cited examples of what he considers to be inaccurate, obscure translations of Ibsen's plays.

Jurgensen referred to the abundant criticism Ibsen's plays have suffered - obscurity, unplayable dialogue, unfit subject—and asked why his plays have not died. He said an intellectual group has considered Ibsen as a philosopher, sociologist, moralist and not as a dramatist.

Jurgensen pointed out that Ibsen was not a man of letters and did not want to be. He spoke of him as "the essentially ignorant provincial he remained all his life." But, Jurgensen said, he had lots of horse sense.

"Ibsen is a theatreman's theatreman." Jurgensen commented. He said it was actors and directors who could not resist the Ibsen challenge, who revived his plays.

"Only when actors equal to him act his plays, only then does he come alive. And it's a crime to judge him any other way."

Wagner Addresses Students On NYC

By DELAINE BRADSHER

The Mayor of New York City, Robert Wagner, spoke here last night on municipal government and its connection with the largest city in the United States.

Jim Wallace, director of Graham Memorial, introduced the youngest man ever to be mayor of the big city. Mayor Wagner was sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

The Democratic mayor told the group he had "just emerged from the little matter of the New York City budget of almost one billion, eight hundred million dollars and that has come after a four-month running battle with a Republican state legislature."

The son of the author of the famous Wagner Act said, "A school with your tradition and your liberal reputation, a school which has been for over a century the outstanding exponent of the virtues of the honor system, cannot fail to impress visitors, even from New York."

Mayor Wagner called the city of New York "a city of minorities." We have in New York City a cosmopolitan population consisting of people of every religion, every color and evry national origin on the face of the earth," he said.

"When I assumed the office of mayor, I had determined that the best government could be furnished only by obtaining the best possible talent," he said.

Continuing, he said, "It has also been my philosophy that no governmental system that has been in operation is perfect, and that every governmental institution needs modernization and recasting at periodic intervals."

On juvenile delinquency, the mayor said, "It was and is my view that enough has been written and enough has been studied of this question over the years to warrant a time for action, and it is my purpose to proceed with action in order that New York City may see some light in this dark area."

Mayor Wagner concluded his speech by saying, "No other city so typifies America and true democracy. All races, all religions, all creeds are represented in and occupy high positions in our government.

"Ours is truly a government of the people, by the people and for the people," he concluded.

In answer to a question on racial friction in New York City the mayor said, "Whe have little racial friction at this point."

Caesar Is Last Drama This Year

The final production of this season for the Carolina Playmakers will be the Shakespearean classic, Julius Caesar, which will be staged at 8:30 p.m. Friday through Sunday in the Koch Memorial Forest Theatre.

The popular Shakespearean play, which has recently been made into a successful movie starring Academy Award winner Marlon Brando, will be presented with Roman costumes and a stylized setting.

Scene design for the production has been done by James Riley, Playmakers technical director. Costumes have been designed by June Craft.

Members of the cast include Walter L. Smith, London, England, as Caesar; Donald Treat, Chapel Hill, as Mark Antony; Donnell Stoneman, Greensboro, as Cassius, and Robert Sonkowsky, Menasha, Wis., as Brutus.

Julius Caesar will mark Walter Smith's first appearance with the Playmakers. An assistant professor in statistics here, he has previously appeared in revues staged by the Pentacle Club, Cambridge University, England.

Donald Treat, assistant technical director of the Playmakers, has previously appeared as Romeo in the Playmakers production of Romeo and Juliet and held the title role in the recent production of Mr. Roberts.

Robert Sonkowsky recently played the leading role in the Chapel Hill production of The Crucible, while Donnell Stoneman appeared in both The Crucible and Darkening Shore.

N. C. Symphony

Tossy Spivakovsky, Russian violinist who has appeared as guest artist with many of America's orchestras, will be soloist with the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra tomorrow night at 8:30 in Memorial Hall.

Students will be admitted to the concert for $1.

Hudson-Harper Recital Tonight In Hill Hall

Two students in the Department of Music will present their junior-year recitals in Hill Hall tonight at 8 o'clock.

William Eugene Hudson, pianist from Black Mountain, and Miss Jean Carol Harper, soprano from Danville, Va., will be the recitalists.

Hudson, a student of Dr. William S. Newman, will play two preludes and fugues from Bach's "Well-Tempered Clavier;" two etudes by Chopin, and Beethoven's "32 Variations in C Minor."

A graduate of Mars Mill Junior College where he majored in music and participated in various campus activities, Hudson has served as organist at Black Mountain Baptist Church and St. James Episcopal Church.

Since coming to Chapel Hill, he has been a member of the Men's Glee Club, has served as accompanist for Music Department programs, and has appeared in student recitals and on WUNC-TV.

MISS HARPER

Miss Harper, who is studying with Prof. Joel Carter, will be accompanied in her recital by Sandy Peake, Chapel Hill. She will present a group of songs in French by Delibes, Pierne, Faure, Gounod; and a group in English by Head, Grieg, Carpenter and Beach.

She previously was a student at Stratford Junior College, where she studied both voice and piano. She entered UNC in February.

Two Measures Face Student Legislature

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature will probably face a light docket tonight at its 7:30 meeting.

There are only two measures officially slated to be debated, but several others may be brought out at the session.

The measures which may or may not be brought to a vote are resolutions that were introduced two sessions ago but were either referred to special committees or held in the Ways and Means Committee last week.

The two measures officially slated to be brought out at the meeting, promise to arouse little dickering among the body.

One of these, a bill providing for selection of the new student government executive secretary, is almost certain to be immediately passed.

Introduced by Tom Lambeth (Student Party), the bill asks that the hiring authority be delegated to a committee of three appointed by the student body president. It also makes the secretary "responsible" to the president.

The other measure officially supposed to be voted on is likely to be shoved through without a trace of opposition.

It asks that the student body treasurer be made chairman of the student audit board. This involves a constitutional change if the Legislature passes it.

There are several other measures that may get a nod from the University Party-run Legislature but this depends on the decision of the Ways and Means Committee.

Last week the Committee got several resolutions that it called too "abstractal" to even merit legislative time. They were introduced by Jack Hudson (SP).

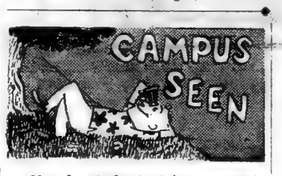
They called for, among other things, "greater cooperation between the three branches of the University," and the establishment of a "reading" day prior to exam periods.

So the committee either referred these to special committees for further "investigation," or it laid them on the shelf, with the Legislature's permission.

If the Ways and Means Committee puts these measures on the floor tonight, the session will undoubtedly be more extended.

University FM Station Gets Boost In Power

UNC's FM radio station is now operating at increased power.



WUNC has received authority from the Federal Communication Commission to operate at an effective radiated power of 15,500 watts, and the installation of the necessary equipment is almost complete.

During an interim period, WUNC is operating at an effective radiated power of 5,760 watts — about four times the former power, but less than the full authorized power.

WUNC's increase in strength was made possible by the gift to the University of a 10 kilowatt transmitter by the Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Company of Charlotte. The equipment which formerly broadcast the signal of WBT-FM in Charlotte was moved to Chapel Hill and has been installed in the Swain Hall transmitting room of the Communication Center. The installation was made without additional financial assistance from the University.

Robert Dever, senior engineer on the WUNC transmitter staff, said an additional electrical installation will be necessary before the station can operate at the full authorized power of 15,500 watts. Funds for this additional installation are not now available and no estimate could be made by station personnel concerning the time of the boost to full power.

Station Manager John Young said reports have already come in indicating that WUNC is reaching a greater area since increasing its power. The station

N. C. Symphony To Be Televised By WUNC-TV

GREENSBORO, May 4 — When the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra plays in Aycock Auditorium on the Woman's College campus next Tuesday, the entire program will be televised by WUNC-TV Channel 4, according to WC TV Director David Davis.

The Greensboro TV circuit, starting at 8:30 p.m., will be made possible by the extension of a 650-foot cable from the WC campus studio at Aycock Auditorium, laid out for televising the recent festival chorus of 1,000 teenage singers.

Ugly Man Contest Is Underway

Entries in Theta Chi Fraternity's "Ugliest Man on Campus" contest are due next Monday, according to contest Chairman Fred West.

West said photographs of entrants, who may be sponsored by any campus organizations of by individuals, may be turned in to him at the Theta Chi House. Makeup may be used, West said.

The winner, to be announced at the Universiy Club's Spring Carnival on May 12, will receive a case of beer, cartons of cigarets, lubrication jobs, gift certificates, movie passes, free meal, loving cup, toilet seat and "a special surprise gift."

Scales Appeal Given To Supreme Court

WASHINGTON, May 4. (AP)—Junius I. Scales, Carolinas leader for the Communist Party, today asked the Supreme Court to free him on bail while he appeals his Smith Act conviction.

His request will be submitted to Chief Justice Warren, probably next week.

Scales, 34-year-old grand nephew of a former North Carolina governor, was sentenced in Federal Court in Greensboro last April 22 to six years imprisonment. He was convicted of advocating overthrow of the federal government by force and violence, in violation of the Smith Act.

The Days Of Hammers And Ugly Vampires

While the legislature at Raleigh hammers the state budget through, the University itself takes quite a hammering.

In prospect are a reduced Library budget, no money for permanent improvements, and sundry invasions into the student pocketbook.

One such invasion is the measure to hike out-of-state tuition fees in state-supported colleges.

Another, part and parcel of that same measure, exempts "scholarship" holders from the general increase.

We have grave misgivings about both. If the new rates strike a point of diminishing returns, many of the University's finer out-of-state students could no longer afford or desire to take their schooling in Chapel Hill. We think, if an increase must come at all, that it should be shared by all.

The other side of the tuition-raise coin—the proposal to exempt scholarship holders—stinks like a Tennessee ramp. The advocates of the measure said, in the beginning, that "the Wolfpack Club at State and the Educational Foundation at Chapel Hill have, and are now having, their problems." This apology, minimizing untold problems that did, in saner times, hold some precedence over the Educational Foundation's troubles, stemmed from a single fact: That 175 of 200 scholarship holders have athletic scholarships, won on merits quite apart from their school work.

It is, as we said at the time, the old vampire of athletic subsidization in which other student pocketbooks must bear the pain of discrimination.

A University should pin its blue ribbons first on accomplishments in the classroom. How are we to explain, if this is true, why athletic scholarship holders (and we intend no slur on athletes as such) will get relief while the splendid students get none? As another newspaper has said, the concessions should not depend on one's ability to "punt, pass, shoot, pitch, run or otherwise flash across the athletic horizon."

Allowing, as they have, this snake's head amendment to follow the general tuition increase, the legislators have violated the true function of higher education, which ought to put first premium on academic excellence, and have charged right over President Gordon Gray's clearly-stated objection.

As the late Senator Tobey used to say, "The whole thing reeks to high Heaven."

Sex Talk At Woman's College

Speaking at Woman's College, where half the student body made the Dean's List last term, a noted anthropologist told the gals something he admitted they already new—that females are superior to males.

Dr. Ashley Montagu, the male head of the Rutgers University Anthropology Department, said that females are stronger emotionally, that they grasp the importance of situations more quickly, and that they rate higher in intelligence.

The lecturer told the girls that "the colution to human problems is to learn to love." And, he said, the female's job is to teach the male to "revalue his values," to teach him to love.

What the anthropologist didn't tell the girls they already knew, too. If a gal is set on making her man "revalue his values," she had better keep right on playing like she's not superior.

Carolina Front

Sir Hubert Of The Indigent's Club, London

J. A. C. Dunn

THE DUKE Chronicle reported last week that it had had a rather momentous visit from a distinguished English educator who is in this country inspecting the nation's seats of learning.

Upon seeing this we leapt to the telephone and after waging a pitched battle with the operator, secured contact with our quarry and arranged to meet him in Chapel Hill.

The distinguished visitor is Sir Hubert Eggenshires-brokenham (pronounced "egnum") Scums, professor of Transframulate Bork Processes. Sir Hubert arrived in a Rolls Royce at GM and stepped out. We said how do you do. Sir Hubert looked at us from under the brim of his Homburg, shifted his shell-rimmed glasses, and spoke.

"'Do," he mumbled.

We asked him if he wouldn't like to look around Chapel Hill for a while. He showed signs of inner struggle and uttered again.

"Mm. D'lighted."

WE ESCORTED SIR Hubert humbly into GM. We showed him the Carolina Quarterly office and offered him a few copies to examine. He leafed through them, making a chewing sound somewhere behind his spectacles as he did so, and spoke once more.

"By Jove!" Long pause. "Rum sort of thing, what?" Sir Hubert looked at us with what we can only call a sneer on his face and chewed some more. "Uttah muck, my deah fella. What?"

We took Sir Hubert to the Grail Room and explained that when the Grail held meetings a large silver cup was placed in the middle of the table. Sir Hubert waved vaguely toward the east.

"'Strawd'n'ry. Those people—Grail whatnot — sort of sit round — you know — just sort of sit round and look at the thing. Right?" We said as far as we knew, Right. "'Strawd'n'ry," said Sir Hubert. He pushed his Homburg down on his head and made that chewing sound. We took him to The Daily Tar Heel offices and explained the newspaper's setup. Sir Hubert looked at a recent issue. "What's this 'Y Court Corner' thing?" We explained. "And this sort of leadah heah — Carolina Front — this Dunn fella — bit muddled, what?" We explained. Sir Hubert chewed. We went to the main lounge and Sir Hubert listened intently to an explanation of the magazine subscriptions, the piped-in music, the piano etc.

"Tophole sort of thing," said Sir Hubert, almost audible for the first time. "Like my club — Indigent's Club, you know — London — frightfully decent little place."

We went downstairs to the Tarnation office. Sir Hubert looked through a copy, goggled, and chewed some more. "Bit round the bend," he muttered, and glowered over his spectacles at the pinups on the wall. "Those, ah — those women — what you people call — ah, ah — coeds? Right?" we said not exactly and explained. "Mm," said Sir Hubert. "Queeah. 'Strawd'n'ry. Women and go on. Most unusual types. Nudists?"

We took Sir Hubert to Old East and showed him a few rooms. His eyes bugged out and the spectacles slid down his nose a full inch. "Barbarous." he snorted. "Absolute barracks, you know. Barracks. These punishment quarters? Offenders live here and so on, I suppose. Absolutely primeval. D'you acksh'lly mean to say — two men — live in —togetah-that? By Jove! Primeval. Absolutely."

Ike Answers Questions Of Reporter In Dreamland

James Reston
N. Y. Times

WASHINGTON, — After the President's press conference last Wednesday, this reporter dreamed that Mr. Eisenhower let us go on asking him questions and that he answered every one fully and frankly:

Q.—Mr. President, how did the Government happen to say last Saturday that the United State would "insist" on having the Chinese Nationalists in on "any" conversations about the Formosa area, and then announce on Tuesday that we'd negotiate a cease-fire without the Nationalists?

A.—We goofed.

Q.—I beg your pardon?

A.—We just messed it up. I was up at the farm in Gettysburg Saturday looking over the new decorations in the dining room when the State Department drafted the first statement.

Q.—Who drafted it?

A.—I think it was that new young Hoover fellow.

Q.—Did you approve it?

A.—Oh, sure, I approved it.

HUMAN NATURE

Q.—Where was the Secretary of State?

A.—He was up at Duck Island in Lake Ontario.

Q.—Did he approve it?

A.—No, it was out before he saw it.

Q.—Couldn't you get him a telephone up there?

A.—I've talked to the Signal Corps about that.

Q.—But Mr. Dulles got back on Monday.

A.—Yes, he got back Monday and thought we should agree to talk to the Communists without the Nationalists.

Q.—And what did you think of that?

A.—I thought that was fine. Great idea. We should never give the world the idea that we are not receptive to talking about peace.

Q.—But you didn't think about that Saturday?

A.—No, as I say, I was busy up in the country Saturday.

Q.—Mr. President, could I ask you something else?

A.—Sure, ask me anything. (The questioner was really dreaming by this time.)

Q.—Didn't you know your switch on negotiations would make Senator Knowland mad?

A.—Senator Knowland is a —.

Q.—Careful, Mr. President!

A.—Please keep Senator Knowland out of this.

Q.—Don't you like Senator Knowland?

A.—He's a fine man.

Q.—I don't understand.

A.—He's the only man in the Republican party who says that if I don't want to run again, nobody should put pressure on me to run. He says he's against having an unwilling candidate in 1956, and so am I.

Q.—May I infer from that —.

A. You may infer from that that if nominated I will not run, and if elected I will not serve, unless, of course, I change my mind. Which I may or may not do. Is that clear?

Q.—No, sir. How long do you have to serve?

A.Twenty months, twenty-three days, twelve hours and, let me see, forty-five minutes.

THE FACTS

Q.—Mr. President, how did we ever get involved in Quemoy and Matsu?

IKE
'We goofed.'

A.—I was wondering about that just the other day. We were going along fine, trying to keep our minds on Germany and Japan, and all of a sudden everybody was talking about Quemoy and Matsu.

Q.—Can't you defend Formosa without them?

A.—I can defend anything without them. I never said I'd defend them. We sort of suggested we might have to defend them in the hope that the Chinese Communists would get scared and agree to a cease-fire. But they didn't scare.

Q.—If we don't defend them what about the moral of Chiang Kai-shek and his troops?

A.—And if we do, what about my morale and the morale of my troops? Want me to tell you something?

O.—(Eagerly) Yes, sir.

A.—I'm sick of Quemoy and Matsu. All I've heard about for weeks is Quemoy and Matsu, and if it isn't Quemoy and Matsu, it's Matsu and Quemoy. I want to get back to Germany and Japan, and all you guys want to talk about is Foster's folly.

Q.—May I change the subject?

A.—You sure may!

ENTER ZHUKOV

Q.—On this correspondence you have been having with Marshal Zhukov, isn't it dangerous these days to have a pen-pal in the Soviet Union?

A.—You mean politically dangerous?

Q.—Yes, sir.

A.—You mean that if I keep on writing to Zhukov, I may get into trouble with the Republican party?

Q.—Yes, sir.

A.—And if I get into trouble with the Republican party for trying to make peace with the Russians, the party might not be so eager to have me run again next year?

Q.—I was going to say —.

The President: Oh, Jim; oh, Hagerty, take a letter!

A Return To Reflection

Albert Schweitzer

It seems, indeed, little better than mockery that we should urge men to anything so remote as a return to reflection about the meaning of life at a time when the passions and the follies of the nations have become so intense and so extended, when unemployment and poverty and starvation are rife, when power is being used on the powerless in the most shameless and senseless way, and when organized human life is dislocated in every direction. But only when the general population begins to reflect in this way will forces come into being which will be able to effect something to counterbalance all this chaos and misery. Whatever other measures it is attempted to carry out will have doubtful and altogether inadequate results.

When in the spring the withered gray of the pastures gives place to green, this is due to the millions of young shoots which sprout up freshly from the old roots. In like manner the revival of thought which is essential for our time can only come through a transformation of the opinions and ideals of the many brought about by individual and universal reflection about the meaning of life and of the world.

Busy Governor Knight Works For Future

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — A busy governor at the current White House Conference of Governors is the Hon. Goodwin J. Knight of California. The latch string is always out at the hotel suite where Gov. Knight and his handsome new wife are receiving a wide variety of customers including influential labor leaders.

The labor callers knew of course that Gov. Knight enjoyed American Federation of Labor support at home. They still did not expect such cordiality from an important Republican governor. Mrs. Knight, too, was flatteringly familiar with their names and connections.

Their cup really ran over when the governor made it clear how very greatly he differs from his fellow-Californian, Vice-President Nixon, who is a pet hate of the unions. The governor explained that one California newspaper now refers to the State Capitol as "Gompers Hall."

This should not have surprised them. The governor recently regretted that he could not attend a dinner for the Vice-President in Los Angeles because he was addressing the teamsters' union that evening. Gov. Knight added that he would be glad to see Nixon in Sacramento.

In contrast to the foregoing, Knight avoids controversy with another ambitious Californian, Senator Knowland. In organizational matters he has usually sided with the Knowland supporters.

The Vice-President staged a seeming show of unity with a luncheon for the governor's party which was attended also by both California Senators, Knowland and Kuchel. The same group were on hand for a testimonial dinner for Senator Knowland given that night by the Oakland Chamber of Commerce.

There appears to be no doubt, however, that the California GOP has potentialities for political fission of high explosive power should President Eisenhower decide that he will not run again.

According to students of the complicated California election laws, candidates for President next year must make their aspirations known by January 1 if they are to get a full slate of delegates. This is said to be true of both parties.

January 1 next is a date rather earlier than the President might like for such a decision. This is true especially if he wants to bow out. For then the session of Congress just beginning would be virtually out of his control once his announcement was made.

It is suggested that Gov. Knight is working hard to consolidate his support in advance of the new year as he, of course, knows somebody who is ready to run — himself. Should the President delay, it would, by usual custom, be the governor in whose name the delegates were held.

California Democrats are glad of the January 1st deadline. They think it will smoke out Adlai Stevenson earlier than might be possible, otherwise.

'No Excuse For Anyone Being So Narrow-Minded,' Says Reader

Editors:

Grimes, in my estimation you are the kind of person whose mother should have pinched your head off when you were born. I can't find a bit of Christian charity in my heart for you.

There is no excuse for anyone being so narrow-minded and little. You have no right to insinuate that you represent the South. Why, down home we don't even speak to miserable white trash like you. I cannot see, for the life of me, why the Daily Tar Heel would print such a vile hunk of garbage as your letter. It reeks with ignorance and is written in such a tone that no polite person could read it without shuddering, and thanking God in a silent prayer that there are so few people on earth of your calliber.

Statisticians Not 'Sneaky Devils' Despite Language

Editors:

It's unfortunate that the usually competent editors of The Daily Tar Heel saw fit to perpetuate the ignorance of the Raleigh News and Observer in printing their comments on the Statistics Colloquium held here Monday.

Having read the purpose of that presentation, which is written in terms admittedly not designed for lay consumption, you lead us to the conclusion that ". . . figures do not lie but liars can figure. And here is new evidence that the statisticians can collect all the facts without communicating them to anyone but themselves."

I take it this means if you don't understand statistics, no one else does. And we always suspected those statisticians were sort of sneaky devils any way, didn't we? I just received a program of the meeting of the North Carolina Academy of Science, being held down in Davidson next week end. Here are some of the papers being presented: "Preparation and microbiological properties of 5-(1-alkyl ethylidene) 2,4-dioxothiazolidines;" "Study of the effect of Salmonella typhimurium on the acquired resistance of mice to Trichinella spiralis;" . . . etc.

Come on now, just because we don't know a Poisson distribution from an ink font, let's not join the anti-egghead revolution. Let's just leave those uncommunicative old statisticians to more important things, like telling us whether or not the Salk polio vaccine is effective. . . .

Smith Girls Are Not 'Fiendish, Misguided, Rebellious Children'

Editors:

In writing this letter I am voicing my objection to the notoriety that Smith Dormitory has received over the past few weeks through columns in your newspaper.

The residents of Smith have been pictured as fiendish, misguided, rebellious children who have completely gotten out of hand. In reality this is far from the case. The women of Smith Dormitory are quite mature and well-meaning persons living in a spirit of friendship and harmony that is traditional with such a dormitory life.

The sensationalism and, at times, misinformed reporting in the last few weeks can be comparable only to a scandal sheet. It is of great concern to me that your paper sees fit to print such trivialities and can devote only a line in passing to the fine accomplishments of Smith Dormitory such as being the first dorm with 100 per cent in the Campus Chest drive, winners of the women's dorm division of the Valkyrie Sing, second place winners in the Tennis Ball Parade, a most successful faculty Christmas party, and aid to two needy families.

Here's hoping that your paper in the future will uphold the true ideals of journalism and will take note of the worthy along with the unworthy.

Marlyn Zager

(We are happy to learn that Smith coeds are "mature and well-meaning persons living in a spirit of friendship and harmony," something we quite suspected all along. As for Miss Zager's charge of yellow journalism, we recall mention of Smith Dorm in a panty raid story, a news account of last Saturday night's firecracker episode, and an item about Smith's lost turtle.

(We trust Smith will continue living in a spirit of "friendship and harmony," wish them nothing but the best in their turtle quest, and hope they haven't been treated unfairly.—Editors)

Quote, Unquote

You simply cannot call the human race a dirty name unless you smile when you do so. The calling of the name may be necessary and the name itself may be temporarily accurate, but not to smile at the time is a tactical blunder which nullifies the entire usefulness of the probable accuracy of the name, for without humor there is no hope, and man could no more live without hope than he could without the earth underfoot.—William Saroyan

Krepp, Drake Go For Marks

Two members of the Varsity swimming team will try for American Records in a sanctioned trial Friday at 5:30 in Bowman Gray Indoor Pool.

Phillip Drake, national collegiate champion, will try for marks at 500 yards and 500 meters butterfly. The records are presently held by Bowen Stassforth of Iowa.

Charles Krepp will try for the backstroke records at the same distances. The records are currently held by Jimmy Thomas of UNC.

Officials for the trials will be Jack Lowder, Carl Blythe, Ralph Casey, Dick Jamerson, Bob Colbert, Bill Meade, Joe Hilton and Lee Holmes.

Netters In 3rd In Row

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 4.—Carolina's tennis team continued its sweep through a six-match northern trip here today by shutting out Harvard 9-0. It was the third win and second shut-out for the Tar Heels on their trip. The other wins were over Williams and Amherst.

Herb Browne, Carolina's No. 1 man, got the Tar Heels off to a good start today by whipping the Crimson's best man, Ham Graven 6-3, 6-0. The win, Carolina's second over Harvard this season, ended a four-match win streak for the Crimson. It was Carolina's third in a row since losing to Miami.

Thursday the Tar Heels move to New Haven to meet Yale.

The summary:

Browne defeated Graven 6-3, 6-0; Bradford defeated Haegler, 6-1, 10-8; Payne defeated Fischer 6-4, 6-1; Green defeated Harris 6-2, 6-1; Kerdasha defeated Mayers 6-2, 6-0; Thompson defeated Canfield 7-5, 7-5; Greene and Payne defeated Fischer and Canfield 6-4, 6-2; Kerdasha and Handel defeated Graven and Heckscher 4-6, 7-5, 7-5; Browne and Bradford defeated Haegler and Harris 6-4, 6-3, 10-8.

Carolina Golfers Begin Play In Intercollegiates

Carolina's golfers open play today in the Southern Intercollegiate Golf Tournament at Athens, Ga.

A nine man team composed of Larry Parker, Aubrey Rothrock, Bobby Sisk, Jim Sykes, Larry Bell, Tuffy Henderson, Billy Ford, Joe Correll and Billy Amrfield will represent Carolina.

The UNC varsity golfers are undefeated in eight matches this season and have been tied once.

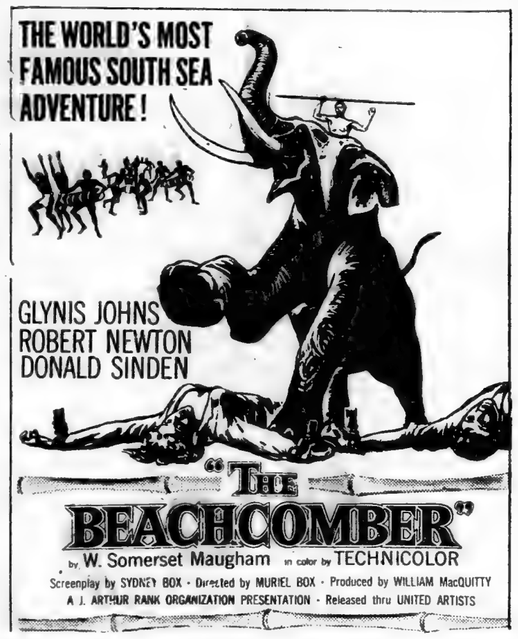
Frosh Rap 10 Hits In Win

DURHAM, N. C. May 4 — Carolina's freshman baseballers rapped ten hits off two Duke pitchers here today to get a 10-2 victory over the Blue Imps. It was the Tar Babies' seventh win against two losses this season. One of Carolina's losses was to Duke by 8-1 earlier in the season.

The Tar Babies took an early lead with two runs in the second and four in the third. The first two runs came on a homer by Joe Temple with one mate aboard.

Gilliland started on the hill for the winners, but was chased in the fourth in favor of McIver who held the Blue Imps hitless the rest of the way to gain credit for the win. Gilliland was ahead when he left the game, but it was McIver's win as the starting pitcher must work five complete innings in order to gain credit for a victory.

The Tar Babies return to Chapel Hill Saturday to play host to Greensboro High school at Emerson Field.



The linescore:

Dramatic Hit Caps Carolina Comeback

By BUZZ MERRITT

Chuck Hartman, a .154 hitter who has spent most of the season coaching base for Carolina's baseball Tar Heels, rapped a sharp bases-loaded single in the last of the ninth inning yesterday to score two runs and give Carolina vital 6-5 comeback win over Duke.

Coach Walter Rabb called on the stocky Hartman with the Dukes leading 5-4 and one out in the ninth and he delivered with the hit that scored Will Frye and Harry Lloyd. Frye had walked and moved to second on Lloyd's infield hit. It was the fifth time that Rabb has called on Hartman to pinch-hit this season and the fifth time that he has reached base.

The win moved Carolina into sole possession of fifth place in the ACC and dropped the Blue Devils to seventh. Clemson occupies the sixth slot.

Jim Raugh, ACC strike-out leader, was credited with the victory as he came on in the fifth for Tom Maultsby and limited the Dukes to three hits the rest of the way. He was touched for a run in the top of the ninth that gave Duke its short-lived lead.

Carolina took an early lead in the fame with a pair in the first and one in the third, but the Blue Devils came back to go ahead 4-3 in the fifth. Raugh gave himself a big boost in the last of the sixth when he singled home Jim Love to knot the score at 4-4.

Duke's ninth inning run came as Andy Cockrell drew a walk, moved to send on an infield out and scored on Carl Dutchman's single. Raugh settled down and retired George Atkinson to stop the rally with the Dukes ahead 5-4.

In Carolina's ninth, Frye walked with one out and Lloyd's sharp grounder between short and third went for a hit. Al Long walked to fill the bases to set the stage for Hartman's dramatic hit. After Long had walked, Harry Fatzinger relieved Duke starter Tom Blackman and was the victim of Hartman's blow.

Barnes Given Gift By Team

Fourteen wrestlers and coaches Sam Barnes and Earl Hoffman were present Tuesday night at the first annual post-season wrestling banquet at the Pines Restaurant. Members of the freshman and Varsity wrestling teams presented Coach Barnes with an electric razor.

The dinner was highlighted by an after dinner talk by coach Barnes in which he thanked all the members of the squad for their participation in the past season and outlined plans for next year's wrestling season. In addition, Barnes spoke on team spirit, enthusiasm for wrestling, and stressed his desire for more boys to participate in the sport in order to take full advantage of the many opportunities which he believes it offers to the individual.

After Barnes' talk, Co-captain Pete McGehee opened the floor for nominations for next year's varsity captain and sophomore Charlie Boyette was unanimously elected to lead the team.

Dorm Title Tilt Today

The Dental School will meet Joyner Dorm this afternoon at 4:30 on Field 2 in a softball game for the Intramural Dormitory Championship. The Fraternity crown will be determined next week in a contest between the Sigma Chi's and the Chi Phsi's.

In the only game played yesterday the Chi Psi's wolloped the Phi Delt Chi's by 20-6. Larry Cobb, the winning pitcher, was greatly aided by the big bat of Don Thornton, who collected six hits in six trips to the plate for a perfect day.

MONOGRAM CLUB MEETS

The Monogram Club will meet tonight at 7:15 in the clubroom to discuss plans for a year's-end party. All letter winners are urged to attend, according to President Wilbur Jones.

THE GREAT CAP and GOWN CONTROVERSY

The cap and gown season is upon us, and with it comes the perennial question: which side of the cap should the tassel hang on?

This is an argument that arises every year to roil the academic world, and it is, alas, no closer to solution today than it was in 1604 when Fred Tassel invented the troublesome ornament.

Fred Tassel, incidentally, never made a penny from his invention. The sad fact is he never took out a patent on it. This tragic oversight becomes understandable, however, when one considers that patents were not invented till 1851 by Fred Patent, himself a pitiable figure. A compulsive handwasher, he died in his fourteenth year, leaving behind a wife and five spotless children.

But I digress. We were discussing which side of the cap the tassel should hang on.

For many years the universally accepted practice was to hang the tassel over the front of the cap. This practice was abandoned in 1942 when the entire graduating class of Northwestern University, blinded by tassels hanging in their eyes, made a wrong turn during commencement exercises and ended up at the Great Lakes Training Center where, all unwitting, they were inducted into the Navy for five year hitches.

There is one school of thought—large and growing daily larger—which holds that the tassel should be worn on the same side you carry your Philip Morris cigarettes. Thus a quick glance will show you where your Philip Morris are and save much time and fumbling.

This makes a good deal of sense because when one wants a Philip Morris, one wants one with a minimum of delay. One does not relish being kept, even for a second, from the clean, delicate flavor of Philip Morris, so artfully blended, so subtly concocted to please the keen and alert taste buds of young smokers. One chafes at any obstacle, however small, that is put in the way of enjoying this most edifying of cigarettes, so pleasing to the perceptive palate. Here, in king size or regular, at prices that do no violence to the slimmest of budgets, is a firm white cylinder of balm and pure, abiding content.

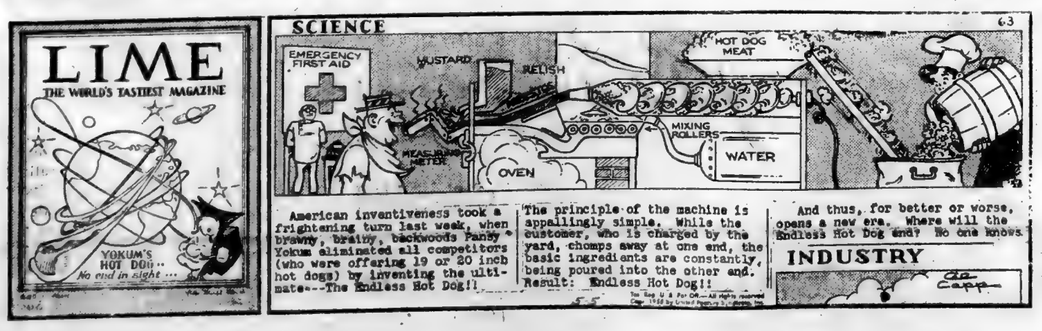
There is another group, small but vocal, that insists the tassel should hang over the back of the cap. The tassel, they say, is a symbol like the bullfighter's pigtail, signifying honor and courage.

They are wrong. Bullfighters wear pigtails for only one reason: to keep the backs of their necks warm. Do you have any idea what a draft a bull makes when he rushes past you? A plenty big one, you may be sure.

In fact, upper respiratory infections, contracted in the wake of passing bulls, are the largest single cause of bullring fatalities. I have this interesting statistic from the Bullfighters Mutual Life Insurance Company of Hartford, Connecticut, one of the few insurance companies in Hartford, Connecticut, which writes insurance exclusively for bullfighters. Incidentally, Hartford, the insurance capital of America, is a most interesting city and well worth a visit if you are ever in New England, as northeastern United States is, for some reason, called. Hartford can be reached by bus, train, plane, and the Humboldt Current. Try to make your visit in spring, when the actuaries are in bloom.

But I digress. We were talking about what side to wear the tassel on. An ingenious solution to this troubling problem was proposed a few years ago by Fred Sigafoos, perhaps better known as "The Quoit King of Delaware." An early forbear of Mr. Sigafoos, Humboldt Sigafoos (who later invented the current which bears his name) was granted a monopoly by King George III on all quoits manufactured in Delaware. Somehow the royal appointment was never rescinded and from that day to this, every quoit made in Delaware has been a Sigafoos Quoit.

Well, sir, Fred Sigafoos once suggested that an equitable settlement to the great tassel controversy would be to starch the tassels so they stood upright and hung on no side of the cap at all. Mr. Sigafoos was, of course, only seeking to broaden his market, because after graduation, what can you do with an upright tassel but hurl quoits at it?



©Max Shulman, 1955

The makers of PHILIP MORRIS who bring you this column make no recommendation about what side to hang the tassel on. But with cigarettes they say: Stay on the gentle, tasty, vintage side—with PHILIP MORRIS, of course.

UNC Symphony Gave 'Gratifying Results'

Due to Dr. Slocum's recent illness, which has prevented him from conducting the UNC Orchestra in the last few months, Prof. Edgar Alden, the assistant conductor and concert master, was called upon to continue Dr. Slocum's work, and it was under Prof. Alden's direction that the April 4 concert was presented by the orchestra, with highly gratifying results.

The concert began with Handel's Concerto Grosso in C Minor, Op. 6, No. 8. Its Allemande began and flowed through at the proper tempo, with fine string quality and nice shading. The Grave movement followed with poetic phrasing. The Andante Allegro was done with fine contrasts and good shading throughout. The Adagio went also quite well and its character was nicely adhered to. The Siciliana was played with very good lyric quality and delicate string tone. The Allegro crowned a good, well thought-out and excellently phrased reading of the whole Concerto Grosso. The whole performance would have been flawless, had it not been for the somewhat loud playing of the double-bass section, which, at times, prevented us from hearing the delightful passages for the harpsichord. All the soloists: Davis, Mrs. Heard, Miss Clarke and Bernstein gave good performances, playing with good tone and showing fine musicianship.

BEETHOVEN

The second number was the Beethoven Symphony No. 2, in D Major, Op. 36, which is a major test for any orchestra, due to its aboundance of contrasts, demanding the utmost in technique and musicianship from everyone in all the sections. The Adagio Molto; Allegro con Brio, first movement, was played with fine tonal quality in the string and woodwind sections; the playing of the horns and trumpets being generally good, although, at times, unnecessarily loud. However, the movement proceeded at a well-maintained tempo, with proper contrasts and good phrasing. The Larghetto flowed smoothly, with excellent poetical quality, fine crescendoes and diminuendoes, attesting to the pains taken by the conductor in the rehearsals towards achieving perfection. The Scherzo went along, with the whole orchestra playing in perfect coordination, at a good tempo and with fine shading.

The orchestra continued playing with the same inspiration and spirit through the Allegro Molto, which crowned a very good performance. Special mention must be made of the fine playing of the woodwind section in the Scherzo, particularly. With this presentation of the Second Symphony of Beethoven, our Orchestra proved its ability to meet the major test this Symphony represents.

DEBUSSY

Debussy's Petite Suite was the next number on the program, and the reading with which Professor Alden and the orchestra treated us was a very inspired one. Not a single nuance, nor the slightest fine detail of this delightful score was missed or passed-by by anyone. A perfect balance was achieved between all sections of the orchestra and special mention must be made of the beautiful performance given by the woodwinds. Dr. Earl Slocum played the first flute part, Herbert Fred took that of the first clarinet, our dependable first oboe, Tom Wheeler and John Renner, the first bassoon, ably assisted by the other members of their respective sections, did a beautiful job. The performance of the whole Petite Suite was a revelation.

Roger McDuffie, first trumpet with the Orchestra, presented a fine effort, his "Tribute," for complete orchestra. Although he did not say anthing really new, this piece is very well put-together. Old concert-goers, like this writer, could imagine themselves hearing passages reminiscent of Wagner, Anton Bruckner and of Vaughan Williams. The treatment of the brass choir is exceedingly good and the composer achieved a perfect blend with the strings and woodwinds. Although this composer had in mind to write a modern work and, in a couple of passages, this "Tribute" goes to the modern idiom, the whole structure is quite classical. The UNC Orchestra did a fine job with their short work.

WAGNER

The last number was the Prelude to "Die Meistersaenger von Nuerberg," by Richard Wagner, which was played to perfection, closing one of the best symphony concerts we have had in Chapel Hill for quite some time and which, unfortunately, was poorly attended. The efforts of these serious and devoted musicians should be much better rewarded by all Chapel Hillians, in this reviewer's opinion.

Chancellor House Set To Speak At Press Club Awards Banquet

Chancellor Robert B. House will be principal speaker at the University Press Club's annual Awards Banquet Tuesday night, Press Club President Earl McGuire announced last night.

The banquet, a climax to the club's activities for the year, will be in special honor of School of Journalism faculty members O. J. Coffin and Phillips Russell, both of whom have served the University more than 20 years.

Also highlighting the banquet, which will get underway at 6:30 p.m. at the Pines Restaurant, will be the presentation of the club's annual writing awards in the fields of straight news, feature writing, sports and editorial writing.

"I am delighted that we were able to get Chancellor House," McGuire said in making the announcement. "We realize that he has a very busy schedule this time of year and we feel that we are very fortunate that he was able to arrange it so that he could speak on such short notice."

McGuire also pointed out that the banquet is open to non-Press Club members, students, faculty and townspeople alike, who would like to attend.

Covering The Campus

Miss Mary Lou Dowling, director of the American National Red Cross overseas recreation program, will be on the campus tomorrow to acquaint young women of the area with career opportunities available through the Red Cross.

Miss Dowling will meet with interested women at 2 p.m. in 210 Gardner Hall. College graduates, she said, 23 years of age or older, will be preferred. Miss Dowling's visit has been arranged by the University Placement Service.

A supper forum at Lenoir Hall tonight will feature six members of the United States Information Service.

The six will discuss "The ISUS Abroad."

Speakers include Miss Adilia Majica of Honduras, Alfredo Oritz of Guatemala, Richard O'Farrell of Spain and Dan Mikkelsen of Denmark. Each will explain the views of their countries toward America and her policies.

The supper forum will be sponsored by the University YMCA. Guests will go through the cafeteria line at 5:30 and carry trays to the front dining room, second floor. The speakers will talk from 5:55 until 6:25, followed by half an hour of questions from the floor. The meeting is slated to end at 7 p.m.

Frosh Camp Meet Tonight

Discussion of the basic needs of incoming freshmen will be continued tonight when Freshman Camp counselors meet at 8 p.m. in Phillips Hall, it was announced yesterday by Joe Clapp, publicity committeeman.

The counselors believe they will be able to look deeper into the aspects of college life by continuing the training meeting held last Thursday, said Clapp.

Mrs. Ida Friday and Rev. Charles Jones will again lead the group.

Scotty Hester, who was elected 1955 camp director last Thursday, will review the camp schedule with the various committee chairmen.

Three groups of counselors will practice group leadership separately. Later in the evening they will meet together to compare results.

The camp is being designed so freshmen can present their views and questions to the discussion leaders at the orientation program, said Clapp.

Dear Pop:
I hope you won't get all excited about this little favor I'm going to ask you.
You see, on account of I haven't gone to school yet, people have a little trouble reading what I write, and besides, even if I had a nice big crayon and a piece of paper, I'm just a bit short of change right now, and couldn't afford a stamp.
What I mean is, Mother is a pretty good scout, and I'd like to send her a card for Mother's Day. So would you mind please just signing my name for me, and lending me a stamp? Oh yes, and paying for the card too, like a good egg?

To Complete Book

Dr. George L. Simpson Jr., UNC sociologist, has been granted a Guggenheim Foundation Fellowship which will enable him to complete a book started by the late Dr. Howard W. Odum, for many years head of the UNC Sociology Department.

Holder of three degrees from UNC, Dr. Simpson is associate professor of sociology and research associate in the Institute for Research in Social Science.

Two Junior Recitals Scheduled For Sunday

Junior recitals by two students in the UNC Music Dept. have been scheduled for Sunday in Hill Hall at 4:30 p.m.

Miss Nancy Eversman, pianist from Flat Rock, and Miss Beatrice Allston, soprano from Miami, Fla., will present the recitals, a traditional event for junior-year music majors.

Miss Eversman, student of Dr. W. S. Newman, will play prelude and Fugue in F from Back's Well-Tempered Clavier; Sonata, op. 47, no. 2 by Clementi; the first movement from Shumann's Concerto in A Minor with Byron Freeman, Raleigh, playing the orchestral part at the second piano.

Miss Allston, student of Prof. Joel Carter, will sing a group of songs in Italian by Monteverdi and Handel; German Leider by Schubert and Schumann; works by Gretchaninoff and Rachmaninoff.

Pianist Eversman transferred to the University in September from St. Mary's College in Raleigh. She studied piano with Mary Ruth Haig, and gave a recital at St. Mary's last year. She was an accompanist for the Glee Club, sang in the choir, and was assistant organist in the chapel.

For the past five summers she has been organist at St. John's Episcopal Church in Flat Rock. Here at the University, Miss Eversman studies organ, viola and is accompanist for the Women's Glee Club.

Symphony Plays Tonight

Tossy Spivakovsky, Russian violinist who has appeared as guest artist with many American orchestras, will be soloist with the North Carolina Symphony Orchestra when it appears in concert at Memorial Hall tonight at 8:30.

Spivakovsky has played his 1721 Stradivarius in all 48 states, Canada, South America, Europe, the Middle East and Hawaii, and in less than a decade has established himself as "among the choicest violinists before the public today," according to The New York Times.

He first attracted attention in this country when he was guest artist with the Cleveland and Pittsburgh symphony orchestras in 1943.

A native of southern Russia, Spivakovsky was taken to Berlin before he was two years old. At the age of 10 he made his concert debut and grew to musical maturity in Berlin between the two world wars. Just before the outbreak of World War II, Spivakovsky went to Australia on a concert tour. He never returned to Germany. The violinist now makes his home in Connecticutt.

For his solo with the North Carolina Symphony, Spivakovsky will play Sibelius' "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra, Opus 47."

Student membership in the North Carolina Symphony Society for $1, which entitles holders to attend the concert, will be available.

Under the direction of Dr. Benjamin Swalin, the orchestra will open the program with Beethoven's overture to the ballet, "The Creations of Prometheus." The rest of the orchestra's program will consist of Brahms' "Symphony No II, Opus 73," "The Little Train of the Caipira" from "Bachianas Brasileiras, No. II" by Villa-Lobos and "Pelovetzian Dances" from the opera "Prince Igor" by Borodin.

Legislature Passes Measure To Permit Students Reading Day Prior To Examinations

Complete Approval Accorded

By NEIL BASS

The student Legislature last night passed a resolution calling for the "establishment of a reading day prior to final examinations."

The one day break, if the administration gives it the go sign, will be taken from the period alloted to the actual taking of examinations.

The resolution, introduced by the Student Party, was run through without opposition.

The legislature also passed:

1) A bill giving the student body president power to appoint a committee to select a student government executive secretary, and;

2)A resolution making it mandatory for a legal authority to review all student government contracts of over $100 before they are approved.

"BLOW TO ROMANCE?"

"I am not trying to deal a death blow to romance," Jack Hudson (SP) said about a measure he wanted passed. The resolution in question concerned the lighting of a path from the nurse's dormitory to the University Library.

"I have heard rumor that some of the nurses didn't want it lighted," he continued. Hudson insisted, however, that the path should be illuminated for the safety of the nurses using it.

"Nurses should be discouraged from using the path," Jim Exum, University Party, said in opposition to the resolution. He brought out the point that the nurses were not supposed to use the path anyway.

In spite of a strong argument by Hudson that the nurses could travel in pairs for safety, if they used the path, and that those who were opposed to the lighting could detour from the regular lane of travel if they desired less light, the resolution was tabled temporarily.

Debate Tomorrow

RALIEGH, May 6 (AP) — The Senate today considered beginning debate on the 640 million dollar appropriations bill passed by the House yesterday. It later decided to carry the money measure over until tomorrow.

Mark Antony

Donald Treat, above, will play Mark Antony in the Carolina Playmakers outdoor production of Julius Caesar, which opens tonight for a three-day run. Treat, a graduate student in the Dept. of Dramatic Art, is assistant technical director of the Playmakers. Productions are slated for 8:30 each night. No seats will be reserved, and rained-out performances will be re-scheduled.

Purks Speaks On Degree Requirements

Dr. J. Harris Purks, UNS provost, this week told faculty members that one of the most important and respected responsibilities of the faculty is the establishment of requirements for degrees, which should not be left to students.

Addressing the weekly Faculty Club Luncheon, the University provost explained that persons are permitted to register at the University should be willing to become students, "which in turn, means that the student should be willing to study.

"Having made a move toward the restoration of study to its place in the sun, it seems to me that we are obligated to provide students with places where study is possible, and with dedicated teachers who will assist the student in the learning process," the educator added, "by exposition, by explanation, by appraisal, by the requirement of attempts to solve problems and, if necessary, by drill."

'Miss Modern Venus' Will Highlight Derby

The selection of "Miss Modern Venus" for 1955 will highlight the 11th annual Sigma Chi Derby to be held here this afternoon.

The beauty competition among some 30 coeds for the "Miss Venus" title will climax the afternoon celebration.

The yearly event, known as the "Battle of the Coeds," will begin with a parade at 2 p.m. The parade will form on East Franklin St. in front of Spencer Dormitory and will go through the business district and the campus.

The Derby will feature competition between representatives of campus women's groups, sororities, residence halls and the Nurses' Dormitory.

Heading Derby arrangements for sponsoring Sigma Chi fraternity are Hosea E. Wilson and Mickey Chamblee.

After the parade contestants will meet in Kenan Stadium for the Grand National Relay Race, a pie-throwing contest called "Hit the Geek," original skits, and a number of secret events, Chamblee said.

Trophies will be awarded to the winners of each event, as well as to the winning group.

The Chapel Hill Merchants Association has donated some 50 door prizes, which will be distributed during the Derby program.

Ex-Student Arrested On Forgery Complaint

By JACKIE GOODMAN

Charles Herman Caudle, ex-freshman in the School of Pharmacy here, was put under arrest by the Chapel Hill Police yesterday and has been charged with forgery.

According to Police Captani W. D. Blake, Caudle, who is from Peachland, has been charged with cashing four forged checks at the Bank of Chapel Hill. The checks were made out in the amounts of $25, $35, $45 and $50, said Captain Blake. He added that Caudle attempted to cash another forged check for $50 Wednesday morning.

The police captain said Caudle had signed ficticious names to the checks and had given local addresses, such as Cobb and Mangum. He said a preliminary investigation has not turned up any checks forged by Caudle on other banks here.

Caudle was released yesterday on $300 bail, according to Blake. He said bond was posted by two brothers of the student.

Caudle will probably be tried Tuesday in Recorder's Court, according to Blake.

APO Initiates 13

Alpha Phi Omega, Carolina's service fraternity, yesterday announced 13 new pledges.

Spring pledges, according to APO President John Molter, are John Bridger, Thomas Bolkan, Clayton Eubanks Jr., Franklin Farmer, Thomas Gable.

Fred Ginn, Ulyss Daughtridge, Milton Barden, Richard Phillips, William Jones.

Billy Oakley, George Bryce and Ben Williams.

Eight of the pledges are freshmen, said Molter, two are sophomores and three are juniors.

Stogner Elected Chief

Miss Martha Carolyn Stogner junior from Charlotte, has been elected president of the Independent Women's Council for the year 1955-56.

All women students who are not affiliated with a sorority are members of the Independent Women's Council. Purpose of the organization is to promote active dormitory programs, stimulate interest in extra-curricular activities, further scholarship and promote cooperation between independent and sorority women.

Other officers of the council are Miss Ellen Brauer, vice-president, and Miss Barbara Bright, secretary-treasurer, both of Chapel Hill.

In addition to being vice-president of the Independent Women's Council this year, Miss Stogner was active in YWCA work, Future Teachers of America, and was a majorette for the University Band. She is one of six members of the Women's Leadership Council, and will be responsible for planning and directing one day of orientation for women students next fall.

Miss Stogner is a junior in the School of Education, having transfeered from Charlotte College where she held several offices and made the dean's list for six quarters.

McELROY AND CURTIS:

Di, Phi Elect Leaders For Fall

Larry McElroy, junior from Marshall, has been elected president of the Dialectic Senate for the fall term.

McElroy is a member of the Amphoterothen Society, Young Democrats Club, is Student Party floorleader and parliamentarian of the student Legislature.

Other officers elected include David Mundy, who will replace McElroy as president pro-tem; Freeman Grant, critic; Jim Holmes, clerk; Bill Self, treasurer.

Scotty Hester, sergeant-at-arms; Bev Webb, retiring president, was elected chaplain; Stan Shaw, representative on Debate Council; David Reid, Carolina Forum representative.

The older of the two debating societies on the campus, the Dialectic Senate meets on Tuesday nights at 8 p.m. on the top floor of New West to debate topics of political, philosophical or academic nature. Spokesmen have welcomed students to attend and participate and to join the Senate.

PRESIDENT McELROY
. . . of the Di

John Curtis, rising senior from Bessemer City, has been elected speaker of the Philanthropic Society for the 1955 Fall Assembly.

Curtis, who succeeds Frank Warren, was elected over Harold Downing. Downing was elected speaker pro-tem.

"The Phi can be a great organization," said Speaker Curtis. "It has a colorful past, and with cooperation, the future can be even more colorful." Curtis stressed membership and improved publicity as needed improvements.

Lawrence Matthews, past speaker pro-tem, was elected parliamentarian by acclamation.

Other new officers include Charles Katzenstein, critic; Frank Warren, Carolina Forum representative; Miss Pat McBane, clerk; Roy Taylor, member of Debate Council; Roy Wood, sergeant-at-arms, and J. B. Clay, treasurer.

The Phi meets on Tuesday nights at 8 p.m. on fourth floor of New East. Members yesterday said prospective members and guests "are encouraged to attend."

As J. A. C. Bows Out— Quarterly Dresses Out

Our newest Associate Editor, J. A. C. Dunn, has lately been like a new poppa with two baby carriages to roll. Between his "Carolina Front" which you read to the immediate right every day and his Carolina Quarterly he has paced many a worried footstep up and down the second floor corridor of G. M.

Now one of his jobs—the Quarterly editorship—has come to its climax and he can roll that carriage into other hands.

We think he's done an extraordinary job of rolling the Quarterly carriage this year. Raggedy-Ann (financial-wise) of campus publications, the Quarterly has nonetheless come of readable and serviceable age under his tenure as chief.

The spring Quarterly dresses out on campus newsstands today, priced at 45 cents and embracing between its cover some fine reading matter.

It would be a proper tribute to ex-Editor Dunn, as he parks the 54-55 carriage and quits the anxious strolls to the other end of the hall, for students to swell the magazine's treasury with sale money. Buy one; the benefit will be yours.

'My Old Kentucky Home' In Georgia

Southern nationalism died quietly one afternoon 90 years ago in Appomattox, Virginia, according to historians and bitter experience. But the ghost of this region's lost cause flared forth in Georgia this week at a Board of Education meeting.

Georgia educators banned three textbooks for not being in accord with the "Southern way of life." In this day of an urban and industrial South, it's not altogether just what the "Southern way of life" is. But a look at the reasons given for banning the three books clearly shows what it is not.

A sociology book, "Our Changing Social Order," was charged with teaching that white people are unfair to Negroes in elections, in school facilities, and in recreation facilities. The book tries to "condition" white children into the idea that color doesn't matter, charged the educators.

"America, Land of Freedom," a history book, was shoved off the school lists because one Board of Education member said it didn't give the South sufficient credit in the Revolutionary War.

And a song book, "Together We Sing," was branded objectionable because the wording of Stephen Foster's songs, "My Old Kentucky Home" and "Old Folks at Home" said "brothers," instead of "darkies."

The banning of these three books is absurd and contrary to the concepts of democratic government, which allow for dissent and disagreement—even in education.

Perhaps even more regrettable is the fact that the Georgia educators dont realize just what constitutes the "Southern way of life" today. This is the region of atomic plants, booming cities, and economic opportunity—not plantations, the Ku Klux Klan, and white supremacy.

The sociology book that teaches youths that color doesn't matter is to be commended. Color doesn't matter, and it's time Southern minds were conditioned to it. Rewriting history to glorify the South's part in the Revolutionary War won't alter facts. And censoring folk songs—Southern songs, at that—is downright funny.

Next thing we expect to hear from Georgia is that Carl Sandburg's "Abraham Lincoln," was banned because it portrays the South as losing the Civil War.

Reid, Red, Red Rope & Acres Of Buffaloes

The Buffalo students didn't come out for the Lord Mayor's speech and he had to talk to a bare 100 or so. Drastic measures are in order, and we picked up a suggestion from our Greek history professor recently.

Athenians, it seems, were as dilatory about assembly meetings as Carolina students about Carolina Forum speeches. So on assembly days, herders stretched a red-dyed rope across the Forum and drove the citizens before it into the meeting place. Everyone went, for red dye on your clothing meant you could be fined.

There we have it, then: A prospective fine, red dye, and a stout rope with Tom Lambeth at one end and Attorney General Reid at the other would do the trick. The solution is simple: we lay it before the Legislature for their approval.

'I Do Solemnly Swear Not To Serve To . . .'

J. A. C. Dunn

NEWS ITEM: MADISON, Wis., April 28 — Assemblyman Eugene Toepel introduced a bill in the Wisconsin Legislature to require tavern keepers to sign a loyalty oath. Toepel said that in most 'cloak and dagger' stories, subversive elements gathered in taverns."

We can see it now, truly we can. It is a dark rainy night, the wind blowing, the wet streets beginning to freeze. On a narrow winding back street (one way) the door of Erdmans' Liquor Niche opens to admit four men, a wet cat and a quart and a half of rain. The four men go to a corner booth, remove their gloshes (but not their turned-up collars), sit downand order a bottle of Old Outcast. The waiter brings it to them, they pour out a shot apiece, glance quickly and furtively over their collective shoulders, raise their shot glasses a sly two inches off the table, clink them gently and mumble "To the proletariat; may they eventually be downtrodden!" They chug the shots, check their turned up collars, refill the shots, lean closer together and begin discussing the arsenal in the basement of the Town Hall. Their voices are low, subversive.

"A little bit louder," says one of them. "Don't be so subversive." They increase the volume of the voices a bit, and talk on. If we listen we will hear of hand grenades, dynamite, stillettos . . . But we are red-blooded. We don't listen to such things.

Soon, however, Mr. Erdmann, the proprietor of the Liquor Niche, comes over to their table.

"I'm sorry boys," he whines, cringing and rubbing his hands together, "but you'll either have to talk about something patriotic like Democracy or common like baseball or go somewhere else. You look too much like a subversive element. I have my loyalty oath, you know." He points to a printed loyalty oath posted behind the bar next to his license and his "C" rating card.

"Aaaaah, c'mon Erdy, have a drink; cool off," says one of the coat collars, and all the men look very hard at Erdy with dark, inscrutable eyes full of fanaticism and suffering. Erdy wilts a bit.

"Now, boys, I have my loyalty oath. I can't serve to subver—"

"Erdy. Sit Down. Have a drink," says one of the men evenly.

"But, boys, my loy—"

"I said, Sit down, Erdy."

"Well, just one, boys,

Erdy has seven drinks, and if we listen to the conversation after his fourth, we will hear talk of rifles, jellied gasoline, white phosphorus . . . When the Liquor Niche closes three quarters of an hour after the legal closing time, there are five little groups sitting around the room with collars turned up, subversively toasting the proletariat and plotting world overthrow. Our group is the last to leave, but it is five strong now. Erdy has his coat collar well turned up. He is mulling over plans for the sabotage of the municipal fire engines . . .

WE OVERHEARD AN interesting conversation in Lenoir on Saturday. "I went to that Sound and Fury thing last night," said one student to another over the orange juice, "and there was a fella named Lewis Brumfield in it. He was the ticket agent or something. He sure can imitate a southerner pretty good."

Steady there, friend, steady. The Eyes of Dixie are upon you. Mr. Brumfield comes from Yadkinville; the accent is genuine. Yes, genuine.

'Don't Peek—It's Sort Of A Surprise'

MATTER OF FACT:

Follies In Japan On The Mend

Joseph Alsop

According to report, President Eisenhower and the National Security Council have recently been re-examining the fundamentals of the Japanese-American relationship. The re-examination was overdue, in view of the President's official classification of Japan as "the bastion of American defense in the Pacific."

Under the new policy line laid down by the N.S.C., the more glaring follies of our dealings with the Japanese since the signature of the peace treaty are apparently to be corrected.

Yet our highest policy makers still began their work by writing down, as assumption number one, that the Japanese-American alliance could in effect be taken for granted for an indefinite term of years. The American representatives here, who are in daily contact with the hard, on-the-spot facts, protested sharply that taking Japan for granted was profoundly unwise.

Even so, the complacency and lack of political realism in present day Washington is such that the National Security Council's first assumption has only been diluted rather than corrected. It cannot have been corrected for a very simple reason. America's "island chain" strategy in the Pacific is still squarely based on the Japanese alliance. And this implied taking Japan for granted, even although the National Security Council may state the position somewhat more cautiously.

On any realistic assessment, therefore, the whole American defense system in the Pacific must now be regarded as in peril. Our strategy is threatened, not directly in Japan proper, or even in the Formosa Strait, but indirectly in Southeast Asia. Unless the Communist advance in Southeast Asia can somehow be halted, we are probably due to wake up one day to the unpleasant discovery that Tokyo depends on Saigon.

This danger was clearly recognized by the National Security Council itself in the early stages of the Dienbienphu crisis last year. For a while, it was the official doctrine that a Viet Minh victory in Indo-China could not be permitted because such a victory would open the gates of South Asia to the Communists, and because the loss of South Asia would in turn involve Japan and India.

This "domino chain" theory was later abandoned, and even scornfully condemned, when the Eisenhower administration found it more comfortable and politically expedient to duck the grim challenge of Dienbienphu. Unfortunately, however, there is every reason to believe that the domino chain theory is still correct, even although it is now officially frowned upon in Washington.

The main reason is only too obvious. Japan must trade to live. Every Japanese businessman, without exception, regards Southeast Asia as Japan's most promising future trading area. Japan must almost import huge annual tonnages of rice to live. And two Southeast Asian countries. Thailand and Burma, are currently supplying Japan with just under 600,000 tons of rice a year, or rather more than half of Japan's whole annual rice import.

In these circumstances, what happens in Southeast Asia has life and death significance for the Japanese people. As yet, to be sure, the ugly process of decay that presently centers in Saigon has hardly been noticed by the great majority of Japanese.

People here have been lulled, like people in America, by the bold promises of SEATO. Then too, the Japanese are intensely preoccupied with their own internal problems, and since the war they have had poor means of learning about the outside world. And above all, the Japanese conviction that America is a sure winner in any world struggle has not yet been really shaken.

But this conviction, born of Japan's own defeat by America, will surely not survive a shattering series of free world defeats in the area of Asia that is most important to Japan. In Japanese eyes, America and the other Western nations will look like hopeless losers, not sure winners, if the Communist advance in Southeast Asia continues unchecked. And to the tremendous economic impact of the extension of Communist control into Japan's most vital trading area and rice source.

If Japan is exposed to this double seismic shock, the already strong ferment of anti-Americanism here can be expected to become uncontrollable. Being passionately independent (which is the reason they are now anti-American) the Japanese are not likely to make a complete reversal of alliances. There is no visible likelihood that they will actually join the Communist bloc.

But if Southeast Asia is lost to communism, there is the greatest possible likelihood that the Japanese will abandon the American alliance and move into a strictly neutral position. And that in itself will mean the utter collapse of the current official American defense plan in the Pacific, plus some other unpleasant things too.

If Japan chooses neutralism, American forces will obviously have to be withdrawn from these islands unless President Eisenhower wishes to try to hold our bases here by naked force. Thus the island chain will be decisively brokn.

In short the central fact that the Washington policy makers now ought to be facing, is the fact that Asia is a seamless web. If the web is too badly torn anywhere, it will unravel everywhere. And it is tearing now.

Quote Unquote: More Opinion On Matusow

Editors:

Louis Budenz, on page 19 of The American Mercury for May, states that the Matusow turnabout was the second stage in a Communist Party program to destroy American internal security. The program, says Budenz, includes "an assault on the 'Gestapo-like activities' of the Federal Bureau of Investigation" and an "attack on the credibility of the Government witnesses on a big scale."

Compare your editorial of April 26 in which you attack the "eavesdropping" methods of the FBI and say of the Matusow incident, "A failure of that proportion should suffice to put us on the alert about the reliability of paid witnesses."

Perhaps, still following the Communist line, you will scoff at the testimony of Budenz. Your editorial indicates that you are suspicious of former Communists — and of the American people — but not, apparently, of the Communist Party.

John W. McDonald

(The American Mercury, in our estimation, has fallen lower into the depths than old Satan ever dared fall since the days when even so respectable a journalist as Gerald W. Johnson wrote for it and H. L. Mencken edited it with acid-dipped pen. We set about as much store by an American Mercury opinion — especially one set forth by notorious wandering minstrel Louis Budenz — as we do by walking snakes. Our trust in Harvey Matusow remains nil; and for all we know he may indeed remain a puppet of the Communist Party. But our view of paid witnesses is still tinged with distrust and suspicion and we suggest, for what we consider more reliable reading on the subject, Richard H. Rovere's "The Kept Witnesses" in the May Harper's. Mr. Rovere shows, with specific references and quotations, that the memories of many government informers function in direct proportion to their pay and the needs of governmental prosecuting attorneys. — Editors.)

MOTHER'S DAY: Sunday is Mom's Day, and in many parts mothers will receive (on Saturday or Monday) little bundles of surprises and happiness from their offspring at the University. And, they will tear into these letters and read something like:

"Dear Mom . . . This is just a little note tonight to wish a very happy Mother's Day to the world's best mother. I would like to be with you on YOUR day but, as you know, there is a lot of studying to do on the weekends at Carolina (and then this is a German weekend).

"But, dear Mother, I will be thinking about you, as I have been, doing so much lately. In fact, I was thinking about you as I walked down town the other day (wishing that you would send me some money to get my car fixed) when I passed this window that had the most beautiful handkerchief in it. I wanted to buy it and send it to you, but you know that all of my spare money is going into more books for study (and then this is a German weekend).

"Even though I have nothing expensive to give to you on your day, still I send all my love to the best mother ever. And Mother dear, if you have a few extra bucks, I sure could use them (German weekend, you know)."

THEY SAY ITS TRUE: Two boys and a girl were eating supper in Lenoir Hall. It had been a quite supper until one of the boys turned to the girl and questioned: "Do you love Sam's shirt?" Needless to say, Sam strangled on a sip of coffee, and the girl's mouth dropped open so wide, that her chin almost hit the potatoes.

After the girl had finally recovered from the shock of the question, she asked one of her own, namely: "What on earth are you talking about?"

"Well when Sam came in after dating you the other night he had lipstick all over the front of his shirt, and I just wanted to know if you loved his shirt," the puzzled member of the crowd answered.

The girl shot a quick glance at Sam, who was busy looking at the nice ceiling. She hummed and hawed a few seconds, and then, as if she had just thought of the answer, she replied: "Oh the lipstick on his shirt. Ha. Well you see we went dancing the other night, and I always put my head on my date's shoulder when I dance, thus lipstick on his shirt."

She smiled and started to eat again, the third person seemed a little doubtful over the answer he had received, but Sam just smiled and said "that's right."

FOLLOW UP: Several nights later the puzzled one was even more puzzled when Sam walked in with lipstick on the back of his shirt.

FUZZY PUP: Once upon a one time . . .

There were two couples . . . and like most couples, these two were each composed of a boy and a girl. But there was a difference: both of the male members of the two couples were Carolina gentlemen, and the fairer halves were (if you will pardon the expression) Duke coeds. Now this arrangement wasn't at all as bad as it seems, because at times the Dukesters were real nice (like Carolina coeds) and most of the time the relations were good, except, of course, during the Carolina-Duke football game and the like. Well, as the story goes, these two couples enjoyed themselves for a while, but then something happened, and . . .

There was one couple . . . and like most couples who go together for a long time, they were very, very happy and looked forward to many, many years together, even if they did occasionally disagree on issues like which is the best school in the state. Well, as is expected, time did pass. Relations between the two — a Carolina Gentleman and a Duke coed — improved, but then the unexpected happened, and . . .

There were no couples . . . but really there were four very happy couples (two at Carolina and two at Duke) . . . and everybody lived happy ever after.

AFTER READING Heart of Darkness for the second time I still wondered exactly what this Conrad fellow was getting at. One thing I did figure out though was how Kurtz got the ivory he was shipping out of his station on the river. Just in case you might be considering an elephant hunt in Africa to pass your summer away, you might jot this down.

A new method of catching elephants. Requirements: a piece of paper, a milk bottle, a pair of tweezers, and binoculars. Go to the elephant country, find a pool of water and write on the paper: "For Elfar's." When the first elephants come up to drink, they will see their name spelled wrong and start laughing. When the other elephants hear them laughing they will come up to see what they are laughing about.

At that point you look at the elephants through the wrong end of the binoculars. The elephants look so small that you pick them up with tweezers and put them in the milk bottle.

IT'S a funny thing how people are always labeling others as snobs. Fraternity snobs, dorm snobs, instructor snobs, etc. Well, I have a friend (I did, at least) who is the snob of all snobs. What a character.

He is a politically-conscious snob. He worries. He worries about famines in China. He worries about hydrogen bombs. He thinks the world is going to hell. He is right. Pass the gin bottle, please.

IT SEEMS that the University is becoming a hot bed of commerce. Re: The ice-cream vendor on the corner in front of Woollen gym. Now, this may just be a sign of Spring but it may be that ice-cream companies have found a new market for their goo. The next thing we know some son of Pecunius will plant a ferris wheel in Y-Court and start selling cotton candy and balloons on the steps of South Building.

The ironical twist to the whole situation is that last Spring the Trustees, Administration, or what have you, took the bottle out of the students' hands and this year someone replaces that bottle with a fudgecicle.

Revolt, the reputation of the University is at stake. Don't be an accessory to the transforming of Carolina into a bubble-gum chewing, lollypop sucking kindergarten. Start a crusade for the orgies of yore.

Oh well, the object is to drain, drain, drain, the students of their very last thin little dime.

CONFUSION WILL always reign at Carolina. Who is who around here. Nobody knows. Everyone dresses exactly alike. In the fall it's cords, in the winter it's charcoals, in the spring it's cords again.

Jim Kirtland, writing in the Eastern Illinois State News, says, "What you need is some inventiveness in your apparel.

"Don't be imprisoned by the traditional conservatism of clothing. Brighten up your appearance with one single earring, or a cavalry saber, or even still, a gold derby. However, guard against gaudiness. If for instance, you are wearing a gold derby, don't wear a cavalry saber, too. Wear a dagger instead or, for informal occasions, a bowie knife."

Speaking of bowie knives, how many of you know what a great debt this country, indeed the whole world—owes to the West Point Class of 1836? You all know of course that Colonel James Bowie of the class of '36 invented the bowie knife, but do you know of the many other important contributions to cutlery, for example, that of Colonel Henry Clasp who invented the clasp knife? Or that Colonel Harry Jack invented the jack knife? Or that Colonel Harry Putty invented the putty knife? Or that Colonel Harry Cannon invented the towel? Amazing, isn't it?

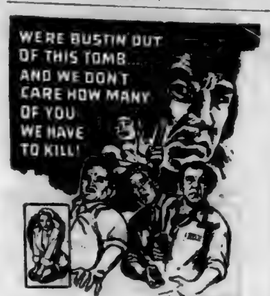
SUNDAY, BEING Mother's Day and all that, reminds me of J. A. C. Dunn's column of May 3. Dunn told about the abundance of unwed mothers in Sweden and explained just how they went about getting that way.

The United States, being the philanthropic soul that it is, should do something about this situation. Just think of all those poor mothers who will not have husbands to give them a small gift on Sunday to show their appreciation for their labors.



The U. S. sends CARE packages to Europe. Why not send packages to Sweden's mothers and label them "TRYST."

THIS IS the last word you will hear from me on the student block fee raise. Let's vote it in. Just five grubby old dollars. Of course you could take a date to the Saddle Club with that much money, but you might spoil your date. When your date finds out that you can't afford to do that sort of thing every weekend you might end up riding single saddle.

Put your money on a winner—yourself. Vote "Yes" for the fee raise. I predict that if the fee raise is voted in there will be so many kinds of student entertainment around here you won't even think about going somewhere else and getting soaked for a month's allowance.

Relay Stars Here Sat.

Two recent winners in Philadelphia's Penn relays will be on opposing teams when the Carolina and Duke track teams clash here Saturday.

Jim Beatty, top UNC man who upset the defending champion in the two-mile run, and Joel Shankle, Duke's heralded one-man track team who took top honors in Penn's 120-yard high hurdles and broad jump for the second straight year, are the two champions.

Roger Morris became the best shot putter the state of North Carolina has ever had when he tossed the shot 52 feet 2¾ inches in the Penn Relays while performing for UNC last week. His heave was only good for a fifth place, although it cracked his own UNC record by a foot.

The Duke-UNC meet Saturday will be the most important dual meet in the ACC this season. It will also determine whether or not North Carolina's Tar Heels can go undefeated this season. They have won their other six dual meets and this is the last run before the ACC meet here May 13-14.

A freshman meet to be run simultaneously with the varsity meet which will feature Duke's flash Dave Sime and the Tar Babies Ronnie Austell and Ben Williams among others, will, without a doubt, be the fastest meet ever run between the freshman teams of the two schools.

Gravitte Paces UNC Stickmen

Carolina's baseballers head down the homestretch in the ACC race this weekend as they take a two-day trip into South Carolina for games at USC and Clemson.

The Tar Heels, winners in three of their last four games, are currently holding fifth place in the ACC ahead of sixth place Clemson and seventh place Duke. Clemson plays Virginia Friday while the Tar Heels meet USC and Saturday's game at Clemson could develop into a battle for fourth or fifth place.

Following the trip the Tar Heels have only three games remaining on their regular season schedule, one with N. C. State at Raleigh and games with UVA and Duke here.

Connie Gravitte continues to lead the Tar Heels at the plate with a .379 mark. Tom Zachary is second with .281 and Dick Hudson of three hits in four trips against moved into third at .280 by virtue Duke Wednesday.

Lacrosse Club After 3rd Win

By AI KORCHUN

The UNC varsity lacrosse team will be seeking its third victory of the season and its second consecutive win when it battles a visiting Washington College team from Bethesda, Md. today on Navy Field at 3:30.

The Tar Heels, who have beaten Duke in Durham for both of their victories, will be out to score their first win of the season on their home grounds, Navy Field, when they take the field against the visitors. In an effort to match the reportedly strong offensive attack of the Marylanders, Carolina coach Art Greenbaum will start midfielder Dick Baker at an attack position, and will move Joe Converse up from second midfield to first. The lanky Baker, who will replace injured regular attackman Wilbur Jones, has looked exceptionally well at playing in the "crease" in practice.

Joyner Grabs Dorm Title

Paced by the four hit pitching of Joe McGinn and the lusty hitting of Bill Mathews, Joyner dormitory captured the Intramural Dorm softball championship yesterday by whipping the Dental School 13-1.

McGinn, Joyner ace, limited the Dental School club to four hits over the route. Mathews was responsible for eight runs as he slammed two grand-slam home runs.

An Open Letter To My Pop

Dear Pop:

I hope you won't get all excited about this little favor I'm going to ask you.

You see, on account of I haven't gone to school yet, people have a little trouble reading what I write, and besides, even if I had a nice big crayon and a piece of paper, I'm just a bit short of change right now, and couldn't afford a stamp.

What I mean is, Mother is a pretty good scout, and I'd like to send her a card for Mother's Day. So would you mind please just signing my name for me, and lending me a stamp? Oh yes, and paying for the card too, like a good egg?

Your Offspring.

Miss Rainwater 'Modern Venus'

By LOIS OWEN

Miss JiJi Rainwater of Alpha Gamma Delta Sorority was proclaimed Miss Modern Venus at the annual Sigma Chi Derby yesterday afternoon.

Derby winner was Chi Omega, dethroning Delta Delta Delta, champion for the past two years.

MISS JIJI RAINWATER
. . . "Miss Modern Venus"

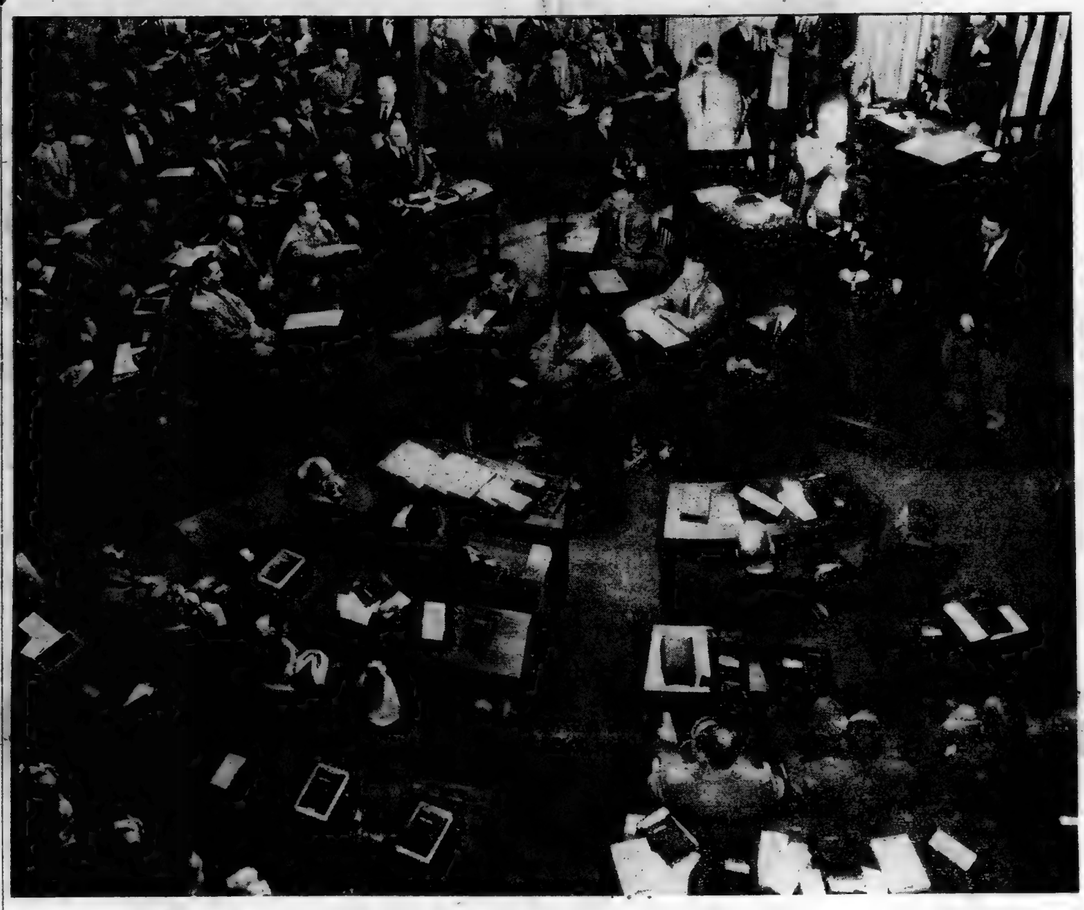
Yesterday's parade formed in front of the Planetarium and proceeded up Franklin St., down Raleigh Road, and around to Kenan Stadium.

A series of stalls was arranged on the field for the teams to sit in. Crepe paper streamers in each group's color decorated the poles of the stalls.

Mike Hendren, master of ceremonies began calling out the numbers of the lucky tickets. There were well over 50 door-prizes: Steak dinners at Brady's, books from the Intimate, all the beer six people could drink in one night at the Patio.

A Duke student won a case of beer from the Goody Shop.

Micky Chamblee and Hosea Wilson arranged the starters for the first race, the Grand National relay race. There was carrying of marbles, drinking of Cokes on the run and blowing bubble gum involved. Chi Omega won.



The second event was the Race to the Flesh, won by Miss Martha Stagner for Independent Coeds.

Hit the Geek, the third event, featured throwing chocolate cream pies in someone's face. Miss Carol Taylor won this one for the Tri Deltas.

The fourth event, previously kept secret, turned out to be a chase after a greased pig. Miss Laura Ann Travis managed to seize the slippery pig by his hind legs and dragged him over to the judges stand, winning the event for the Chi O.

The Pi Phis won the skit competition with their "S. S. Sigmund Freud" cardboard battleship, many sailors, and six natives in sarongs.

The Chi Os were judged to have the best costumes, with their deck of cards theme in red and white.

Part Of The North Carolina General Assembly
. . . yesterday voted into law cut in University budget

Affects Students Now In School

By CHUCK HAUSER
FROM ASSOCIATED PRESS DISPATCHES

RALEIGH, May 6—University of North Carolina students who are residents of other states will have to pay an increased tuition bill next fall, the General Assembly decided today.

Tuition raises will amount to $140 per year for out-of-staters, except those on scholarships.

The raise will affect students now in school.

The tuition raise was not recommended by the Legislature. However, appropriations to the University were figured on a basis of increased tuition, so raise is almost a certainty.

Action came as the Senate today passed into law a 640 million dollar state appropriations bill for the next biennium, after an hour and 10 minutes of debate.

The House had approved the measure Wednesday, with only two hours of debate. However, the bill's speedy enactment followed three months of intensive work by the Joint Appropriations subcommittee.

In Senate debate today, only one amendment was offered to the budget bill. Sen. Ray Walton of Brunswick proposed to eliminate the entire $222,910 appropriation for the expenses of University of North Carolina's educational television station and the State Educational Radio and Television Commission.

The Senate resoundingly defeated the amendment, as the House had done with a similar motion two days before.

"I have found," Walton told the Senate, "that the State is in the water business the electricity business, and we run a railroad. And now we're in the television business, too.

"If we vote to support this television station," he continued, "we will be treading on the grounds of socialism. I don't mean North Carolina will become a socialistic

Facts & Figures On Budget

The State General Assembly this week, in passing the appropriations bill, raised the tuition fees of out-of-state students by $140 per year.

Out-of-state students here on scholarships—athletic or otherwise—will be exempted from the tuition raise.

Legislators scheduled the tuition raise to go into effect at the start of the next biennium, in July.

Consolidated University Educational Television Station WUNC-TV was granted one-half of the money it asked for.

The University Library budget was cut from $100,000 to $75,000.

North Carolina Memorial Hospital got $191,000 for next year and $230,000 for the year following.

President Gordon Gray of the Consolidated University has said "I hope it won't be necessary for the Legislature to raise any student fees," and has said he is "not in favor" of any increase in student tuition fees.

Against Policy

Action taken by the General Assembly yesterday raising out-of-state tuition by $140 per year was a contrary to policy formed by the University's Council on Student Affairs.

(The Council on Student Affairs is made up of members of South Building administration.)

The stand taken by the University administration was one of opposition to any raises in student fees.

The administration policy, given in a January report to Chancellor Robert House by the Council, stated that any increase in charges to students would make the University "more restricted to the privileged class."

"If at Chapel Hill we ever cease to be a university of all the people," said the report, "we will have forfeited one of the fundamental ideals of the University."

The report urged that a "line" be drawn and to "do everything possible to prevent increasing the expense of attending the University."

Visiting Publicists See UNC

Six foreign publicists whose job is interpereting U. S. foreign policy in their respective countries yesterday compteted a week-long visit to the UNC campus, where they observed various agencies and departments, and spoke before classes in journalism, political science and languages.

Currently on a three-month tour of the United States, where they are visiting industry, schools, libraries, museums and other facilities as a "cross-section" of American life under sponsorship of the U. S. State Department, the group came to Chapel Hill from Minnesota, where they spent several days with farm families.

Their next stop is Knoxville, Tenn., with possible side tours through the Great Smoky Mountains and to various cultural centers.

The six, all of whom hold key posts with the U. S. Information Service, are Miss Eve Lampen, assistant in the Finland Cultural Section, Helsinki; Dan Mikkelsen, senior Danish Press Officer, Copenhagen; Miss Adilia Mojica, administrative assitant, Tegucigalpa, Honduras;

Richard O'Farrell, chief of the Press Section, Madrid, Spain; Alfredo Ortiz, senior assistant, Press Section, Guatemala City, Guatemala, and Pedro Rodriguez, chief, Motion Picture Section, San Salvador, ElSalvador.

While in Chapel Hill they visited the Institute of Government, the Health Center, Communication Center, WUNC-TV, and attended various entertainment programs. For study of publicity procedures, they toured the Uni-

Student Solons Getting New Office Area

The new student government office in Graham Memorial has almost completed its beauty treatment, a visit showed yesterday.

Frosted walnut furniture has arrived. A long, combination conference-work table, with 10 matching chairs, has been installed in the room, along with a new desk for the executive secretary scheduled to arrive soon.

Jack Stevens, newly-elected student government vice-president, has a desk.

Walls are pale blue-green, floor is newly-polished and new Venetian blinds are at the windows.

Two steel office cabinets are expected soon, according to Graham Memorial officials.

Student Council Head

Robert B. (Pat) Patterson Jr., junior from Wilson, has been elected chairman of the Student Council, according to an announcement yesterday.

Miss Jane Howie, junior from Charlotte, was named clerk.

Conference On Faith In Education Begins

A two-day conference on "The Christian Faith in Higher Education" for faculty and administration of the colleges and universities of North Carolina will be held at Camp New Hope today and tomorrow.

Dr. Arnold Nash, professor of the history of religion, announced plans for the gathering, to be staged under the auspices of the Faculty Christian Fellowship of the National Council of Churches of Christ in America.

The planning committee for the event, composed of faculty members of various participating institutions, includes Warren Ashby, Woman's College; Waldo Beach and John Hallowell, Duke; Neal Hughley and Preston Williams, North Carolina College; John Graham, Donald Hayman and William Poteat, UNC, and Ralph McLain, Meredith College.

Kirtley Mather, emeritus professor of geology, Harvard University, will be one of the principal speakers at this morning's session. He is also chairman of the Faculty Christian Fellowship and former president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

John Coleman, former secretary of the World Student Christian Federation of Geneva, will be on Sunday's program. He is associate professor of mathematics at the University of Toronto, and author of The Task of the Christian in the University.

Werner Bohnstedt, professor of Modern European History at Michigan State College, will also be on today's program. He is vice-chairman of the Executive Committee of the Faculty Christian Fellowship.

Other UNC representatives who are working on the planning committee are Harry Smith, minister to Presbyterian students; Joel Savell, director, Wesley Foundation, and John Riebel, associate secretary, University YMCA.

Baha'i Leader To Talk Here

Allen Bayer McDaniel will speak at a public meeting sponsored by the Baha'i students here Monday at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall, announced Walter R. Wootten yesterday.

McDaniel has had a long and distinguished career as a professional engineer, teacher and author of many technical articles and books.

The Baha'i faith symbolized in the Baha'i House of Worship, though sometimes confused as an offshoot of Judaism, Islam or an Eastern sect, or a collection of the preferred teachings and principles from other religions, is in reality an independent world religion revealed by Baha'u'llah, (The Glory of God), Wootten said.

Warning Out For Drinkers At Germans

T. Kepley, President of the University Dance Committee, yesterday had a word of warning for students who like liquor with their music.

Kepley said he wanted to remind students that the Germans concert and dance this afternoon and tonight will be held under Dance Committee rules, which includes provisions that no drinking will be permitted during the events, no intoxicants may be carried into Memorial Hall or Woollen Gym, students who have been drinking previously will not be allowed in the concert and/or dance and students should conduct themselves "as ladies and gentlemen at all times."

Those who disobey the rules, said Kepley, "will be dealt with strictly, according to law, by the University Dance Committee Court.

"Strict action," Kepley said, "has been necessitated because of the inability, some students at the last Germans concert to assume these responsibilities."

Oratorical Contest

Competition for the annual Wilie P. Mangum Memorial Oratorical Award will be held May 16.

The Contest, sponsored by the the Di Senate and the Phi Assembly, is open to all seniors. Speeches should be original oratory of 10 minutes length on any subject, according to a Di spokesman. He said competitors are requested to register their name and speech title in Dean E. L. Mackie's office, 312 South Building, by May 14.

The contest will be held in Di Hall, third floor of New West, at 8 p.m.

Class Rings On Sale

Class rings will be on sale in Y-Court from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday, New Grail class ring Chairman Jim Exum said yesterday Monday will be the last chance to order class rings this year.

Hill House Will Be Sold

Hill House, tourist home on West Franklin St., will be closed soon, according to an announcement by band leader-owner John Scott Trotter.

Officials of the hotel gave as one reason for closing the widespread vandalism prevalent in that area.

Andy Kinghorn, who has managed the establishment for most of its years of operation, said although there had been no particular trouble since Easter, in the past windows had been smashed in adjoining cottages, white paint had been poured on the miniature jockey boy who stands in front of the building, stones and beer cans had been thrown at the building and an excess of vile and loud language had been used in the immediate area.

Kinghorn said Hill House would be closed by July 1. The building, he said, probably will be purchased by a University sorority.

Popular Bandleader Les Brown Plays Concert & Dance Today

Les Brown and his "Band of Reknown" will play here this afternoon and tonight in the University Germans Club's 1955 Spring Germans.

Brown, rated tops by Billboard, Orchestra World and Campus magazines and by national disc jockey polls, will play a 4 p.m. concert in Memorial Hall and a dance tonight at 9 o'clock in Woollen Gymnasium.

BANDLEADER BROWN
. . . plays concert, dance today

Officers of the Germans Club, which is an organization made of representatives from various UNC fraternities, are Skippy Roddey, president; Jake Rountree, vice-president, Bob Mason, treasurer, and Archer Croxton, secretary.

Bandmaster Brown is well-known as leader of the band on comedian Bob Hope's nationally-broadcast radio and television shows. In addition to the Hope shows, the band makes recordings, transcribing, movie studio calls and other TV appearances. Colleges, service camps and ballrooms are visited by the band. Brown and his aggregation have played the famous Hollywood Palladium for 16 engagements, the standing record at the ballroom.

Since 1940, Brown has maintained a band without a layoff, with the exception of three months in 1946, when the band reorganized to make Hollywood its home.

Have We Priced Away Leadership?

In sweeping in a $140 tuition raise for out-of-state students yesterday, the General Assembly struck what probably will be a staggering blow to student leadership.

Aside from the discriminatory nature of this raise for non-residents of North Carolina, it is particularly painful because of the number of valuable out-of-state students the raise will discourage from attending the University.

Just how valuable are Carolina's "immigrants" from other states?

A close look at some 40 top campus student organizations shows that about a third of the group leaders hail from other states. The past student body president comes from Virginia, the past Interdormitory Council president is from West Virginia, and Phi Beta Kappa president comes from Indiana.

The University and the state needs leadership, but the General Assembly unfortunately feels we need $140 extra from the source of some of the top student leaders. In the end, it may be the state that pays the toll of this raise—in lost leadership.

Our Name Is Not Duke

We have paint brushes. Duke has paint brushes. We both have paint brushes. Sometimes they are used for good things. Sometimes they are used for bad things.

Duke, you have been using your paint brushes for bad things.

We have a name for our school. You have a name for your school. Our name is "Carolina." Your name is "Duke." Our name is not Duke. Some of you at Duke must think our name is also Duke. You are wrong. We do not like for you to bring your paint brushes over here and make believe with big black letters that our name is Duke.

Some here may think Duke's name is "Carolina." They may make believe so in Durham. They are wrong too.

It is hard to say this so that you artists will understand. If you do not understand us maybe you understand the word "law." Law is something that when you break it you get put in jail or fined. The law will not put up with people who use paint brushes in the wrong way. It will not put up with people who think our name is Duke. It will not put up with people who think Duke's name is Carolina.

Do you get the connection?

Your Line May Be Very Busy

The scene is a cluttered room in the Senate Office Building, and the actors, members of the House Judiciary subcommittee, have deserted the stage to make room for a wiretap expert, who is demonstrating his equipment.

The senators are holding hearings on proposals to permit use of evidence gained from wiretapping in Federal Court cases, and the wiretap expert shows how easy it is to eavesdrop.

A telephone "bug" allows police to record telephone conversations when the receiver is lifted and general room conversation when the receiver is down. Another microphone can be hidden in wallpaper. And a third type receiver is the size of a pack of cigarets.

"It costs less than $10 to convert a home telephone, radio, television set, or phonograph into a wiretap device," says the expert. "In some respects, it's all rather frightening," the expert adds almost proudly.

And the senators sitting on the sidelines of this demonstration in electronic eavesdropping nod their heads in agreement—because it is "all rather frightening" to know that the government may probe into one's private life and conversation, without warrant or warning.

The Decline & Fall Of The Printed Word

J. A. C. Dunn

WE DISCOVERED at the end of last week that the Unicorn Bookshop had gone out of business. We talked to Mr. Helguera, the erstwhile proprietor of the Unicorn, who smiled sadly with a pair of rather engaging gold teeth, wrung his hands in an uncertain sort of way, and said "We thought a university town would support a bookshop . . . . Some people used to come up and look around . . . some people even ordered books, but they never came back to get them . . . You know, just never came back. . ."

The Unicorn, as most people know, was situated above Sutton's Drugstore. At the bottom of the iron stairs leading up the outside of the building to the second floor there still hung, when we looked on Friday, a wooden sign modestly announcing "The Unicorn Bookshop, Rare and Old Books Bought and Sold," with a picture of a rampant unicorn. We went up and looked, and the lettering was still on the door. ". . . Helgruea of Chapel Hill. Hours: 9 — 6:00." But the shade was down behind the glass in the door. We peeked through a crack in the shade, and the Unicorn looked very much as we remembered it — an old table in the middle of the floor, a sort of office on the far side of the room with a typewriter and filing boxes, a desk and loose papers, a couple of chairs; the window still looked grimily out over the roofs of the buildings facing Franklin Street, the walls were the old staid yellow, the shelves were still their rather juvenile shade of green. But the shelves were empty and the dust was gathering.

The Unicorn no longer had its accustomed atmosphere of gaunt learnedness tempered by the feeling of solidartiy which books give to a room. There only remained an aura of decline, of an attempt that failed, of a "go of it" that didn't go. We do not know who will take over those rooms next, but we hope they save the wooden sign at the bottom of the iron stairs.

ALL THE sentiment we seem to have churned out about the decline and fall of a bookshop calls to mind a conversation we had some months ago with a professor.

We admit to having had somewhat of an ulterior motive in going to see him, since the discussion took place just before our final exam in his course. But in between our daubs of soft soap and melted butter the professor looked moodily out the window of his office and said, with just a touch of "coms da ravolushon" in his tone of voice, that people weren't buying books anymore. He didn't know why; they just didn't seem to buy books anymore. "Publishers can't make any money except from the textbooks they publish," he said, "and this is why the prices in the Book-X are so high. Publishing is a hard business these days."

We agree with him. We have watched the people in the Intimate Bookshop. They come in, they look at the dollar table, they go and riffle through the cartoon books, they go back and glance along the fifty cent shelves, check rapidly over the paper back shelves, briefly investigate the shelves of new novels, perhaps while away a few minutes with the greeting cards, and then they leave — most of them, that is. Some people know what they want, and just go in and get it and go out. But most people don't want anything to keep, anything to save and savour; they only want a book that makes no demands, that they can enjoy quickly and incompletely with no lasting effects. The wonders of Science.

Phillips Russell—The Professor Who Teaches Them To See, Feel & Express

By Barbara Willard

"If you throw a stick at a bunch of dogs, a hound will always yelp, whether he's hit or not: that's a type, but it's the individual that comes out clear." Phillips Russell—at 70, facing mandatory retirement—leans back in his chair and speaks in a half-serious, half-amused manner to his creative writing class.

Since 1931, this professor with the bright blue eyes and youthful manner has been bringing out the individual in students at UNC. But this is his last year. His writing class in the School of Journalism is filled to capacity this semester with students trying to become a part of his "literary circle' before it's too late.

Charles Phillips Russell was "Charlie" Russell in 1900 when he entered UNC for a four-year stay as a student. He lived in what is now South Building. "When I see South, I don't see offices of the administration," he says, "I see boys screaming out the window and remember how I used to have to hide the rope to the victory bell to ever get any sleep."

While at the University, he was one of the first editors of The Daily Tar Heel and a charter member of the Golden Fleece.

'BE SPECIFIC'

He was born in Rockingham, down in Richmond County on August 5, 1884. His mother, "Miss Lucy," now 94, still writes a regular column for the Rockingham Post-Dispatch. It's a folksy column about homey, everyday things. A recent one was "Sitting on the Front Porch and Watching People Go By." Like his mother, Mr. Russell's rule for writers is "Be simple; be specific. If you've got a story to tell about a bear, bring on the bear. Don't describe the mountain first."

Leaving UNC in 1904, he worked his way to Europe on a ship. When he reached the continent, he had $10. "It was easy," he says, "once we got to Europe."

'AN EDUCATED MAN'

On returning to the United States, his career as a newspaperman, biographer, novelist, poet, playwright and teacher really began. He worked for The Charlotte Observer, the now defunct New York Press, The Philadelphia Ledger and others. The Ledger sent him to London, where he later became associated with the London Daily Express, Lord Beaverbrook's paper.

He stayed in Europe four and one-half years, meanwhile doing research for his best-selling biography, Benjamin Franklin, The First Civilized American. It was published in 1926, the year after his return to New York.

While in England, he toured with Jack Dempsey. The World Champion called him "professor" and is quoted as often telling friends, "Ask my friend Russell here; he's an educated man."

'BEFORE UNC'

In New York, he began to call himself Phillips Russell because people were always confusing him with a writer with a similar name, Charles Edward Russell.

His career is chock full and is far from the end even yet. Seven non-fiction works, one novel, two volumes of poetry, one play, and articles and short stories published on both sides of the Atlantic go on his record. He travelled across Mexico on mule to get material for one book. He's interviewed New York society dowagers, big-time racketers, axe-murderers, philanthropists, religious cult leaders and prize fighters.

He is a master of reporting and has been reporter, copy-reader, rewrite man, assistant literary editor and you-name-it on paper staffs. He spent 15 years in New York journalism, wrote for the McClure syndicate and did free-lance work. All this he did before coming to UNC, as a member of the faculty.

'NEED HELP, NOT PRIZES'

Dr. Frank Graham invited his fellow-alumnus to join the University faculty when Mr. Russell was vacationing in Chapel Hill in the late 1920's. He started teaching in the English Department in 1931, switching to journalism in 1936, where he has remained. "Nobody ever said 'you're through' so I've been here ever since," he says.

He came to teach the Carolina student the "difference between climax and index." It was not long before the class became so popular that its number had to be restricted. Out of his classes have come writers such as Robert Ruark, Noel Houston and Foster Fitz-Simons. The Atlantic in a recent year named the class among the top four of its kind.

"The class is not designed to help students break into The Saturday Evening Post on their first attempt. It is designed to give them insight, an eye for details, that they lacked before," he says. "A college undergraduate needs help and advice instead of prizes."

'SCARES STUDENTS'

He is an erect and jaunty, but quiet and mild-mannered man who comes just under six feet. The heavy grey eyebrows and grey moustache often scare new-comers half to death. They give him the appearance of a formidable professor with no time for his students—not so.

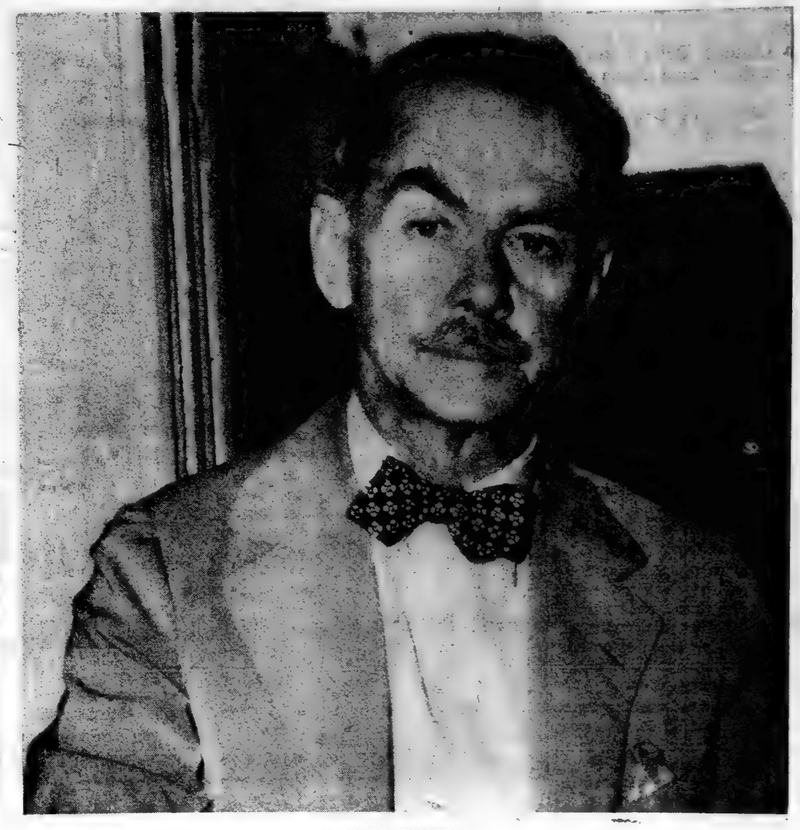
"The salient thing about college writers of today is that young people are sad," he says. "Youth is just essentially a sad time of life." He is always willing to help in whatever way he can, and always with blunt but just criticism of manuscripts submitted for his comment.

He explodes the cliche that "those who cannot do tell others how."

Mr. Russell has a son, Leon, by a former marriage, and two daughters, Claire, a UNC senior, and Avery, who attends a prep school in Vermont. Leon has four children, one named Charles Phillips Russell, II.

NO IVORY TOWER WRITING

Mr. Russell often tells his classes, "You don't learn to play the piano by reading books on the theory of music. You don't learn to write from a professor. You learn from a janitor or the man raking leaves."



To emphasize the point he stresses advice once given by a managing editor who said, "Russell, when you write, don't write for the professor; write for the damned fool and then you'll include him too."

His daughter Claire recollects times when she was playing the radio, her sister Avery playing the piano and her mother busy at some other work, "and daddy would be sitting right in the middle of all the turmoil writing away on a pack of Blue Horse notebook paper on his knee," Claire says, "and he writes everything out in long hand."

He warns his classes to beware of Ivory Tower writing, and he has none of it himself. "You don't have to put yourself in a hollow stump or an Ivory Tower to write; you have to listen to people and watch what they do. That's when character comes to life."

'AN OUTDOOR MAN'

O. J. "Skipper" Coffin, journalism professor says, "Phillips Russell fancies himself an outdoor man."

PHILLIPS RUSSELL
He always brings on the bear . . .

For years, Mr. Russell wrote a regular column in the Raleigh News and Observer, "Carolina Calendar," commenting on the changing events of the year and seasons.

Now, as in years past, his writing class is holding its final sessions on the lawn in front of Bynum Hall.

'A ROCKING-CHAIR FARMER'

Last year Mr. Russell became editor of the Chapel Hill News Leader. With his retirement approaching, he plans to continue with this paper. It's a good thing he's trained himself to write anywhere under any conditions because he says, "The News Leader is in a garage where all the noises in the world come in. I'm afraid if I had to have quiet to work, I'd never do any."

He does have one retreat from his busy life—his farm. Mr. Russell has owned several farms over the years. The one he has now is a 155-acre farm, six and one-half miles northwest of Chapel Hill in Orange County. "I slip out there on Sunday mornings some time and get in a little work on my books." Although he lives in town he tries to get out to the farm two or three times a week.

"I'm seeing what it takes to become a rocking chair farmer," he says. "I've reduced my crops to cattle and geese; they take care of themselves."

He is trying to produce a hybrid form of cattle that will withstand southern summer heat, by crossing the Black Angus with the Indian Brahmin. "I have been working at it for three years, and I have my first calf.' This animal will eat weeds as well as grass.

As for the geese, he says, "All I have to do is just turn them loose." This retreat of his is designed to "take the curse off farming, although it also gives me a chance to use my muscles, if I have any, as well as my brains."

WILL FINISH BOOKS

"I have no definite plans for the future. I've got two or three books to finish, and my experiments on the farm to look after, as well as The News Leader.

For some time, Mr. Russell has been collecting material for a biography of Lord Cornwallis. "No one has ever done a book on him, and he was largely responsible for the turning point of the Revolutionary War in a battle over in Guilford County."

Also getting itself written is a new type of biography of Thomas Jefferson, showing more of his character than his democratic views. "I don't think a picture of an alabaster saint gives much insight to a man's character."

'ALL GAUL' PHILOSOPHY

He says there are three things to remember in writing a story—substance, form and polish. There is no formula that will get you anywhere in the arts. Form is much more valuable than a formula."

This formula is a short story of his life, and becomes a part of the life of his students. They leave his class with an eye for details, an insight on character and a desire to bring their lives to a specific goal—"to bring on the bear."

What Is A Newspaper's Real Job?

Dr. Robert M. Hutchins to the American Society of Newspaper Editors

The purpose of a newspaper, and the justification for the privilege of the press, is the enlightenment of the people about their current affairs. No other medium of communication can compete with the newspaper in the performance of this task. A newspaper that is doing this job well is a good newspaper, no matter how deficient it may be in astrology, menus, comics, cheesecake, crime and Republican propaganda. A newspaper that is doing this job deserves protection against government, and it will certainly need it.

Compares Papers and Radio

A newspaper that is doing this job will have to bring before its readers points of view with which it disagrees and facts that it disagrees and facts that it deplores. Otherwise in monopoly towns the people cannot expect to be enlightened; for television and radio are unlikely to be in the same class with a well-run newspaper in telling what it means. Television and radio are, moreover, controlled by a governmental agency, and one that does not inspire much confidence today.

A good many newspapers take seriously their responsibility to enlighten the people about current affairs. It is generally agreed that the best American papers are as good as any in the world and that the average is high. Our question is how to maintain the good newspapers in the faith and how to convert the others.

I think you should reconsider your opposition to the principal recommendation of the commission on the Freedom of the Press. That was that a new agency be established to appraise and report annually upon the performance of the press. The commission said, "It seems to us clear that some agency which reflects the ambitions of the American people for its press should exist for the purpose of comparing the accomplishments of the press with the aspirations which the people have for it.

Such an agency would also educate the people as to the aspirations which they ought to have for the press. The commission suggested that this agency be independent or government and of the press; that it be created by gifts, and that it be given a ten-year trial, at the end of which an audit of its achievement could determine anew the institutional form best adapted to its purposes. The fact that the British commission independently reached an identical recommendation seems to me highly significant.

Contain Laymen

Such an agency should contain representatives of the press; it should also contain laymen. My guess is that the weakness of the Press Council in Sweden results from the fact that it composed entirely of representatives of the newspapers. I believe that the British Council will go the same way because the press rejected the recommendation of the Royal Commission that the Council should have lay members and a lay chairman. If its first report is suggestive of its future, this group is likely to manifest its fearless and high-principled character by speaking sternly to newspapers on trivial subjects.

Ike Cool To Gov. Harriman

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower greeted the third annual White House Conference of Governors and then took the Prime Minister of Thailand off to the Burning Tree Club for lunch and golf. The governors rather wistfully turned their backs on the lovely May day and listened obediently to secret briefings on world problems.

Most of the Democrats among them were plainly restive. It wasn't just spring fever; the political climate has changed since 1953 when the President launched his innovation of a White House school for the chief executives of the 48 states.

In 1953, thirty governors were Republicans, only 18 were Democrats. The GOP group included that bloc which so effectively took control of the national convention away from the pro-Taft Senators and secured the nomination for Eisenhower. The first governors' session here was almost by way of a celebration; any dissenting Democrats chose discretion as the better part of valor. Also three of the Democratic governors were pro-Eisenhower: Burns, Shivers and Kennon.

Today the balance has shifted to 27 Democratic governors and 21 Republicans, a net gain of nine for the party out of power. The nine include the governors of New York, New Jersy and Pennsylvania, states pivotal in Presidential elections, and Minnesota, Connecticut, Maine, New Mexico, Arizona and Colorado.

In this group are vocal spokesmen for a tougher attitude toward the President. They are trying to be good guests the early part of the week. When the Democrats hold their own governors' meeting later this week, they will speak out.

Despite the veneer of etiquette and the closed door sessions no 48 politicians can meet without politics. There have been several revelations so far.

The lone wolf Ohio Democrat, Governor Lausche, announced before leaving Columbus that he would not attend the Democratic meeting because he did not want to join in efforts to "figure out ways and means of beating the man who has just been my host."

To this, the national committee retorts: "Who ever called Lausche a Democrat?" They interpret his remarks as notice that he has no ambitions to make the national slate but will run as an Eisenhower Democrat against Senator George Bender next year. Furthermore they think he might win.

It was noted also that the President when he greeted each governor was noticeably cool and curt to perhaps his closest associate among them, Governor Harriman of New York. Their friendship was warm and close during the war and postwar period when Presidents Roosevelt and Truman were giving Harriman top diplomatic posts and Eisenhower top military commands.

But as governor, Harriman has been an ardent defender of his party and its Presidents, a critic of Eisenhower and leader in the cry that Democrats must hold the President responsible. The President has been accused of not reading the newspapers but apparently this information got through to him and he resents it.

Gov. Harriman is described as rather relieved that he was not put under the wraps of old friendship. In any case he proved a sharp questioner of the briefing officials, especially Secretary of State Dulles.

Dulles has contended that the Administration was already carrying out Adlai Stevenson's program for Southeast Asia. Prodded by Harriman to describe it, the secretary ducked. We couldn't do anything there, he said, because of the British elections coming up.

Governors generally praised the presentations of U. N. Ambassador Lodge and Harold Stassen, Foreign Operations Administator. Vice - President Nixon was credited with "a travelogue" only.

Track 'Double-Header' Slated Today Between Duke, UNC

Some Of Stars Performing Here Today

Some of the athletes who will perform here today when the Duke and Carolina track teams clash in the top ACC track meet of the season are shown above. Top row (l-r) are Jimmy Beatty of UNC, Bob Barden of UNC, and Durham Lawshe of Duke. On the second row are Joel Shankle of Duke, Roger Morris of UNC and Charlie Yarborough of UNC.

Top Meet Of Year Slated For 2:00

Some of the South's top track talent, on both the Varsity and freshman levels, will be on parade here this afternoon when Duke's Blue Devils and Carolina clash in a double header track meet that will get underway at two o'clock.

The Varsity and freshman meets will run simultaneously, with the Frosh scheduled to run each event first.

Not only will the meets be battles of top individual performers, but should develop into first class team battles. It is the last meet for both Varsity teams before the Atlantic Coast Conference meet here May 13 and 14. The Tar Heels are undefeated in dual meet competion this season, while the Carolina freshmen have lost only to Duke's Blue Imps in four starts.

The team aspect of the meet notwithstanding, there will be some top flight individuals performing. Carolina's line-up is headed by distance runner Jimmy Beatty, ACC Indoor and Cross-Country champion and Penn Relays two-mile champion. Other Carolina Varsity leaders are Charlie Yarborough, pole vaulter and broad jumper, Richard Waters, pole vaulter, Roger Morris, shot putter and discus man, and hurdler Claude Rhule, and Bob Barden, distance man. Waters, Morris and Beatty were all three entered in the Penn Relays this season.

Duke will be paced by its one-man-gang Joel Shankle who captured two first places in the Penn Relays. Shankle specializes in the hurdles and dashses, and is a threat in the pole vault and broad jump. Another Duke stalwart, and one who will be pushing UNC's Morris for first in the shot, is big Durham Lawshe, who holds the Duke school record for that event.

The Freshman meet shapes up to be just as fast a battle as the Varsity. When the Imps toppéd the Tar Babies earlier in the season, records feel freely. Duke's top frosh threat is Dave Sime who set two frosh marks in the ACC Indoor games, while the Tar Babies may have a record set-first meet against Duke for a Uniter in quarter-miler Ronnie Austell of Shelby N. C. Austell turned in a 49.8 quarter in the versity frosh record.

UNC Lacrosse Team Beaten

A hard-playing Washington College lacrosse team spoiled the Carolina stickmens' bid for their third victory of the season as the visitors downed the locals 19-4 in the Tar Heels' last game of the season yesterday.

The Marylanders took advantage of a Tar Heel team attack that couldn't get organized early in the game and rolled up an 8-2 lead at half-time that proved sufficient for the win.

Krepp, Drake Set 4 American Marks

Drake and Krepp . . . New Record Holders

Charlie Krepp and Phil Drake, both sophomore members of the Varsity swimming team broke two records each in an AAU sanctioned record trial held in Bowman Gray indoor pool yesterday.

Krepp, from Baltimore, Md., bettered the American records in the 500 yard and 500 meter backstroke which were held by former Tar Heel Jimmy Thomas. His times were 5:49.1 in the 500 yard and 6:21.9 in the 500 meter to eclipse the old records of 5:53.1 and 6:27.1 respectively. Krepp was faster on the first 200 yeards yesterday than he was in the National Collegiates held last March. His time yesterday was 2:12.3 while he was clocked at 2:13.3 at the Nationals.

Drake, from Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, got a slow start but had a finishing kick to better the American records held by Bowen Stassforth of Iowa University. His times in the 500 yard and 500 meter butterfly were 6:37.1 and 7:11.3 respectively. He shattered the old records of 6:40.4 and 7:16.4.

Both Krepp and Drake will try to break the existing American records for the 400 meter and 440 yard backstroke and breaststroke next Wednesday afternoon at 5:30 in the indoor pool.

Officials for this record trial next Wednesday will be Jack Lowder, Bob Linker, Ham Strayhorn, Bob Colbert, Carl Blythe, Dick Jamerson, Bill Meade, Lee Holmes, Ralph Casey, Ed Shawley and Joe Hilton.

Tar Heels Explode For 6 Runs In Tenth To Batter USC 12-8

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 6—Carolina's Tar Heels exploded for six runs in the top of the tenth inning here today to take a 12-8 Atlantic Coast Conference baseball win over South Carolina.

The Gamecocks pushed across one run in the last of the ninth to tie the score at 6-6, but the Tar Heels were not to be denied their sixth ACC win of the season as they launched their tenth inning attack.

South Carolina attempted a comeback in the last of the tenth as they pushed across two-runs, but Carolina ace Tom Maultsby bore down and put out the fire to gain his fifth win of the season. Maultsby had come on in the seventh frame to relieve starter Bob Johnson.

Saturday the Tar Heels move to Clemson to take on the Tigers in another ACC game. The Tigers lost to Wake Forest 15-11 today to give UNC sole possession of fifth place in the ACC standings.

South Carolina took an early lead in today's game by getting two runs in the home half of the first, but the Tar Heels bounced back for four in the second to go ahead 4-2. The Gamecocks added a singleton in the sixth and went ahead with one run in both the seventh and eighth innings.

In the ninth, however, the Tar Heels got a pair to go back out in front 6-5 and set the stage for the tenth inning explosion.

"IT'S TOASTED" to taste better!

YOU GET MORE deep-down smoking enjoyment from Luckies than any other brand. The reason, plain and simple, is that Luckies taste better. They taste better, first of all, because Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. Then that tobacco is toasted to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' light, good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better . . . cleaner, fresher, smoother. You'll enjoy the Droodle above, too; it's titled: Three on a match—Luckies, of course. Whenever smokers put their heads together, they agree you can't match a Lucky for flavor. Come light-up time, enjoy a better-tasting Lucky yourself!

state, but it is a step in that direction. Where do we plan to stop?

"We are asked to raise additional tax money to do something that Ivory Soap and Pepsi-Cola are begging to do. It's my honest opinion that the people of North Carolina don't want to pay this bill. Private industry wants to pay it, and I move that we let them do it."

Sen. Lunsford Crew of Halifax said his only criticism of the work of the Appropriations Subcommittee was that it had cut the television appropriation in half. He said if he had been on the subcommittee, he would have voted against any cut, and he urged the Senate to defeat Walton's amendment.

"This is a progressive and a needed step," Crew said. "The time will soon be here when television will be used in every public school classroom in North Carolina."

Chi Psi Centennial

Alpha Sigma chapter of Chi Psi will celebrate the 100th anniversary of its establishment at UNC today.

Celebration plans include a luncheon at Carolina Inn and buffet supper at the Lodge for alumni and actives. Richard Jenrette, president of the Alumni Corporation of Alpha Sigma, is in charge of planning. Linn Garibaldi, president of Western Carolina Telephone Co., will present the main address at the luncheon.

Alpha Sigma, the first southern Alpha of Chi Psi, was founded here as the result of a petition to Chi Psi for a charter by a small group of students who had formed a local club called Sigma Gamma.

Dr. Keener Frazer of the Political Science Dept. arranged their visit, and the UNC Extension Division, headed by Russell Grumman, has served as host to the group during their stay here.

Several of the group had an especial interest in Chapel Hill, visiting old acquaintances. Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Howell were hosts to Ortiz, whom they had known during a 1948 visit to Guatemala. Ortiz was an English student of Dr. Howell and translated several of his essays into Spanish.

Miss Lampen, who has worked with Dr. Samuel T. Emory Jr., UNC professor who is teaching in Finland this year, reported that a large number of Finnish students come to North Carolina yearly to attend the Penland School of Handicrafts.

Two of the journalists, Mikkelsen and O'Farrell, have worked on U. S. newspapers during their tour, on the Mason City, Iowa, Globe-Gazette, and the Albuquerque, N. Mex., Tribune, respectively.

O'Farrell explained that the information agencies, of which there are 220 in the world, are headed by U. S. Public Affairs Officers, but staffed largely by local workers.

Commenting on U. S. reputation among other nations, he said two types of misconceptions about the U. S. exist: those arising from communistic deliberate propaganda, and those born of pure ignorance.

HAPPENINGS ON THE HILL:

It's Germans This Weekend

By SUSAN ANDES

After last weekend's mass exodus to the beach everyone seems pretty contented to stick around the old campus this weekend. And for what better reason than the fact that it is SPRING and GERMANS weekend.

Some will be taking in the dance tonight to end up the year waltzing to the music of Les Brown. Others (and the crowd will, no doubt, be numerous) will be partying out at Hogan's and at various cabins.

The Chi Phis elected officers this week. They are Bill Warwick, president; Mike Soper, vice president; Clyde Meares, secretary; Chuck Hastenings, treasurer, and Collie Collison, social chairman.

The Chi Phis will have a champagne party out at Jack's this afternoon and tonight they will "unofficially" be partying at the Saddle Club.

Whoopee! It's Triad party time tonight for the Phi Delts, Sigma Chis and the Betas. The three groups will gather with their dates at a cabin near Durham for a big blast.

The Phi Delts had a cabin party last night out at the Schoolhouse; and this afternoon preceeding the concert they will be meeting and mingling out at the Elbow Room for a pre-concert party.

More society news will be published tomorrow.

The SAEs will also be partying with other groups this weekend.

Sigma Nus have been active lately. With their annual White Rose Ball in Durham last weekend all the N. C. chapters participated and saw Miss Gloria Weaver, a WC student sponsored by State, crowned the White Rose Queen. Representing UNC among the contestants was Miss Mary Grady Burnette, a Pi Phi from Garner.

The Pika's are planning to convene at Hogans tonight for a party, after having been a bit more formal last night and dined and danced at the Saddle Club in Durham.

SIX SHOWS IN THE MILL:

The Planetarium: Work And Work

By BILLY ARTHUR

Morehead Planetarium technicians—plus the boss, advisors, secretary and the janitors—were about ready to go berserk.

After all, there is but one Planetarium instrument, only so many hours in the day, and only so little space behind the huge steel dome. And the Planetarium has six shows in the mill, four running and two warming up.

Therefore, it was no wonder when a question or suggestion was posed, it was met with the question, "Which show you referring to?"

The question, suggestion or critique could have applied to the current public and special offerings, "Steering By the Stars" and "Beyond the Solar System" respectively. Or, to a single-shot academie presentation, "The Astronomy of America," or to "Easter, the Awakening," the big spectacular spiritual production which was left intact after its closing for a special one-time showing to the Atlantic Coast Debate Council.

NEWS SHOWS

Too, the question, suggestion or critique could have been directed towards two new shows, which open May 23 and which are now in the planning stage that requires consultations of the staff, preparations of the script, devision special effects and manual labor.

Into the working of all six productions go the combined mental movements and manual labor of Manager Anthony F. Jenzano, Dr. M. S. Davis, a member of the UNC astronomy department and advisor to the Planetarium, and John T. Brittain, James Gates and R. L. McGhee, members of the technical staff.

Every Planetarium presentation requires a different setting of the great Zeiss instrument, plus scores of hidden projectors around the simulated horizon. And behind the dome are huge stage settings.

FRIDAY, APRIL 28

Let's single out Friday, April 28, when four entirely different shows were presented in the chamber. At 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. school children witnessed "Beyond the Solar System." For it, the 15-foot metal monster and a group of projectors were employed to present both little and well known and popular stellar objects and galakies.

At 4:15 p.m. "Easter, The Awakening" was offered with an entirely different on the Planetarium instrument and a diverse group of projectors as well as a distinctly different script for the technicians who operate the sound and lighting effects.

At 5:30 p.m the Zeiss projector was set again, this time turned back 570 years to the mediaeval period of Chaucer, and checked. Still another set of sound and lighting cues was placed before the technicians for their execution without flaw.

At 8:30 p. .m"Steering By the Stars" required a fourth perfect setting of the instrument and another batch of cues for the technicians.

Four separate narrators had memorized the scripts and were working the Planetarium controls in the dark while speaking from the console.

Between shows Manager Jenzano and the technicians conferred and determined which of the Easter stages and projectors should come down first for speedy replacement for the forthcoming—and also different—production opening May 23.

Three other members of the staff were affected, too. One was Mrs. Nancy Holder, who must type the script as well as handle the Planetarium reservations. Whenever someone appeared at the ticket window, she had to remember to ask, "Which program do you want to see?"

Others were Hubert Robinson and George Davis, the custodians. They hardly had room and time between shows and rehearsals for regular maintenance.

April 28 was only one day, you rightly say. But remember, the Planetarium, except for three months in the summer, always has four shows "on the road"—two playing and two in the works.

The staff is not yet ready for a psychiatrist—unless one might be able to determine how it manages to go in four directions at once. And for how long.

Freshman Camp Planners Slate Meeting Monday

Planners of the 1955 Freshman Camp will have a 1 p.m. luncheon meeting tomorrow, according to committee member Joe Clapp.

The luncheon will be held upstairs in Lenior Hall. Scotty Hester, camp director, will preside.

"Planning is rolling along in high gear now," Clapp said yesterday, "but anyone who is interested in helping with the camp is invited to attend the meeting."

No. 7 Wins Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 7 (AP)—It was lucky seven today for Swaps the Kentucky Derby winner.

He carried No. 7 on his saddle cloth. The Derby was the seventh of the month. And to complete the chain Swaps paid $7.60 to win .

Baha'i Leader To Talk Here

Allen Bayer McDaniel, above, will speak at a public meeting tomorrow, sponsored by campus Baha'i students. McDaniel is a leader in the religious movement. Baha'i is an independent world religion revealed by Baha'u'llah, according to campus Baha'i leader Walter Wootten.

Honorary Initiation Set

The Order of the Old Well, which was founded on the premise that "too much service was being done in the University and too little recognition was forthcoming," will hold its initiation Tuesday afternoon.

According to President Don Geiger ,the ceremony will commence at the Old Well at 3:45 p.m. with the annual picture.

The ceremony will then move into Gerrard Hall where Geiger and Dean of Awards Ernest Mackie will speak. The traditional signing of the Roll and the election of officers will follow.

New members will then be honored at a reception in Graham Memorial at 5 p.m.

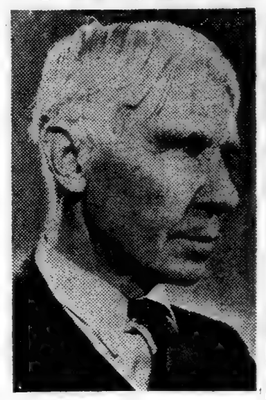
"A major aim of the founders of the Order was to establish an honorary in which all subjective judgment of prospective members is eliminated." To do this the organization has devised a point system upon which they base all prospective "Neophytes." The point system is administered by an executive committee.

This year's officers are Don Geiger, president; Paul Likens, vice-president; Herb Brown, secretary - treasurer; Bill Calvert, Miss Sally Winn, Rollie Tillman and Charlie Yarborough, committeemen. Dean of Awards Ernest Mackie is faculty advisor.

Mothers Of Year Honored

Chapel Hill's "Mothers of the Year" will be presented to the public today at 3 p.m. in the Carolina Theatre.

Prizes to the winning mothers will be presented by Crow Little, president of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants' Assn., sponsor of the "Mother of the Year" contest. Merchant Joe Robbins will emcee the presentation.



Plans have been made to broadcast the presentation directly from the theatre over radio station WCHL. In addition to the prizes to the winning mothers Robbins has announced that a pair of stockings will be presented, at a later date, to all the mothers who were entered.

The winning mothers are Mrs. Nell Justice, housemother of Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity, "Mom" Bizzel, housemother of Chi Omega Sorority, Mrs. Virginia Strauch of Glenwood School, Mrs. Constance Peace of Northside Elementary School and Mrs. Ben Grantham of Carrboro Elementary School.

Trophies will be presented to the fraternity, sorority, and schools of the winning mothers.

All mothers, regardless of whether they were contestants or not, will be admitted into the Chapel Hill theatres between 2 and 5 this afternoon.

Carl Sandburg, Rev. Henry To Talk At Commencement Exercises On June 4, 5, 6

AUTHOR-POET SANDBURG
...will address seniors

Carl Sandburg and the Right Reverend M. George Henry will be the featured speakers during UNC's 161st Commncement exercises, according to an announcement yesterday by Chancellor Robert House.

Sandburg, distinguished American author and poet who now resides near Flat Rock, will give the commencement address in Stadium on June 6 as the final event of the three-day program. Degrees in course will be conferred then in traditional ceremonies

Bishop Henry, a native of Chapel Hill and graduate of the University in 1931, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon to the graduating class in Memorial Hall on Sunday morning, June 5. He is the third bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Western North Carolina, residing in Asheville.

Commencement programs will get underway June 4 with a luncheon meeting of Library Science alumni at 1:30. In the afternoon an evening the four classes of '47, '48, '49 and '50 will hold a reunion picnic-barbecue at Emerson Field, and at 9 o'clock there will be an open-air reception and musicale with members of the University Women's Club as hostesses at Kessing Pool honoring seniors, their parents and other visitors.

Following the baccalaureate service June 5 there will be a dutch luncheon for seniors and parents in Lenoir Hall at which Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver will preside. Chancellor House will be the featured speaker.

Monday's program on June 6 will include the final meeting of the senior class, a faculty reception at Davie Poplar and the Alumni Luncheon in Lenoir Hall at 12:30 p.m. Associate Justice William H. Bobbitt, president of the Alumni Association, will preside at the Assembly of Old Grads.

Graduates in the Air Force and Navy NROTC programs will receive commissions in special exercises at 4 p.m. in the Forest Theater.

At the final graduation exercises those taking part in the program in addition to Sandburg include Charles H. Yarborough of Louisburg, president of the senior class, Governor Luther Hodges, and President Gordon Gray. Presiding will be Chancellor Robert House.

Spring Carnival Friday

There is still time for interested groups to enter the annual University Club Spring Carnival, according to Vice-President Joe Clapp.

The carnival will be held next Friday. Present plans, said Clapp, include "everything from a night club to sponge-throwing contests to pitching pennies and other cunningly - contrived games calculated to give the students a run for their prize money."

No duplication of exhibits will be allowed, said Clapp, but "there is plenty of room for some original concessions that should turn out to be real crowd-pleasers." Clapp said any fraternity, sorority or dormitory may enter the carnival for a fee of $4. All profits, he said, will be kept by organizations. Two organizations may co-sponsor a booth, he said.

Due to a state attorney general ruling against gambling, only games of skill will be "allowed and encouraged," according to Clapp. Beer, he said, can be given away only by certificate.

Entries and fees may be sent to Miss Annette Niven, 211 Smith, or Clapp, 304 Grimes, before Tuesday.

Clapp called attention to a meeting of the University Club Tuesday night at 7:30 in Graham Memorial's Roland Parker 2. All organizations should be represented, he said.

Third Annual Putnam Prize Deadline Given

The third annual Putnam Prize, a $2,000 award offered by Putnam's Sons, will be open to all UNC undergraduate and graduate students for fiction or nonfiction work with an entry deadline of July 1, according to Miss Jessie Rehder of the English Department.

Fraternity Celebrates Centennial

The local chapter of Chi Psi Fraternity is celebrating its 100th anniversary this weekend. Plans for the occasion include a reunion of graduate brothers, with a luncheon, parties and buffet supper. Linn Garibaldi, president of the Western Carolina Telephone Co., and Vic Seixias, famed tennis champion, are among the returning alumni.

The Alpha Sigma chapter was founded on this campus by a small group which formerly called themselves the Sigm Gamma club. Chi Psi was the forth Greek letter fraternity to be established here. After a prosperous beginning, the organization became dormant due to the Civil War, in which 10 of the members were killed. The chapter was not active for 60 years following the war.

In April, 1923, a petition was again sent to the national organization, and soon thereafter, the present chapter was formed. The local Chi Psi group is remembered for its work to abolish hazing on the Carolina campus.

Junior Recital Today

Misses Nancy Eversman, pianist, and Beatrice Allson, soprano, will give a junior recital this afternoon in Hill Hall.

The recital is scheduled for 4:30.

Miss Eversman, student of Dr. W. S. Newman, will play selections from Bach, Clementi, and Schumann. Miss Allston, student of assistant Professor Joel Carter, will sing a group of songs in Italian by Monteverdi and Handel; German Lieder by Schubert and Schumann, and work by Gretchaninoff and Rachmaninoff.

Graves Forgets A Tradition

Student freedom—and responsibility—received a hardy pat on the back in Dean Fred Weaver's recent report on student automobiles.

The report said two things—that cars would be more carefully registered and regulated and that they would not be prohibited to undergraduates or members of any specific classes.

Student leaders, eager to ensure that undergraduates keep their right to keep cars, have agreed to help enforce the regulation of autos. In other words, students and administration have been working together to keep the cars on campus.

Now Chapel Hill Weekly Editor Louis Graves, once an undergrad himself, has taken the editorial stump to proclaim students as falling short in the regulation of their own behavior. The venerable (and usually reasonable) editor cites the recent panty raids and unnamed "other disorderly and sometimes indecent performances" as evidence of student irresponsibility.

Editor Graves shakes an editorial finger at Dean Weaver's statement that banning undergraduate autos "is not seen as fitting into the traditional relationship between this University and its students." Graves charges that "this is another way of saying that such a prohibition would interfere with the individual liberty of the students." He continues, "The false premise is that immature boys. . . should be left free to regulate their own behavior."

What Editor Graves overlooks in his lengthy essay on student irresponsibility is that the University has a tradition of not interfering with individual student liberty. As for his vague—and mostly unfounded—charges of irresponsibility, let the Chapel Hill Weekly chief be reminded that it was student leaders who volunteered to aid the administration in enforcing their car regulations.

The Man Who Declines

On the literary flank, few of this year's Pulitzer Prize Awards surprised anyone.

Tennessee Williams' play, "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof," was hailed from opening night as Pulitzer timber by the gentlemen of the Broadway press. Wallace Stephens' Collected Poems got the National Book Award, and it occasioned no astonishment when the same anthology got another.

There was one surprise, and a very enigmatic surprise. William Faulkner's A Fable was chosen. The critics, or most of them, must have been surprised; in all the pre-award guessing we read we failed to see the novel mentioned as a possibility. This is the enigma. Part of the answer may lie in the complaint we heard of Faulkner's book in a creative writing class, running something like this:

"I tried to wade through that stuff, but it was hard going. What's he trying to say, anyway? What's he trying to do?"

Why would we have given Mr. Faulkner a Pulitzer Prize? Mr. Faulkner, who may be unduly optimistic, said in his Nobel Prize Award Speech that he declines to accept the end of man. In A Fable, he wrapped that basic hopefulness up in fiction.

But let us quote from that earlier and essential piece of oratory Mr. Faulkner delivered at Stockholm:

Our tragedy today is a general and universal fear so long sustained by now that we can even bear it. There are no longer problems of the spirit. There is only the question: when will I be blown up? Because of this, the young man or woman writing today has forgotten the basic problems of the human heart in conflict with itself . . .

He must learn them again. He must teach himself that the basest of all things is to be afraid; and, teaching himself that, forget it forever, leaving no room in his workshop for anything but the old verities . . . the old universal truths lacking which any story is ephemeral and doomed—love and honor and pity and pride and compassion and sacrifice. Until he does so he labors under a curse . . . His griefs grieve on no universal bones, leaving no scars. He writes not of the heart but of the glands.

Until he relearns these things he will write as though he stood among and watched the end of man . . . I refuse to accept this. I believe that man will not merely endure: he wil prevail. He is immortal, not because he alone among creatures has an inexhaustible voice, but because he has a soul, a spirit capable of compassion and sacrifice and endurance.

Our conclusion is that the Pulitzer Awardsmen weren't looking into the foothills, but to Olympus.

Coats Of Arms! Line Forms To The Right!

J. A. C. Dunn

ON APRIL FOOL'S Day the Christian Science Monitor published a letter from London on Heraldry, or art of proving who you are with a picture, which stated, among other morsels of heraldic knowledge, that Douglas Fairbanks had made history by being the first American ever to be granted a knight's coat of arms by the College of Arms in England. Huzza and so on for for Mr. Fairbanks.

However, it also seems that other Americans have suddenly developed a craving for coats of arms and are writing by the score to the Earl Marshall of England inquiring as to whether they are entitled to arms or not on the basis of their ancestry. These people, who apparently have got tired of the little aluminum initials on the doors of their cars and are now looking around for something new, are interpreted in the article as benig definite aids to the cementing of Anglo - American bonds. "The arms of Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Esq., K.B.E., (hon.), symbolizing the two hemispheres united across the Atlantic by a silken knot of friendship, has wider than family significance."

WITH THIS FACT ringing through the anglomaniacal pathways of our mind, we turn to the situation we have observed to be in existence lo, these many many, months among the various colleges in the country. It seems to us that relations could stand cementing there somewhat.

Take Duke and Carolina, for instance. During the football season the two institutions are at each other's throats like two cats in an alley; and as soon as the football season ends they relapse into a scornful silence. Duke men sit moodily around during the basketball and baseball seasons and plot dark plots in the Rat of painting Silent Sam with luminous paint, and Carolina men simultaneously weave murky intrigues around the capture of the victory bell.

And of course there's State College, too. State men, (except during the football season), sink into the obscurity of their plants and manure and whatnot and brood evilly over plans to cultivate nasty comments on the green sward of Kenan Stadium; and Carolina men correspondingly meditate hienous espionage to be perpetuated on the livestock in Raleigh.

WE WONDER WHAT would happen if Duke started handing out honorary coats of arms to deserving Carolina men? Perhaps they could award a shield on which was emblazoned a stone rampart on a field of greenbacks with a king size Chesterfield for a bar sinister. And in return Carolina might award Duke and State College men coats of arms depicting a severed ram's head impaled on a bottle of Bourbon against a field of tar; the supporters of the emblem would be two lettermen. This ought to please Duke and State men mightily. Futhermore, State would take great strides toward cementing its relations with everyone if it doled out coats of arms showing a cow's head rampant on a field of clover supported by crossed pitchforks.

We think this would be a good idea. After a while perhaps someone would set up a College of Arms so that everyone could honor everyone else more conveniently, and the College of Arms would be something interesting for the Student Legislature to investigate from time to time. Freshmen would spend their days dreaming of acquiring honorary coats of arms from both State and Duke, and years later, aged men would show glittering armorial trophies to their grandchildren and murmur, "See that, boy? Duke University gave me that in appreciation of my daring attempt to scale their chapel tower."

— Script Was Good —

'Julius Caesar' Seen As 'Dramaticlly Indecisive'

Ted Rosenthal

The Carolina Playmakers' treatment of Julius Caesar was, dramatically, indecisive. It lacked throughout a unified sense of what the play should mean—and while in art there may be many "correct" ways to conceive of a single work, in a given performance there must be some rationale to serve as a basis for emphasis and interpretation. But it seemed that directors Thomas Patterson and Kai Jurgensen had never decided which of the possible "Julius Caesars" they wished to convey. And so the cast did not appear to be moving toward any definite integrated representation. When a director abdicates his function of guiding a production, it is very much like a pilot releasing the controls and abandoning his plane to haphazard free-fall.

Consequently dramatic tension was not built up, focused, and discharged within the framework of the production as a whole. There were moments of excitement, but these remained isolated fragments which never fused together as parts of a total experience.

In some individual performances, too, the actors did not seem to have any organized conception of the people they were trying to portray. For example, Donnell Stoneman's Cassius became more a series of speeches recited one by one, than the reactions of a total personality to a specific situation. The same man easily could have said these things at different times, but one has no conviction that he would have said them, and to be successful, acting must convince the audience that the words and deeds of the character are probable, not merely possible.

Robert Sonkowsky's Brutus, on the other hand, was consistent—but to the extent that every speech seemed weighted as heavily as every other. While Mr. Sonkowsky acted with force and assurance, because of the inflexibility of the interpretation, there emerged a real character, but one ponderous and uninteresting, seemingly devoid of the subtle nuances which are the rule rather than the exception, with the human personality. Donald Treat who played Antonius, seemed to have a clearer idea of what he wanted to achieve. At times he captured a convincing Antony, but more often he was playing at, not in, the role. Very possible there had not been enough time for him to have crystalized his characterization, for the production in general seemed under-rehearsed: frequently enunciation is poor; some of the supporting players read their speeches with hardly any observable attempt at acting them; the cast needed more practice, the presentation more polish.

Gene Williams as Casca gave the most convincing performance of the evening. The character emerged sarcastic, at times amusing, at others cowering, and always completely believeable! The how of an interpretation is perhaps a matter of individual judgement, but Mr. Williams was both consistent and refreshing.

Walter L. Smith performed well as Caesar; of the principals, he was the only other performer who more than held up his toga. Marian Rosenzweig was an effective Portia.

James Sechrest played Octavius; Christian Moe, Lepidus and Ligarius; Albert Gordon, Cicero; Jan Saxon, Calpurnia; Carl Williams, Voluminus and Metellus; Lloyd Skinner, Publius; William Casstevens, Popilius; James Hager, Trebonius; James Heldman, Decius Brutus; Pete Cothran, Titinius; Len Bullock, Messala; Harry Coble, Marullus and Pindarus; Phillip Kennedy, the soothsayer; Taylor Williams, Artemidorus; Terry Beaver, Cinna.

James Riley's settings, geared to the Forest Theatre atmosphere, were excellent. Some nice musical touches were composed and played by Roger McDuffie; the lighting, by John Cauble, and the costumes by June Craft, were capably handled.

The script was by William Shakespeare.

Warning To Adlai Stevenson

Doris Fleeson

"I don't know about you fellows but in New York we need a national government, not a royal family," Averell Harriman told his fellow-Democratic governors here. "We just can't afford a Republican in the White House."

Harriman was strongly backed by Carmine De Sapio, New York national committeeman.

"You're getting a Madison Avenue job done on you," he warned.

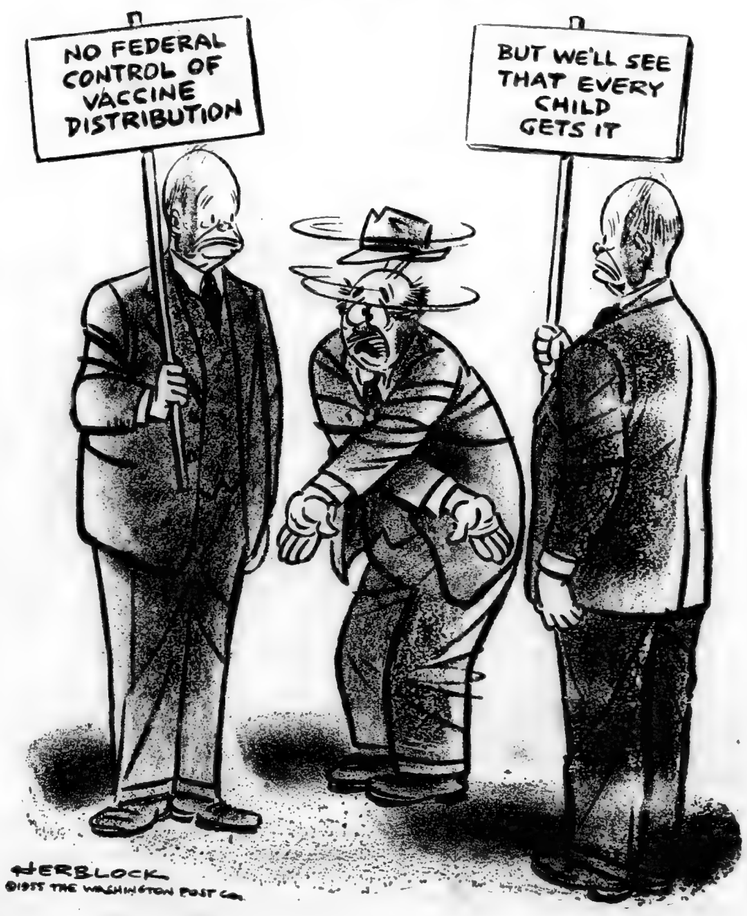
"You've got to go after this great White Father myth and pin responsibility directly on the President. He's the leader and he campaigned on the premise that leaders are responsible for the acts of their subordinates and their party."

De Sapio also said bluntly what the governors to a man believe: "No Democrat should play coy or have to be drafted for the Presidency. For one thing, we got to be free to attack Eisenhower for making out it's such a sacrifice to be in the White House."

The warning to Adlai Stevenson, now on a business trip to Africa, is clear. The fact is that Stevenson wants the nomination but being an intellectual, once he had discovered himself well in the lead, he has begun debating both sides of the question again.

Since it is as natural as breathing for governors of pivotal states to see themselves leading a Cabinet procession into the East Room of the White House, they are not patient with Stevenson. Gov. Williams of Michigan also aired his view that the Democrats had plenty of candidates.

On the whole the governors kept under control their restiveness over the tendency here to consider the President invincible. Their tempers were not improved by having to watch Gov. Allan Shivers have his cake and eat it too. Shivers carried Texas into the Ike column in 1952 and tells reporters that he still opposes Stevenson.



But he clung closer than a brother to his fellow-governors throughout their political discussions and butter wouldn't melt in his mouth. Texas has 52 votes in the convention and Shivers will probably be the delegation chairman so they all had to pretend they liked him just dandy. When he smiled ,they smiled back.

Former National Chairman Mitchell is probably unwise to raise the issue but he is speaking for a lot of Democrats when he continues to challenge the right of the Eisenhower bolters to come home without even saying sorry. That question inevitably will arise in the convention next year.

National strategists console themselves about the Texas problem by suggesting that Shivers would not be so cozy unless he thought the Democrats were again the winning side. They also mention the land scandals which now plague his administration. But they are whistling in the dark and they know it.

The governors told the Senators with whom they breakfasted that the troubles of the family farmers and the three million still unemployed despite general prosperity are the exposed nerves of the Administration.

'Mr. President, Meet Mr. Eisenhower'

Genocide At Forty Cents A Head

Stewart Alsop

Theoretically, the entire human race can for all practical purposes be eliminated for the small sum of about forty cents per human, give or take a few cents either way.

The authority for this statement is found in a rough estimate recently made by the distinguished physicist, Dr. Leo Szilard. Dr. Szilard estimated the cost of covering the globe, on an over-lapping checker-board pattern, with lethal concentrations of radioactive fall-out.

The resulting computation came to about $1,000,000,000, plus or minus a few hundred million. Given a population of about 2.4 billion, this works out to a per unit cost of roughly forty cents.

SOME HITCHES

The notion of ending human life on this planet at such cut rates may seem rather fanciful, even though, as Dr. Szilard points out, it is "not one of the major planets." And in a sense, of course, the estimate is deceptive, since it makes no allowance for the cost of delivery or the attrition of defense. It assumes in effect, a deliberate, unopposed effort to commit global suicide—and the human race is, presumably, not yet ready for this. Even so, Dr. Szilard's little calculation cannot be dismissed simply as a peculiar sort of scientific joke. Dr. Szilard is a most serious scientist. Working with the late Dr. Enrico Fermi, he made an enormous contribution to man's foolhardy triumph over the atom. And although his estimate is a casual one, made in part for his own amusement and instruction, it has a serious significance of its own.

For it serves to point up a fact that very few people—even those in the higher reaches of Washington officialdom—have really grasped. The new kind of thermo-nuclear weapon (it should not properly be called a hydrogen bomb) represents a "quantum jump" at least as important as the first atomic bomb. "Quantum jump" is scientists' shorthand for an unprecedented, situation-transforming scientific breakthrough.

URANIUM 238 IN USE

The simple, disagreeable fact is that American scientists—and Russian scientists too, alas—have done what was previously thought to be inherently impossible. They have found a way to use uranium 238—natural uranium, the stuff that is dug out of the ground, as bomb material. This has been public knowledge, at least among scientists, ever since the Japanese announced the presence of split atoms of uranium 238 in the fall-out from our Pacific thermor-nuclear tests.

How it is done is of no interest to the layman. What is of interest to the layman is that this enormous scientific advance open up the possibility of genuinely unlimited destruction at very low cost. Combined with the fall-out phenomenon it basically transforms the whole world situation.

For example, since the entire Soviet stockpile of atomic bombs can now be used as mere triggers for the immensely more powerful thermo-nuclear weapon, the Soviet stockpile has been multiplied by a factor estimated as high as 100. The Soviets have thus presumably overnight entered the age of atomic plenty.

'OPERATION STAND-OFF'

The superiority of our Strategic Air Command over the Soviet "Long Range Air Army" still provides us with an important margin of superiority. But this margin cannot be expected to last forever. What happens when it is lost, when the Soviets can visit wholly unlimited destruction on this country, as we already can on Russia? Will not our Strategic Air Force, the center of our military power, then be neutralized?

The Air Force itself has recognized that this is a serious question, which needs a serious answer. Under the sponsorship of the Air War College a study call "Operation Stand-Off" is now going forward. The underlying assumption of "Operation Stand-off" is that both sides will fear to use the thermo-nuclear weapon, and that therefore any future war may be only a limited war.

A Meeting Of The Minds

Ron Levin

The squirrel approaches sceptic wise on tip toe doubt and pricks his eyes to contemplate the human clown that squats before him on the grass.
Some peanuts help to close the gap,
one munching while the other smiles and flips the goodies closer home.
The man is quite sure that he has the boundless trust of Bushy there who thinks back to another time of twelve guage echos in the swamp and pumpkins rounding out the vines plowed under now in May ripe spring.
And then a dog bark or a shout
a sudden breath or finger jerk.
The statue fur gives one encore,
a disappearing act of grey.
The man walks off in pointless whistle
musing of his simple love.
The squirrel starts laughing in the leaves about the folly on the lawn.

Sounds

Tom Spain

"Mr. Music," seems a rather distinguished, if not a vastly engulfing title, for a jazzman, even for a great jazzman. But the new Mr. Music has never been a front-line popular favorite; his name is virtually unknown to most jazz fans. Mr. Music is a West Coast composer-arranger-performer by the name of Al Cohn. He is by no means an upstart, but on the contrary, he has been in or behind some of the best West Coast bands.

He has formed a pick-up band to which he has applied his arrangements, tenor saxaphone talents, and an original composition. By all rights, it's a swing band of the not-too-frantic progressive school, small, but capable. Some of the West Coast's biggest names are included in the line-up. Sol Schlinger and Gene Quill join Mr. Music Cohn in completing a sax section. Three saxes in an eight to ten piece group add a different flavor to the final effect, contrasting to the heavy brass element predominant in the modern jazzworld. The single trumpeter is Count Basie's Joe Newman. His work has appeared on more labels than could be imagined in the past year, let alone the Basie releases. Newman's popularity is not to go unnoticed, as he has played in some of the biggest selling arrangements and jam sessions. Billy Byers, an oldtimer, plays trombone on most of the cuts, while Frank Rehack joins him in the two sessions, "Move," and "Never Never Land." Milt Hinton, another frequent recorder with all the better groups, is featured on bass. Osie Johnson is the drummer, and a guitarist whose name defies description—Sir Osbert Haberdasher—wind up the group with pianist Sanford Gold.

Al Cohn's orchestra is somewhat unique in that it was formed for only two recording sessions, which has become custumary with improvising jam sessions, but seldom with written arrangements. Thus it is not the individual talents that steal the show, but rather an orchestrated ensemble effect, nicely executed. There is perhaps some justification for a name like "Mr. Music" Considering the fact that he has formed a group, rehearsed and rewritten the arrangements, and recorded them all within a matter of hours. In addition to this, Cohn's tenor sax work is cleverly diversified and subtly tasteful..

One interesting bit is the Cohn version of a nineteenth century, "La Ronde". Complete with canon forms and drawing-room dignity, the number occasionally jumps just a little. Another Mr. Music arrangement is given to "Count Every Star," a popular ballad some five years old. Cohn gives the tune an easy swing with a quiet mellow touch. The rapid-fire "Move", a boy favorite out of Hollywood, does not get the usual frantic treatment, and the final effect is one of fine solo talent.

The Victor 12-inch album, blandly entitled, "Mr. Music", is worth its salt. It includes some excellent swing music and qualified talent. Cohn's saxaphoning deserves recognition, as does his composition, "Something For Lisa". Maybe it's Lisa who calls him Mr. Music.

Editors:

Being a student of long standing, and therefore a long suffering forced supporter of our campus daily, I wonder if it would be too much to ask that Tar Heel writers, be their names Kuralt, Kraar, Yoder, Grimes, or even Warren, confine themselves to issues more and to personalities less, even if the issue is such a touchy one as traditional Southern conservatism versus "Fair Deal" liberalism. Contrary to what seems to be the currently circulating popular belief, the mere fact that two people differ in their views does not necessarily mean that one is gifted with superb intelligence and that the other is an idiot, nor does it mean that one or the other is so close to God that he is guided my omniscient enlightenment. If there are any among us who are possessed of divine truth then by all encans let them come forward, but in the meantime let calmer emotions and quieter debates prevail.

Tar Heels Continue Torrid Hitting Spree To Dump Clemson, 11-8

Yarborough Tops 3 Pole Vault Marks

By RAY LINKER

Charlie Yarborough paced the well balanced Carolina track team to an 83⅜-47½ victory over Duke's Blue Devils here yesterday despite a 28-point effort by Blue Devil Joel Shankle.

Yarborough shattered three records as he cleared the pole vault bar at 13' 6½", bettering Richard Waters' jump of two weeks ago by three and one-half inches to set a new UNC record. He also established a new Duke-Carolina dual meet record, erasing a jump of 13' 1" by Duke's Moore that had stood since 1936. It also set aside the mark for the 19 year old Fetzerfield, beating the 1951 jump of Yale's Appel by one and one-fourth inches. Waters and Shankle tied for second today with 13' leaps.

Shankle also won the 100, 220, high hurdles, and tied for first in the high jump in rolling up his 28 points. His 23' 8⅜" broad jump cracked a UNC-Duke dual meet record.

The win for the Tar Heels left them undefeated in seven meets this season, and this was the first loss of the year for Duke. Carolina now leads the series between the two schools by 20-10.

Durham Lawshe aided the Duke cause with a shot put heave of 52' 7", a new Duke University record and a new dual meet mark. Lawshe was also second in the discus to UNC's Roger Morris, who broke the old dual meet mark with a throw of 154' 8¾".

In addition to his record breaking pole vault, Yarborough also took second in the broad jump to finish with eight points. Morris and Lawshe also had eight as did UNC's Jim Beatty, with a win in the mile in a new dual meet time, and a second in the 880.

Sime Garners 20 For Imps

BY RAY LINKER

Carolina's freshman track team closed out its season by falling victim to the Duke Blue Imps for the second time this year, this time by a score of 71½-59½.

Although the UNC club got seven first, the same number that Duke mustered, the Duke depth and flash David Sime was too much for the Tar Babies.

Sime scored 20 points by winning the 100, 220, low hurdles, and the broad jump.

Everett Whatley took wins in the mile and two-mile races to lead the UNC frosh attack with 10 points.

Gene Drury collected eight for the Tar Babies with a win in the high hurdles and a second in the low hurdles to Sime. Sime has been the only person to beat him this year.

The summary:

Mile Run — Whatley (C), Rigsbee (C), Wells (D), 4:29.8; 440-Austell (C), Cobb (D), Williams (C), 50.4; 100-Sime (D), Honeycutt (D), Domhoff (D), 9.7; High Hurdles-Drury (C), Sparrow (D), Bandalyan (D), 15.8; 880-Kanh (C), Williams (C), Cobb (D), 2:02,2; 220-Sime (D), Honeycutt (D), Varnum (C), 21.4; Tow Mile-Whatley (C), Liipfert (D), Hotelling (D), 10:49.5; Low Hurdles-Sime (D), Drury (C), Sparrow (D,) 24.3; Shot-Dupler (D), Kersey (D), Bandalyan (D), 44'0"; Javelin-Payne (C). Frosh Wallop GHS By 20-5

With Guy Moore showing the way with a single and two home runs, the Carolina freshman baseball team walloped Greensboro High School 20-5 on Emerson Field yesterday.

The Tar Babies unleashed a 16-hit attack on Grensboro hurlers in picking up their eighth win of the season against two losses.

Moore's first homer came with one man on base in the third and the other with the bases loaded. Delon Lambert and Carson Oldham also had three hits for the Tar Babies.

The Whirlies scored all of their runs in the first three innings, getting three in the first and singletons in the second and third frames. Pitcher Leslie Gilliland settled down, however, and held Greensboro scoreless the rest of the way to pick up the win.

Carolina's biggest inning came in the sixth when they pushed across nine runs to put the game on ice after leading, 6-5.

BOYETTE . . . New Honors

Charlie Boyette Is '55 Solomon Awardee

By AL KORSCHUN

A terrific hustler, a great competitor, a fine leader — These are the words that most aptly describe Charlie Boyette, winner of the second annual Benjamin Soloman Wrestling Trophy for 1955.

The fact that Charlie won the coveted Soloman trophy as a sophomore is significant enough in itself, but what is more remarkable is that Charlie had never participated in a single wrestling match prior to his coming to Carolina.

Charlie, who hails from the small town of Chadbourn, N. C., had always wanted to Wrestle while in high school but due to its small size, Chadbourn High school wasn't able to accomodate a wrestling program. However, during his high school years, Charlie did participate in as many sports as were offered and was a standout in football, basketball and baseball. He lettered in each of these sports for four consecutive years, captained football and baseball twice, basketball once, and, to mention a few of his honors, was All-County football for three years and All-County basketball for one year.

Charlie entered Carolina in the fall of 1953 but wasn't able to achieve his desire to wrestle until this year as a scholarship job kept him tied up his freshman year.

But it didn't take long before the well-conditioned, fast-learning Boyette had worked himself up to a starting berth on the varsity team. However, the yearling wrestler found that college wrestling was a pretty tough league as he was easily beaten in his early matches against more experienced opponents. Charlie won his first intercollegiate match sensationally enough against a strong VPI opponent as his decision kept the Tar Heels from being shutout by the powerful Gobblers. Boyette scored one more victory at Wake Forest to finish out his first season with a 2-3 record, which was considerably good for a team that only won one match out of ten. Charlie's improvement throughout the year became obvious in the ACC wrestling tournament when he took a hard-earned fourth place after losing bouts to the champion at 167 lbs., Scwab (Va) and to third place winner Hair (Md.)

At the end of the wrestling season Charlie's hustle, willingness to learn, and spirit were rewarded when he was unanimously elected to captain next year's varsity team.

Zachary, Paller Pace 13-Hit UNC Barrage

CLEMSON, S.C., May 7—Carolina's baseballers put together 13 hits and a pair of four-run innings here today to blast Clemson's Tigers 11-8 in an Atlantic Coast Conference baseball game.

The Tar Heels, paced by Tom Zachary and Bobby Paller, who had three runs batted in each, jumped into an early lead and fought off an eighth inning Tiger rally to pick up their seventh ACC win against seven losses.

Clemson actually outhit the Tar Heels 15-13 but Carolina managed to get the hits when they counted most.

Jim Raugh was the winning pitcher but needed help from Morris Hall in the eighth when the Tigers rallied for four runs to cut Carolina's lead to one run, 9-8. Hall came on with one man out and limited the Tigs to two hits in the remaining one and two-thirds innings.

The Tar Heels picked up two runs in the top of the ninth and then halted a Clemson rally in the home half of that inning to get the win.

Carolina's ninth inning runs came on a single by Dick Hudson, an error on Harry Lloyd's sacrifice bunt, an intentional pass to Connie Gravitte and sacrifice flies by Zachary and Paller.

Clemson threatened in the ninth as Jim Coleman and Jim O'Quinn both singled. Hall bore down, however, and got pinch-hitter Jim Templeton to pop out to Gravitte to kill the threat.

Bill Barnett homered, doubled and singled, driving in three runs, for Clemson. Zachary, Paller, Hudson, and Al Long all had two hits each for the Tar Heels.

Carolina returnes to Chapel Hill next week to end the season with games with Duke, State and UVA.

Kirkman

Kirkman, Sutton On All-Scholastic Team

Two Carolina football players, Ed Sutton and Bill Kirkman, have been named to the 1954 American People Encyclopedia's All-Scholastic Atlantic Coast Conference Football Team.

Special awards for the honor consist of a 20-volume set of the American Peoples Encyclopedia, with each book personalized with the name of the recipient, and a hand-lettered certificate recognizing the achievements of each athlete-scholar.

Kirkman finished his football career at Carolina last year after four years of outstanding play at the center spot. He came to UNC after playing in the All-American High School Bowl and also played in the Shrine Bowl. He is a Phi Beta Kappa and lives at Burlington.

Sutton, a rising junior from Cullowhee, was a fine halfback on last year's team. For the season he had a 11.2 rushing average. Against Wake Forest he rushed four times for 127 yards and scored two touchdowns to break the game wide open. He is counted on to be a regular in 1955.

Sutton is a pre-med student on a Morehead Scholarship. The winners of these scholarships are selected after intensive screening, with scholarship, leadership, and all-around qualifications basis for choice. In addition to being a football letterman, Sutton also earned a letter in basketball.

SPE Meet Underway

The local chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon is host to brother chapters from district five at a two-day convention ending today.

The meeting is being attended by incoming SPE officers from UNC, Wake Forest, N. C. State, Duke, High Point, Lenoir Rhyne, Davidson and the University of South Carolina.

The convention is held each year for the purpose of "discussing mutual duties and problems of the chapters' officers, to exchange ideas and to discuss national conclave attendance," said the spokesman.

Last night a dinner and stag party in honor of officers was held at the UNC chapter's house.

Meetings are scheduled to resume this morning at 9 o'clock, with the awarding of the Governor's Cup to the most improved chapter.

UNC won the cup last year, and is ineligible to win it again this year, the spokesman said.

Scarlet Scott's Horse Is Painted Again

Vandals painted up Scarlet Scott's pink horse again last week. The horse, a wooden statue used to advertise Miss Scott's E. Franklin St. antique doll business, was painted like a zebra sometime during the night. A month ago, vandals painted the horse with red polka dots. Later, they ran the horse up the campus flagpole. Miss Scott, who came to Chapel Hill to rest and build up her health, said she wished "whoever did it would come and see me. I suppose it's publicity they want and if that's right then I'd have their pictures taken with the horse so they could say 'This is our handiwork'."—Giduz photo.

Dormitories' Social Notes

Interdormitory Council President Lewis Brumfield yesterday released details of several dormitory functions and announced future events.

Everett Dormitory, said Brumfield, held a Hogan's Lake get-together last week. Residents, he said, "played volleyball and gorged themselves with barbecue." Two top-floor Everett men were guests at a surprise birthday party in their social room.

Joyner Dormitory recently had a dinner at the Pines, Brumfield said.

Aycock Dorm is planning a party at Hogan's Lake "as their last event of the year," according to Brumfield. Final arrangements will be announced later.

Steve Phelps has been elected president of Cobb, UNC's largest dormitory, said Brumfield. New editor of the Corn Cobb, the dormitory's weekly newspaper, is Charlie Barrett.

Residents of Cobb and their dates will have a party tonight at Jack's, Brumfield said, and the dormitory's new basement social room will be opened, "barring any further complications in finishing up the work," with a reception and dance.

Winston Dormitory had a picnic last week in Battle Woods, said Brumfield, along with a dance and party on the lawn.

Several Leave WUNC-TV Staff; Appropriations Cut, Insecurity Held As Reasons

Misleading Promises, Confusion Are Named

The prospect of reduced appropriations and staff insecurity has dealt a serious blow to University educational television, with several "big names" having already departed and other departures already in prospect.

Charges of misleading promises and confused policies also have cast a shadow on the future of WUNC-TV.

The General Assembly, meeting in Raleigh, last week cut educational television appropriations to $223,610 for the next biennium. Speculation here yesterday centered on what will happen to present plans, programs and allocation of funds.

The three University institutions must now get along with $108,000 a year for television and divide that amount among them.

A spokesman for the Chapel Hill studio said yesterday many changes will have to be made and that the programs which have been running to 41 hours weekly must be drastically cut, perhaps in half.

The organization built up over the last few months has already been much altered, owing not only to the reduced funds in prospect but to internal reasons.

Robert Snyder, who was invited here to take part in the educational television plan and was for 10 months head of the motion picture division, left for New York and Washington yesterday. He took his family and furniture with him.

Snyder was the winner of an Academy award for his film, "The Titan." Here he was employed chiefly on a film for the State Highway Safety Program supposed to cost $100,000.

Frank Waldman, sports announcer, resigned several weeks ago and has returned to Los Angeles. He left the staff when it was decided to drop the televising of sports.

His brother, Thomas A. Waldman, employed as a writer, has also resigned.

Anthony Guggenheimer, another writer, resigned over the weekend.

There have been other staff changes and others are in prospect, due not entirely to reduced funds.

Some members of the staff which is now breaking up or who have resigned or been released in the past have not concealed their dissatisfaction with their experiences here.

A few charge the University with bringing them here under too-rosy promises. Others allege divided counsels and confused policies.

They say they have been "let down" at a time when it is difficult for men with families to obtain other employment.

Part of the dissatisfaction has been due, according to studio spokesmen, to a new and inexperienced system of control.

Dean Henry Brandis of the Law School is chairman of a local faculty council of 10 members which acts as in an advisory capacity on programming. This council is reduced to seven members when meeting with corresponding bodies from the Raleigh and Greensboro units of the Greater University.

Dean Brandis said yesterday that so far as he knew the new situation created by the reduced budget had not been officially discussed, since the combined council acts only on matters of programming.

So far the television studio has acted independently of the Extension Division of the Universtiy. There are reports that in the future there will be closer cooperation, and perhaps union, between the two.

Those persons who have been most actively associated with the educational television experiment have been Vice-President W. D. Carmichael Jr.; Kay Kyser, who has the title of consultant, and Robert F. Schenkkan, director of television for the Greater University. Lately Provost J. Harris Purks has acted as a representative of President Gordon Gray.

Di Tonight

Tonight at 8 o'clock the Dialectic Senate will debate a bill calling for an organization of World Government. Proponents of the bill, led by Senator Charlie Dean who will introduce it, are expected to contend that world government is the only alternative to chaos. Enemies of the bill will probably argue that world government would be impractical and unworkable.

Carolina Students Vote Today On Constitutional Amendment To Allow Legislature Power To Raise Fees

Leaders Not Saying Very Much

Student leaders were rather reticent yesterday when asked to state their stand on today's vote to allow student government to raise activities fees $5.

Action of the state Legislature raising out-of-state tuition dampened the fee-ardor of many, including Atty. General David Reid, who said "The action of the Legislature was disturbing . . . and any further fee increase will be felt more acutely."

Bob Young, new president of Graham Memorial Activities Board, reiterated his statement of last week—if the Legislature passed the tuition bill and took more money he "would oppose" the raise.

Director of Student Activities Roy Holsten yesterday also came out against the raise, saying the fee raise problem "needed more study."

Last week President Don Fowler came out against the raise. "I am opposed to any fee raise," he said.

The Daily Tar Heel has come out editorially in favor of the fee raise.

Joel Fleishman and Jim Turner, both Student Party leaders who could not be reached yesterday, have previously said they were in favor of the fee raise.

STUDENTS VOTING IN LAST CAMPUS ELECTION
. . . student fee raise comes up for vote today

Could Hike Activities Fees $5

Carolina students will vote today on a proposed student fee raise.

If passed, the constitutional amendment will allow the student Legislature to raise student fees from $18 to not more than $23.

Three thousand students must vote in the referendum in order for the bill to pass. Thus, at least 1,501 students must vote for the amendment to enact it into law.

Polling places will be open in all men's and women's dormitories, Scuttlebutt, Lenoir Hall and Gerrard Hall. Students must present identification cards in order to cast ballots.

Miss Patsy Daniels, retiring Elections Board chairman, yesterday urged all students to vote.

THE BALLOT

The official amendment ballot was released yesterday by Miss Daniels. It states that "Section six of Article I of the student Constitution is hereby declared null and void."

Section six provides that "the student Legislature shall not alter the fee structure for a given school year later than April 1 of the school year immediately preceding. The fee collections recognized by the University at the time this constitution is ratified shall remain until the student Legislature alters or approves them."

Students will vote for or against leaving Section six in the constitution.

Under the amendment, "Article I, Section four, Subsection A, shall be changed . . ." The constitution now says "The student Legislature shall have power . . . to levy and collect all student fees except athletic fees, but total fees shall not exceed $20 per calendar year excluding both summer school sessions unless the maximum total amount of fees levied be changed by a majority vote of more than 50 percent of the student body . . ."

The amendment would change the subsection to read ". . . but the total fee shall not exceed $23 per calendar year, excluding both summer school sessions . . ."

Most political observers yesterday said they expected a light vote.

YDC Names Graham President

The UNC Young Democrat's Club named William E. Graham president for 1955-56 in its last session of the semester last night.

Graham was chosen over Bill Formyduvall by a 40-15 plurality.

Formyduvall moved down a notch and was elected first vice president by acclamation.

Also picked without opposition was Charlie Dean. Dean captured the second vice presidency.

Given the nod of party approval for treasurer was Gerald Parker.

Weymon Stephenson was named secretary over Ruth Dalton.

Named to the Club Executive Committee were:

Larry McElroy, Bob Roberts, Andre Evans, A. W. Sapp, Ted Rosenthal, Ruth Dalton and Bob Thomas.

UNC Second In South In Doctoral Degrees

The University of North Carolina ranked second in the South in the number of doctoral degrees conferred during the past school year and third in the number of doctoral fields offered, according to the annual report from Librarian Andrew H. Horn to University administration.

The University of Texas at Austin ranked first in the number of doctorate degrees conferred with 134, and UNC was second with 102. Johns Hopkins University came in third with 87.

Johns Hopkins ranked first in the number of fields in which doctorates are awarded with a total of 43 fields. Texas was second with 40, and UNC was third with 36. None of the above figures includes doctor's degrees awarded in the field of medicine, which includes in the case of the University at Chapel Hill, the School of Public Health and the School of Dentistry.

Dr. Horn pointed out that the libraries of Texas and Johns Hopkins contain well over a million volumes each, while the books in the UNC Library number approximately 725,000.

"Duke, with over a million volumes in its library, conferred fewer doctoral degrees (67) and offered fewer fields (22) than UNC," Dr. Horn explained. "Virginia with a larger library than Carolina's, confined itself to 25 fields in which 42 degrees were conferred. Kentucky, with a library nearly the size of Carolina's, conferred 34 doctoral degrees and offered 16 fields. It is amply evident why North Carolina is forced to borrow heavily from her good neighbor Duke and from other libraries; but we are relaying on this service far more than we should."

Eighth Annual Folk Festival Set For June

The eighth annual Carolina Folk Festival will be held June 9, 10 and 11 in Kenan Stadium, Festival Director Bascom Lamar Lunsford of Leicester announced yesterday.

Lunsford, now making his headquarters in Chapel Hill to work out program details, reported "the greatest interest in history throughout the state," and predicted that the 1955 festival will be "by all odds the best yet."

Around 650 string bands, ballad singers, clog and square dancers from North Carolina and other southern states are expected to participate in the event.

As in the past, the program will get underway each of the three nights at "early candlelight" and continue until the performers are through, Lunsford said.

The festival, sponsored by the N. C. Folklore Council, is under the direction of the UNC Extension Division, headed by Russell Grumman.

Lunsford, who has been visiting schools, colleges and communities in all parts of the state to line up performers, said a good deal of new talent will join the traditional and familiar participants this year, giving a "cross-section of the floklore in song and dance of the region."

Special guest performers will be the 20-member Valley Spring Dance team, who have been frequent winners in mountain competition. Other musicans and dancers will come from the Piedmont section and coastal counties.

Such well-known performers as George Pegram, Iredell banjo-picker; J. Laurel Johnson, the Jewish Arts Festival On Exhibit Now

The Jewish Arts Festival, sponsored by the Hillel Foundation, will wind up its season's activities with an exhibition of Jewish art in the Morehead Planetarium during this month.

The exhibit will consist of contemporary work by a number of Jewish artists, among them William Levy, Theresa Bernstein, Ilya Schor and Raymond A. Katz. The collection is valued at more than $3,000, according to a Hillel spokesman.

The paintings will be shown in the North Science Hall of the Planetarium daily from 1 to 5 p.m. and 7:30 to 10 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.; and Sunday, 1 to 10 p.m. There will be no admission charged.

Rabbi Ephraim Rosenzweig, director of the Hillel Foundation, announced that bids for the paintings will be accepted. Additional information about the paintings may be secured from Rabbi Rosenzweig, Ronald Kreigsman, 514 Audubon Drive, Greensboro, and Eli Evans, 1401 Fairview Drive, Durham.

SP Approves Committee Chairmen For 1955-56

Fleishman was named by acclama-

The Student Party filled several legislative seat vacancies and committee chairmanships in its final meeting of the semester last night.

Last portion of the session was devoted to talks by senior party members.

In elections, Gwen Lemley and Pat McBane were named to fill two vacant seats in dorm women's districts.

Long-time party member Joel tion to fill a vacant post in dorm men's III.

Chairman Bob Harrington, with party approval, approved committee chairmanships:

Publicity, Brandon Kincaid; Membership, Joan Palmer, and Social, Jim Armstrong.

After elections were concluded Charlie Wolf, in an "old soldier speech," said. "I think the Dean of Student Affairs' office is against student government. Student needs are not being met."

Marshals For Graduation Are Chosen

Dr. J. C. Lyons, Faculty Commencement Marshal and head of the commencement marshals, yesterday announced the list of marshals for June commencement.

Dr. Lyons announced Ogburn Yates Jr., Asheboro, as Chief Marshal. Yates automatically becomes Chief Marshal because he holds the office of senior class president.

Final Exam Schedule

The University Library will be open until 10 p.m. on the Saturday night (May 21) before final examinations, according to an announcement yesterday. Circulation, Reserve, Business Administration, Current Affairs and Reference departments will be staffed.

Library hours between the end of spring semester and the beginning of summer school are listed as follows:

Half Of B. C. Remedy Company Is Honored

One of North Carolina and Durham's foremost pioneer pharmacists has been honored in memoriam by the establishment of a special fund in the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Research Foundation for use in the UNC School of Pharmacy.

The Germain Bernard Memorial Fund, in the form of a $10,000 gift, has been set up by C. T. Council of Durham honoring his late partner and preceptor. Bernard and Council organized the B. C. Remedy Company, of which the latter is now president.

Just as Bernard was for many years a leader in the advancement of his profession through the State Pharmaceutical Assn., so has Council continued the professional promotion, aiding in creation of the Pharmaceutical Research Foundation.

Incorporated in 1946 by the Pharmaceutical Assn., the foundation has disbursed since then to the University a total of $49,000 for use in the School of Pharmacy. Its permanent endowment funds total $110,000 at the present time.

Foundation funds provide for such needs as graduate research fellowship, research supplies and equipment, special library materials and research assistance to professors.

In his creation of the Germain Bernard Memorial Fund, Council cites Bernard's "long career as a pharmacist of unusual ability and business judgment" and notes the "affectionate memory" of his own long association with Bernard.

Bernard began his career in pharmacy in Durham at the age

Roman Totenburg To Appear At Meredith

Roman Totenburg, celebrated violinist, will appear at Meredith College tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the college auditorium.

Totenburg's program will include Spring Soata by Beethoven, Violin Concerto in E Minor, by Mendelssohn, Hoe Down by Copeland and works by Bartok, J. Nin and Szymanowski.

Student Traffic Group First Meet Tomorrow

The Student Traffic Committee, promised and appointed by President Don Fowler, will hold its first meeting tomorrow at 2 p.m. in the Woodhouse Conference Room, announced chairman of the committee Layton McCurdy yesterday.

Last week Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver issued a report concerning the traffic problem in reply to the concern felt by the trustees over the student cars. The report promised that car regulations and registration would be strictly enforced.

Justice Will Sting

"Injustice is relatively easy to bear; what stings is justice."

H. L. Mencken, who often had things pretty nearly buttoned down, laid down here a truth which the state of North Carolina, as it awaits the Supreme Court's mandate on public school desegregation, would do well to reflect upon.

Justice will sting, if it is to be done in the North Carolina public schools. The South, by years of injustice to a minority race, has made for itself a bed of thorns. The Supreme Court acted as an arbiter of justice when it made it fairly certain that the South must eventually lie down among the thorns. Yet we blame the Court as villain, forgetting that we ourselves made the bed in the first place.

All Southerners who have lived and matured in the region should be aware of the great problems involved in striking segregation from the schools—the dangers of haste, the treachery of extremism. We hope we are no exception to that.

But (and again to borrow from Mr. Mencken's phraseology) "one thinks of the vast interstellar spaces" as he listens for a single voice in North Carolina which takes a positive and progressive voice in the matter. No one assumes persistent leadership toward implementation of the high court's decision; no one cares to tell North Carolinians at large that justice must be done and that it will sting.

We lay silent while the General Assembly abolished tenure for public school teachers and dismissed prominent members from the University Board of Trustees. We watched the state's Assistant Attorney General go to Washington and tell the Supreme Court that "mixing of the races in the public schools throughout the state cannot be accomplished." We stood by as Professor George's petition claimed success while opposing petitions died.

What could outsiders conclude but that there is uniformity of opinion on the question of desegregation, and that it is all arrayed against the Supreme Court's decision?

There is a strange paradox in many views. Most of the state press and public leaders cry out against extremism and exclaim loudly that the role of the moderate will be obliterated if something is not done.

Yet these spokesmen for the "practical" and "moderate" viewpoint have placed no positive, practical, or moderate program before the public eye. They criticize the extremists but when it comes to suggestions they have none. Even the once-belabored word "gradualism" has passed from their vocabularies. There is much talk of moderation and practicalism, but where "ethical and moral right" has gone is anyone's guess. We have said we cannot be legislated into a state of blessedness and have now fallen mute.

John N. Popham, New York Times reporter for the South, recently attacked the "stereotyped idea" that all Southerners favor segregation. "It is the multiplicity of views in the South," Mr. Popham explained, "that lets us know that we are simply facing human beings in cultural value terms . . ."

But North Carolina, still enjoying references to herself as a progressive state, is vacant of a "multiplicity of views." When that happens, as it is happening now, the bed of thorns gets thornier; and the sting of justice, when it comes, will be deep and bitter.

Spivakovsky: Just Like A Hi Fi Record

J. A. C. Dunn

WE WENT TO the North Carolina Symphony concert the other night to hear the music of Messrs. Beethoven, Brahms, Sebilius, and whoever it was that wrote the "Polovetskian Dances," to hear Mr. Tossy Spivakovsky play his Stradivarius violin, and to see Dr. Benjamin Swalin, the conductor of the orchestra, do his contortionist act.

Dr. Swalin's conducting was just as frenzied as it always is, but at the same time it was not quite as madly abandoned. During the intermission we heard a comment from an eagle-eared and hawk-eyed music lover to the effect that at three different points during the Brahms symphony Dr. Sawlin had been off beat. We pointed out that it didn't affect the orchestra, which it didn't, and added that we liked a bit of showmanship with our concerts. When Dr. Swalin conducted, he used both arms, one hand, his baton, his shoulders, his head, his hair, his face and his tail coat. The result was excellent music.

TOSSY SPIVAKOVSKY, the soloist of the evening, was exactly what we had always imagined a solo violinist to be. We had never seen a great violinist in the flesh, but Spivakovsky easily measured up to (and, indeed, over) the mark.

He came on stage, bowed, nodded brightly to Dr. Swalin; the orchestra started, Spivakovsky played, chills ran up and down our spine. "It is impossible," we thought to ourself, "that this can be a real man up there." But the man with the Stradivarius had expressions on his face — of intense concentration, of compassion (whether for the music or for the Stradivarius we could not tell); he moved back and forth from foot to foot as he played, up and down with his right arm, and in an almost pyrotechnic display of fingering with his left hand; he spoke — with a slight European accent when he announced his encore; other people seemed to consider him a man — the whole first violin section of the orchestra craned its collective neck to watch him play; he tuned the Stradivarius between movements, wiped the strings when he wasn't playing, mopped his brow from time to time (at one point we even heard the identification bracelet on his right wrist rattle). He was indeed a man.

AFTER THE CONCERT we went backstage. We stood for a few awesome moments listening to Mr. Spivakovsky chatting with admirers. He is a small man with a dark, hard face, long black hair, beautifully shaped hands, and an impeccable set of European manners. We ambled on and watched the orchestra packing up. Violins went into big trunks, bass viols were put into what looked like coffins, kettle drums slipped into slightly larger but less musical kettle drums made of leather. The players exited out the stage door and entered into busses. In a matter of minutes Memorial Hall was completely empty except for Alpha Phi Omega boys picking up derelict programs.

The last player to leave was Mr. Spivakovsky. We saw him, accompanied only by a much taller man then he, walking across the parking lot in an overcoat and a silk scarf (it was a warm night), carrying his Stradivarius in a canvas- covered case.

As we left Memorial Hall ourself, we heard a comment from the darkness: "That's a good orchestra: It sounded just like a Columbia record."

Two Views On The Student Fee Hike

Creasy Casts Vote Against The Raise

Editors:

On Tuesday, May 10, it will be up to all of us to decide the fate of the little discussed five dollar fee raise referendum. Just because there has been little discussion on this matter, however, is no sign that it is not a very important question worthy of careful consideration and thought by everyone.

To many students in the University a five dollar fee raise would hardly be noticed, but there are many students here who quite frankly cannot afford it.

SERIOUS

A five dollar fee raise in itself seems relatively insignificant but when we realize that there are other areas of the University contemplating a fee raise, and add five dollars here and ten dollars there, we quickly, without realizing it, are pricing education at the University out of hands of the many students in this state. Eastern and Western Carolina colleges are growing by leaps and bounds simply because more and more students are finding education at the University too expensive. This is a grave situation and serious problem.

In January of this year it was learned that the University's budget had been drastically cut and that the difference would probably have to be made up by either higher tuition or higher room rent. Immediately the Administration, faculty and student government went to work to counteract this proposal of increased tuition of increased room rent, because everyone felt that the cost of living for a student was too high at present. In every argument it was pointed out to the state legislature that the students at the University could not afford an increase in costs of any kind.

EFFECT

Wheather this past action has had any effect on the legislature or whether our action on Tuesday will have any effect on them in the future is, of course, important, but more important still is a thing called integrity — Can we the students in all good faith do something that we have agreed we cannot afford to do? — that of meeting any additional costs.

It is my hope that each person will weigh heavily these questions before coming to any definite conclusions. But it is also my hope on Tuesday May 10, the Student Body will defeat the proposed fee raise.

Lipman Says Vote Yes In Fee Raise

Editors:

Today the student body will be called on to vote for or against the student Legislatures's amendment to increase the student fee level. Being a B.A. major, I feel that I am very practical and would like to look at this amendment from a practical point.

First let's consider exactly what we are voting for. As the student Constitution now reads the student Legislature can collect from the student body fees amounting to $20 maximum per student. The proposed amendment would raise this maximum to $23 per student. At the present time the actual amount of student fees collected by the student Legislature is $18 per student. Now the amendment does not raise student fees to $23 but gives the Legislature the power to collect fees from the students aomunting to not more than $23. But let's not have anyone deceived by these facts and figures; there must be some reason for the amendment other than raising the maximum level of student fees. What you will be voting on in reality is a $5 increase; but is this so bad?

Is this money needed, and can the students afford this fee increase are the two main issues of the coming vote.

I say that this money is needed, and any students who sat in on the legislative sessions which passed the 1955-56 student government budget know that this money is needed. If the students were aware of the extent the budget was cut to bring the expenses down to equal the income for next year; each and every one would make it his duty to vote for this amendment. Yes every student was affected by these budget cuts; every student who lives in a dormitory was affected by a cut in the IDC budget, every student who reads a Daily Tar Heel, who gets a Yack, or Carolina Quarterly was affected by cuts in these budgets, just a few of the ones which had to be cut inorder to balance student government's budget. By a $5 increase instudent fees the Student Legislature would be able to bring the budgets of these organizations up to the amounts they requested and allow them to carry on their functions in the best interest of the students. Another student organization which will benefit greatly from a fee increase is Graham Memorial. Graham Memorial has been doing a tremendous job as our student union, but unless the fee increase passes it will be unable to expand and increase its activities in the near future.

To the second question; can the students afford the increase, I say, generally, YES, in light of the benefits derived from the extra funds, (Which will total approximately $26,500) and the small cost to each student, ($5 a year cost each student $.625 a month or about $.14 a week for the school year). Is this too much to ask the students for when they will be benefiting themselves through the many organizations which will receive these funds, and what are these organizations but students.

Ike Keeps Mamie Out Of Politics

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower sought to take the question of Mrs. Eisenhower's health out of politics with his reassuring comments at his press conference. The President's tone and mood were just right — sincere and positive but not overdone.

The President rarely takes such flights into personalities. He is said to have consented to this one on the advice of Republicans who feared a drift toward a situation where the President and they themselves might appear to be lacking in consideration for Mrs. Eisenhower.

What happened was that Republicans were trapped by their own pleasure on catching Democratic Chairman Butler in a political error. A newcomer to Washington, Mr. Butler made the tactical mistake of discussing the President's wife in public. His remarks about her health and its possible influence on her husband's plans had been in the newspapers, but he made them sound his own.

IRKED

The President was irked and Republicans, only too glad to humor their best asset at no cost to them, leaped joyfully into the fray. They not only razzed Butler, who was certainly ill-advised, but they gave the impression that the whole story was stuff and nonsense.

About this time Mrs. Eisenhower contracted the respiratory infection which sent her to the farm at Gettysburg to recover. This got little attention but when she returned to the White House after a month, kept some engagements and then had to cancel a week's schedule, the story naturally was revived. Calls began coming in to headquarters asking what the real lowdown was.

The President says his wife is a good healthy person though not as robust and strong as some people. She is having trouble too, he said, with some of the drugs commonly used to treat infections.

He also said she had been better the past two years than during the previous ten. Many people who were associated with the Eisenhowers in the past say this is clearly true; that she has done much more in the White House than she was in the habit of doing. One old and close friend commented last summer that "Mamie has surprised us all and of course we are delighted."

'FRAIL'

People in this group like to apply the word "frail" to Mrs. Eisenhower's health. She is, they will say, on the frail side.

Democrats froth at the mouth over what they claim is the success Republicans have in giving the impression it is somehow not cricket to discuss the Eisenhowers personally. Their frustration is the more acute since they recall how freely the Roosevelts and Trumans were commented upon.

The hazard of the Republican technique is that should something untoward and unexpected occur, they are subject to the charge that they knew it but covered up.

When the President calmly explains that Mrs. Eisenhower just can't do as much as some people, he has established ground he can stand on.

WEEKENDS: Weekends are indeed wonderful, wonderful things. You leave class at noon on Saturday and have 42 full hours of free time before you go back into class at 8 o'clock Monday morning. And right then as you go into that 8 a. m. class on Monday, you start thinking about how to spend your next weekend. Those 42 wonderful hours, every 2,520 minutes of it, and deciding how to spend them is a very important job.

But as the week progresses, you figure it out. When that Saturday noon bell rings, you are going to start by taking your time to get out of class. Then a long dinner, a longer time to read the letter (which doesn't ever arrive until the following Monday), a glance at television, and then before you waste the whole weekend you had better start catching up on sleep, studying, etc.

And so you plan: 20 hours of sleep, 10 hours of Studying, 10 hours of required reading, four hours of eating, and six hours of goofing off. Of course, you have already used up eight more hours than you had to start with, but anyway it's a good schedule.

Then the weekend arrives. You rush through your dinner, glance in your mail box, see a couple of afternoon shows on TV, make a quick run uptown, play a couple of sets of tennis, shower, eat supper, and before you know it you are almost late for your date.

And the evening passes so fast. You really plan to go in early, but just made it to the door before they lock your date out. But then all the rest of the weekend is free. You make it home, pick up a book, listen to the record playing, hit the sack, and the first thing you know its Sunday afternoon.

You jump up, shower, get a late lunch, hurry back to study, clear the room of boys just in time to get ready for supper, eat, come home, dress for the "short" Sunday night date, get home at midnight, study for an hour, or at least until you fall asleep.

Then the first thing you know, its Monday morning, and you rush like mad to get to your 8 o'clock class. And right then you start thinking about how to spend your next weekend; namely by catching up on your studying and sleeping.

GERMANS: Les Brown and his band made studying a lot easier for a lot of students to forget Saturday. His music was good: the slow ones made good dancing; the fast ones good listening, (as one student put it). Of course it does seem like it would have been better had Mr. Brown played more of his novelties at the concert and more slow dance music at the dance, especially there at the last.

The band, all in pink jackets, was very informal, and, unlike some of the other bands that go on tour, seemed to be enjoying themselves as much as those that paid to get in. Then there was the usual Carolina added attraction at the concert: the dawg. Real cute little fellow, who seemed to have a real ear for music—the classics, that is.

ARRANGEMENT: The music was slow and dreamy, but quite a few couples were still standing around the band stand. The attractive girl vocalist looked out over the crowd (probably thinking of what the next line of the song was); a high school girl, or thereabouts, looked up at the vocalist (probably thinking how nice it would be to sing for a big band); Les Brown looked down at the high school girl (probably thinking how happy the girl looked with the arms of her date around her); the high school girl's date looked up at Les Brown (probably thinking about why that guy Brown could be looking so straight at his date.)

BEACH: Exciting beach weekend—getting stopped by three patrolmen and having two flat tires.

PICNIC: The afternoon was warm, the fire smoky, and everything else was just about right to have a nice picnic. The crowd gathered, the noise increased, and everybody was in the mood to picnic (new way of saying "to party").

It was the German (language, that is) Club's annual outing, and all of the students were in the best form, including invited guests. One guest, who took another language, found his German didn't go over too well, so from then on out stuck to English. The skits in German were very good; even those who didn't understand a word of German laughed in the right places.

Everybody seemed to have a good time stuffing themselves with hot dogs, potato chips, and soft drinks, but wished they had been as thoughtful as the couple who brought just enough beer for themselves.

BORROWED: From a letter that begins "Dear TIME Subscriber" comes the following: "Spring turns a young man's fancy . . . it makes the grass greener, the afternoons longer, and coeds prettier."

Sigma Chi Wins Title

Sigma Chi took advantage of six hits and four Chi Psi errors yesterday to capture the fraternity softball championship 9-6. Mitchell pitched the win and led the hitting for the winners with two hits. McKinney had three hits for the losers.

Sigma Chi and Joyner dorm will meet Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock on Field 4 for the Campus Intramural Championship. Joyner defeated Dental School for the dorm division crown last week.

Fencing Event Starts Today

The annual campus individual fencing competition in all weapons will begin today. All entrants will sign up on the list posted on the Intramurals Bulletin Board opposite Intramurals office in Woollen Gym. Entries close tomorrow (Wed.) at 6 p.m. Awards will be given to the winners of the first three places in each weapon.

Any male student in the school is eligible to compete and the competition will be conducted on a triple elimination basis. That is, a fencer in any given round of competition for first place who is defeated will still be eligible to compete in the corresponding round of the 2nd place competition and if defeated there, the corresponding round for 3rd place.

All three weapons competitions are open to any individual, who may enter one, two or all three.

Ticket Books Available To Student Wives

Students who have wives living in Chapel Hill are entitled to purchase season athletic ticket books for their wives at the special rate of ten dollars, it was announced today by the Athletic Department. The books for the 1955-56 school year went on sale Monday at the athletic office. Applications may be made at the ticket office in Woollen Gym. If the student knows that his wife will be living in Chapel Hill next year it will be to his advantage to place his order now. The ticket books, at ten dollars, represent a considerable saving, it was pointed out, as season football tickets alone sell to the general public for twenty dollars.

Seixas Pays Visit To Old Stomping Grounds

Vic Seixas and his attractive wife (above) returned to familiar ground over the weekend when they returned to Chapel Hill for the centennial celebration of Carolina's Chi Psi fraternity chapter. Seixas left Chapel Hill Sunday for Philadelphia, from where he will sail to Europe Thursday for a tennis tour there.

Slate Ends With 'Pack

After taming William and Mary's Indians yesterday, Carolina's varsity tennis team will meet a weak North Carolina State Team this afternoon at 3:00.

Only one of the first six men on the varsity played against William and Mary yesterday, that being Ronnie Kerdasha who played in the no. two position and won with little trouble, 6-2, 6-4.

Sam Handel, a senior playing his third year with the Carolina team, had a new experience as he played in the number one position for the first time in his career and defeated Ed Phillips in the only singles match to go three sets.

With the exception of Kerdasha, who played yesterday, the first six men on the varsity took a break, after having returned from the Northern trip which left them with a 19-1 record for the season.

The summaries:

Singles: Handel (UNC) defeated Phillips, 6-1, 4-6, 6-2; Kerdasha (UNC) defeated Reel, 6-2, 6-4; Bortner (UNC) defeated Terry, 6-3, 6-4; Hudgins (UNC) defeated Reynolds, 6-1, 7-5; Livingston (UNC) defeated Swann, 6-0, 6-0, and Van Winkle (UNC) defeated Clay, 6-0, 6-0.

Doubles: Bortner and Handel (UNC) defeated Phillips and Reel, 6-1, 6-0; Hudgins and Livingston (UNC) defeated Perry and Reynolds, 6-0, 6-2; and Kasser and Van Winkle (UNC) defeated Clay and Swann, 6-2, 6-1.

Tar Babies Halted 1-0 On One-Hitter

By JIM FINE

A lone single in the fourth inning by catcher Guy Moore spoiled State freshman pitcher, Roger Hagwood's no-hitter here yesterday.

The State hurler seemed to have the Carolina batters baffled with his variety of pitches and a good change-up. He struck out seven freshman batters, while giving up only three bases on balls. Charlie Cross went the distance for the Tar Babies, pitching a masterful game. He was touched for only five hits, the one big blow being an inside-the-park home run in the seventh inning by State first baseman Jack McGlamery.

The Tar Babies almost scored in the second when Moore tried for home on an error by the State second baseman. However he was forced back at third on a beautiful throw to the plate by the first baseman. Hagwood then struck out the next Tar Baby batter to end the threat.

The game was reeled off in the short time of two hours and five minutes before a sparse crowd who sensed a pitchers' duel early in the game, as both pitchers were very effective.

Joe Temple, Tar Baby centerfielder, was credited with a total of eight put-outs.

Golf, Mural Teams At DU

Two groups of Carolina athletes take the short hop over to Durham today to participate in events at Duke this afternoon.

Carolina's golfers, undefeated but once tied in seven outings this spring, will wind up their regular season schedule against the Blue Devils. Following today's match, the Tar Heels rest until the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament opens at Winston-Salem on Thursday. The ACC event will run through Saturday afternoon.

The other group of Carolina athletes will be participating in the annual Big Four Day at Duke. The group of non-varsity athletes will compete against like groups from Wake Forest, N. C. State and Duke in ping-pong, volleyball, golf, tennis, horseshoes, handball, badminton and softball. The Carolina representatives will be chosen from intramural classes, after extensive try-outs conducted by the Physical Education Department.

Allen Re-Issues Call To Varsity Soccer Team

Coach Marvin Allen recalled all Carolina soccer players today for the resumption of practice from now until the end of the semester.

The players are requested to report to Coach Allen at four o'clock this afternoon.

Order Of Old Well To Hold Initiation

The Order of the Old Well will hold its annual initiation today.

The program for today's ceremonies includes a gathering of Neophytes at the Old Well at 3:45 p.m. for the annual picture, the welcoming speech by Don Geiger, president of the group, in Gerrard Hall, an address by Dean of Awards Ernest Mackie, signing of the roll and the election of new officers.

The ceremonies will be followed by a reception honoring the new initiates at Graham Memorial at 5 p'clock.

The group, organized on the premise that too much service was being done in the University and too little recognition for that service was forthcoming, had as a major aim the establishment of an honorary in which all subjective judgment of prospective members is eliminated. The point system upon which the honorary operates is administered by an executive committee made up of the four officers and three members-at-large. It takes into account such activities as student government, scholarship, athletics, self-help, publications, forensics and campus organizations.

The officers for this year have been Don Geiger, president; Herb Brown, vice-president; Paul Likins, secretary-treasurer; Bill Calvert, Miss Sally Winn, Rollie Tillman and Charlie Yarborough, committeemen.

Lewis Plans Outing

Plans are being made by the Lewis Dormitory Social Committee for a weiner roast and party, according to dormitory Vice-President Tom Brake.

Tentative arrangements, Brake said, set 6 p.m. Friday at Hogan's Lake for time and place for the annual party.

Covering The Campus

The men's orientation counselors for next fall will meet tonight at 7 o'clock in Carroll Hall.

Anyone who is interested in working with the orientation committee should go to the student government office on the second floor of Graham Memorial, according to Burt Veazy, orientation chairman.

The University Club will meet tonight at 7:30 in Roland Parker Lounge 3.

The University Club Spring Carnival, to be held Friday, will be discussed.

All representatives are urged to bring their application blanks and entry fees for the carnival with them, according to a club spokesman. If a representative is unable to attend the meeting, the applications should be sent by someone else, he said.

All counselors for Freshman Camp will meet Thursday in Phillips Annex at 7 p.m.

The meeting is very important, according to a spokesman for the group. Each counselor will be given an opportunity to lead a discussion group so that he may go to Freshman Camp with some actual practice, said the spokesman.

The North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association and American Pharmaceutical Association student branches will meet in Howell Hall at 8 o'clock tonight. Awards will be given.

General College students should go to 308 South Building to make appointments for preregistration before Friday. Friday is the last day for preregistration.

The Dental Dames will hold their final meeting of the year tonight at 8 o'clock in the Victory Village Day Nursery. New officers will be installed, and a party will be given for senior members.

The officers for the coming year are Mrs. Dan Floyd, president; Mrs. Jim Hauser and Mrs. Sidney Hood, vice-presidents; Mrs. Lewis Bratton, secretary; Mrs. Foy Sherman, treasurer; Mrs. Robert Poole Jr., social chairman; Mrs. John Atwater Jr., publicity chairman; Mrs. Murray Holland, senior class representative; Mrs. Bill Odom, junior class representative, and Mrs. William Riddle, sophomore class representative.

A representative of the Real Silk Hosiery Mills Inc. will be on campus Thursday to talk with students interested in commission sales jobs for the summer or part time during the school year.

Sutton's Drug Store here has announced a national letter writing contest being sponsored by Monogram Models Inc., manufacturer of two 1955 Cadillac model assembly kits.

First prize in the contest is a $5,000 Cadillac Coupe de Ville, second prize is a $1,000 United States Saving Bond, third prize is a $500 U. S. Saving Bond and seven additional prizes of $100 bonds each for the fourth to 10th place winners.

Entries must be on an official entry blank, which is packed with each Cadillac model kit. Kits and completely finished models are on display at Suttons Drug Store.

To enter the contest it is necessary to finish the sentence "I like the Monogram all-plastic Cadillac model because . . ." in 25 words or less.

Press Club Banquet Slated For Tonight

The University Press Club will hold its annual spring awards banquet at the Pines Restaurant tonight with Chancellor Robert B. House as main speaker.

Press Club President Earl McGuire, Danville, Va., has announced that the dinner will honor two School of Journalism faculty members, former Dean O. J. Coffin and Phillips Russell, who have each completed more than 20 years of service.

Winners will be announced in the club's competition in the fields of newswriting, features, sports and editorials. All University students were eligible to submit their published work in the contest.

McGuire said the dinner is open not only to the Press Club members but to any interested persons among the student body, faculty and townspeople.

of 15, after completing his education in the public schools. He was a native of Greenville, but lived most of his entire life in Durham.

At the age of 15 Bernard got a job in the old Blacknall Drug Store, then located in the Geer building and became an errand boy, soda clerk and general handy man about the place.

The pharmacy was owned by Dr. Richard Blacknall, one of the city's first physicians in the days when Durham was just a crossroads village. In those days drug store hours were long and hard and young Bernard worked from 6 in the morning until 11 at night.

When he was 21 (1894) he passed the State Board examinations and within a few years had acquired an interest in the Blacknall firm. When Dr. Blacknall died in 1900 Mr. Bernard became sole owner of the Pharmacy and continued to operate it under the original name. Through the years the Pharmacy moved to several locations — to Five Points, back to the old Geer Building and, for four years across from the present Washington Duke Hotel.

In 1907, in parnership with C. T. Council, who had received his apprentice training under Bernard in Blacknall's Drug Store, the Five Point Drug Co. was established at "Five Points," at the "Point" where Main and Chapel Hill streets converge with Messrs. Bernard and Council sole owners. It was in a back room of this drug store that "BC," the famous headache remedy, was first conceived, and it was here that the preparation was made until increased business made necessary the erection of the large and splendidly equipped plant on Morris Street. The "B" in "BC" stands for Bernard; the "C," for Council.

In May, 1933, R. Blacknall and Son Co. and the Five Points Drug Co. united to form the Durham Drug Company at 300 W. Main Street. Bernard continued an active connection with the new store.

Georgia fiddler; Mrs. Freda English, traditional ballard singer, and Obray Ramsey, banjoist, both from Laurel River in Madison County, will appear, Lunsford said.

The mountain section will be represented also by Earl and Bill McElrath, clog dancers from Buncombe County; a number of dance teams, including the Allegany group from Sparta, headed by Homer Edwards; Mancho Sneed, Cherokee Indian fiddler, and Walter Parham, Buncombe harmonica player.

From the central part of North Carolina will come such groups as the Duplin County Dance team; the Durham Do-Se-Does; the Foot and Fiddle Dancers from Alamance; the Wildcat Dancers from Orange, and the Scottish Highlanders from Cumberland County.

String bands will include Ed Norwood and his Band from Chatham; Add Buie's band from Cumberland; the Pony Express from Siler City, and Red Rose and his Dixie Mountain Boys from Wake County.

Reporting on his recent visits in the state, Lunsford said, "Our folklore festivals have proved to be very popular among the sophisticated audiences as well as in the communities that love and sing the songs used, and who have engaged in perpetuation of the various forms of Carolina folk dancing."

Constitutional Amendment Raising Fees Fails At Polls

Board Of Trustees Meets May 23 To Discuss State's Appropriation; Out-Of-State Tuition Raise Likely

Legislature Unable To Hike Fees

By ED MYERS

The Board of Trustees will meet in Raleigh May 23 to decide whether to raise tuition fees for out-of-state students or find another means of raising $88,245, according to South Building officials.

In technical language, the subcommittee of the Joint Appropriations Committee raised estimated receipts in the amount of $88,245.

The Legislature arrived at this sum by assuming that tuition fees for non-residents would be hiked from $360 to $500 per year.

The out-of-staters with full scholarships were not included in the Legislature's figuring.

It cannot be said at this time that tuition for out-of-state students will be raised at all. According to the Administrative Code and the General Statute, G. S. 116-143, the Legislature cannot fix tuition rates.

The statute says:

"The trustees of The University of North Carolina, including the University of North Carolina, the State College of Agriculture and Engineering and the Woman's College of The University of North Carolina, are authorized and directed to fix the tuition fees for each of the institutions in such amount or amounts as they deem best, taking into consideration the nature of each department and institution and the cost of equipment and maintaining the same; and are futher instructed to charge and collect from each student, at the begining of each semester, tuition fees and an amount sufficient to pay room rent, servants' hire and other expenses of the term. Indigent cripples are exempt from the provisions of this paragraph."

This means the Legislature can only fix the appropriations. The trustees must fix the tuition rates.

However, speculation is that the trustees will have to follow through with the General Assembly's line of thinking. Alternatives available for raising $88,245 are not abundant.

The Legislature scheduled the tuition raise to go into effect at the start of the next biennium, on July 1.

According to reliable sources in Chapel Hill, the tuition raise will not effect summer school students. However, the trustees will also decide that in their May 23 meeting.

What You Do Before You Go On Stage

Actors don't pace up and down in the wings before they go on stage, as this picture of Carolina Playmakers shows. The thespians are shown before going on stage in Julius Caesar, produced over the weekend in the Forest Theatre. Four of them seem more intent on their card game than the audience out front. One Roman (right) looks on with eyes half shut. An actress (foreground, left) studies her lines.—Henley photo.

YMCA Holds Installation Service; Graham Rights Is New President

Graham Henry Rights, junior from Winston-Salem, was installed as the 1955-56 University YMCA president at the group's installation banquet last night in Lenoir Hall.

Rights' father, Dr. Douglas Rights, who is a Moravian minister in Winston-Salem, gave the invocation and benediction for the ceremonies.

Fred Weaver, Dean of Student Affairs, was the speaker for the installation services.

Other officers installed are Ed Hennessee, Parkersburg, W. Va., vice-president; Roy Taylor, Greenville, secretary, and Gerald Mayo, Chocowinity, treasurer. Mrs. William Friday installed the new officers and cabinet.

The new YMCA Cabinet members who were installed are John Bielefelt, Wayne, Mich.; Mitchell Borden, Charlotte; Carl Bridgers, Fort George Meade, Md.; Joe Brown, Charlotte; Mark Cherry, Mt. Olive;

Bill Christian, Vicksburg, Miss.; Joe Clapp, Greensboro; Stewart Colson, Greensboro; Eddie Crutchfield, Winston-Salem; Eric Elliott, Raleigh;

Curtis Daughtry, Smithfield; John Gorman, Winterville; Rube Hines, Kinston; Bob Hinshaw, Liberty; Hugh Hinton, Middlesex;

Townsend Holt, Raleigh; Stan Kilpatrick, Miami, Fla.; Bob Leonard, Hendersonville; Holland McSwain, Franklin; Bill Oakley, Mebane;

Francis Porcher, Charleston, S. C.; Tom Ray, Charlotte; Dan Southerland, Arlington, Va.; Bill Wible, Greensboro; John Williams, Greensboro, and Kenneth Yang, Taichung, Formosa.

A group of senior YMCA members were recognized for their service by the group. Those honored were Ram Desikan, Madras, India; Mike Furuhata, Tokyo, Japan; Don Geiger, Tampa, Fla.; Bob Hyatt, Cherokee; Bill Lofquist, Asheville; Owen Norment, Asheville, and Jim Sherril, Charlotte.

Rights succeeds Bob Hyatt as YMCA president.

Lambeth Elected New Carolina Forum Chief

Tom Lambeth has been elected chairman of the Carolina Forum, according to an announcement yesterday.

Lambeth, rising junior from Winston-Salem, will replace Joel Fleishman, this year's chairman.

David Reid was named vice-chairman. Other officers include Jim Turner, secretary; Frank Warren, treasurer; and Jim Holmes, publicity director.

During the past year the Forum has brought to the Carolina campus Hobert Meyner, governor of New Jersey, Socialist Norman Thomas, Senator Estes Kefauver, former U. S. Ambassador to India Chester Bowles, U. S. Chief of Staff Matthew Ridgway, Sen. Hubert Humphrey, Associate Justice William O. Douglas of the Supreme Court, Sen. Leverett Saltonstall and New York City Mayor Robert Wagner.

Purpose of the Carolina Forum, according to a spokesman, it to "bring to the campus of the oldest state university in the nation the political, educational and economic leaders of the world."

The Forum is the official agency of student government, "established to bring speakers of state, national and world importance to the campus."

ANNUAL CEREMONIES:

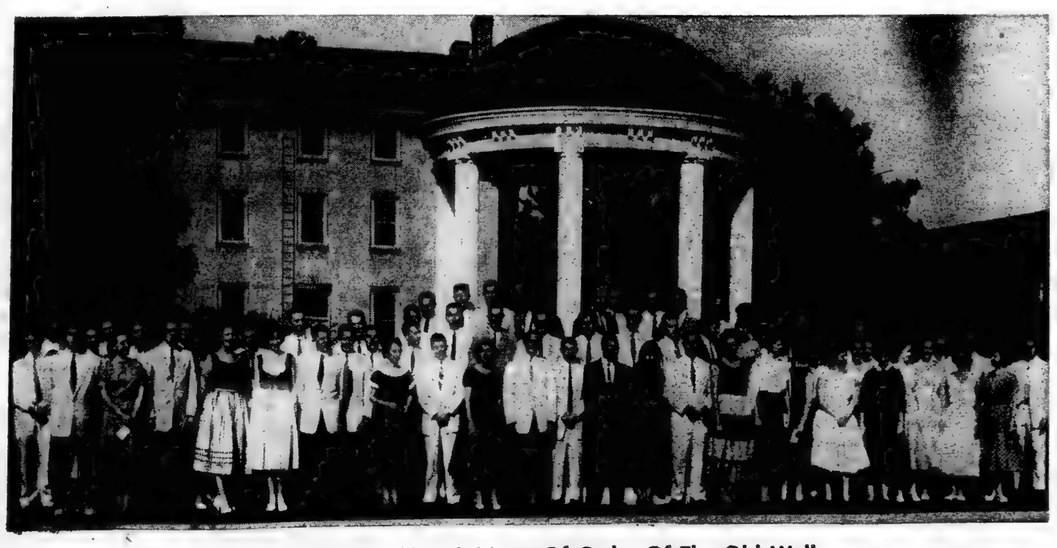
Order Of The Old Well Initiates 83

A total of 83 new members was initiated into the Order of the Old Well yesterday afternoon.

Following the brief ceremony at the Old Well, the meeting then moved into Gerrard Hall where President Don Geiger and Dean of Awards Ernest Mackie spoke. New members then went through the traditional signing of the roll.

The Order of the Old Well was founded on the premise that "too much service was being done in the University and too little recognition was forthcoming."

This year's officers are Don Geiger, Tampa, Fla., president; Herbert H. Browne, Columbia, S. C., vice-president; Paul Likins, Elkhart, Ind., secretary-treasurer; and Dr. Ernest Mackie of the faculty, recorder.



New North Carolina members and their home towns are Shelton S. Alexander, Statesville; Robert D. Aldridge, Burlington; Clinton T. Andrews Jr., Hickory; Richard H. Baker Jr., Greensboro; Robert C. Barlowe, Lenoir; Thomas S. Bennett, Morehead City;

Mrs. Donna L. Blair Booe, Winston-Salem; Lewis S. Brumfield, Yadkinville; Jerry A. Campbell, Taylorsville; Miss Joyce Carter, Lake Junaluska; Max H. Crohon Jr., Asheville; James G. Crouch Jr., Jacksonville; Charlie L. Dean Jr., Fuquay Springs; Miss Carol Du Pler, Davidson; Miss Susan B. Fink, Chapel Hill;

Millard J. Fountain, Wilmington; Donald O. Fowler, Winston-Salem; Connie M. Gravitte, Roxboro; Miss Gladys B. Hatcher, Four Oaks; Scotty Hester, Riedsville; Miss Anne L. Huffman, Catawba; Charles F. Hyatt, Waynesville; Henry H. Isaacson, Greensboro; Lucia P. Johnson, Chapel Hill;

Ralph M. Jordan, Concord; Charles Kuralt, Chapel Hill; Miss Joan C. Leonard, Asheville; Ron F. Levin, Williamston; Robert P. Willie P. Mangum Weeks of Washington, D. C., class of 1915.

New Initiates Of Order Of The Old Well

New initiates of the Order of the Old Well, campus service society, are shown above. Initiation services took place yesterday afternoon around the Old Well, with the 83 new members signing the roll. New officers were also chosen. President is Ed McCurry. Charles Katzenstein was chosen vice-president; Miss Sue Fink, secretary-treasurer; Manning Muntzing, Bev Webb and Jack Stevens, advisory board; Dick Baker, Steve Marcinko and Lewis Brumfield, advisory board alternates, and Dean E. L. Mackie, adviser.

Revenue Bonds For Dormitories Proposed

RALEIGH, May 10 (AP)—Revenue bonds were proposed today as the solution for state schools which need new dormitories and have no money to build them.

Rep. J. K. Doughton of Alleghany, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, offered a bill which would let the schools issue the bonds to build or enlarge dormitories and then use student rentals to retire the bonds.

The bill would apply to the three units of the Consolidated University of North Carolina and to East Carolina College at Greenville and Appalachian State Teachers College at Boone. It was made necessary by the fact that no money to finance permanent construction was included in the appropriations bill already passed by the Legislature.

A dormitory to accommodate 800 students is proposed at the University in Chapel Hill.

Doughton's bill allows the schools to raise the rentals on existing dormitories "to the extent necessary" to liquidate revenue bonds issued for new buildings.

The bill places a limit of two million on the bonds to be issued by the University at Chapel Hill and State College here.

The bill went to the Appropriations Committee.

Competition For Oratorical Award To Be Held On Monday

Competition for the Mangum Award in oratory will be conducted Monday night at 8 o'clock in Di Hall on the third floor of New West.

The Mangum Award, established in 1878, is the oldest award of the University. It was founded by Misses Martha Person and Mary Sutherland Mangum, late of Orange County, in memory of their father, Willie Person Mangum, class of 1815.

The award has been continued by Willie P. Mangum Turner of Winston-Salem, class of 1900, and Willie P. Mangum Weeks of Washington, D. C., class of 1915.

The award, which is a gold medal, is awarded to the member of the senior class who, in the opinion of a group of judges, gives the most excellent oration in the contest.

All seniors interested in competing for the award should submit their names to Dean E. L. Mackie's office, 312 South Building, by Saturday.

Kenneth L. Penegar was last year's Mangum Award winner.

The contest for the award is sponsored by the Di Senate and the Phi Assembly. Speeches for it should be original oratory of 10 minutes length on any subject, according to a Di spokesman.

King President

Van King, Wilmington, has been chosen as president of the student government of the School of Pharmacy.

Wiley Harrell, Virginia Beach, Va., was elected vice-president of the student government, and Miss Sara Alice Jackson, Lumberton, was chosen secretary-treasurer.

Duke-UNC Meeting

Dr. R. Williamson of Duke University will speak on "Coulomb Excitation of Nuclei" at the joint UNC-Duke Physics Colloquium tonight at 8 o'clock in 206 Phillips Hall.

Only 1,183 Voters Decide On Measure

By NEIL BASS

The proposed hike in student fees met a swift death in yesterday's referendum.

Thus, according to the decision of 1,183 voters, student fees will remain at their present level at least until next year.

Both amendments voted on in the referendum went down in landslide defeat.

For the proposed amendment that would have opened student constitutional gates for a $3 increase, the margin was by approximately 500 votes—816 to 368.

For the amendment that would have allowed the student Legislature to hike fees the $2 already provided for in the Constitution, the gap was not so wide—707 against, 506 for.

The Constitution presently stipulates that fees may not exceed $20. The second amendment on yesterday's ballot would have shot this limit up to $23.

The Constitution also prohibits any change in fees—up or down—after April 1. The first amendment on yesterday's ballot would have allowed the Legislature to hike fees the $2 already called for in the Constitution (the Constitution allows $20, but fees now stand at $18) at any time during the year.

The defeat ended a long trail of set-backs for the proposed amendment.

President Names 15 To Cabinet

Student body President Don Fowler yesterday named 15 students to his cabinet for the next academic year.

Six of the students are members of the University Party, five are Student Party members and four are independent.

One coed is on the cabinet.

The 15 are Howie Reece (Independent), Ed McCurry (UP), Dave Reid (SP), Jake Phelps (UP), Juan West (SP), Joe Barbour (Ind.), Miss Alice Diane Roane (Ind.), Jim Monteith (UP).

Jack Stevens (UP), Jim Martin (UP), John Medlin (Ind.), Bill Formyduvall (SP), Bob Harrington (SP), Bill Sanders (UP) and Frank Warren (SP).

The cabinet, according to Atty. General David Reid, meets once a month to plan "a program for student government."

David Mundy Chosen As First Goettingen Exchange Student

David Mundy, sophomore from Black Mountain, has been chosen as UNC's first exchange student to be sent to the University of Goettingen, Germany, according to an announcement made yesterday by Bill Wible, chairman of the student exchange program.

Wible said that Mundy will represent Carolina student government at Goettingen and will have as his job the promotion of understanding between the two universities and the further development of affiliation with the German University. He said that it is hoped that the relations of the two schools can be strengthened with more scholarships and by such means as exchange of news articles and editorials, short wave round tables, mutual assistance in research, visitation of professors, contact between campus groups and exchange of textbooks and other written works.

Mundy was chosen by a committee consisting of Fred Weaver, Dean of Student Affairs; Professor S. E. Leavvitt of the faculty; Claude C. Shotts, general secretary of the University YMCA; Professor John G. Kunstmann, head of the German Dept.; Ed McCurry, president of the Grail; Lewis Brumfield, president of the Inderdormitory Council, and Don Fowler, president of the student body.

Hoyt Is Speaker For Friends' Annual Meet

William Henry Hoyt of New York City, attorney and author of a number of books and articles on the history of North Carolina, will be the principal speaker at the annual dinner of the Friends of the UNC Library at the Carolina Inn Friday.

Hoyt is author of The Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, A Study of Evidence Showing That the Alleged Early Declaration of Independence by Mecklenburg County, N. C. on May 20, 1775, is Spurious, and The Papers of Archibald D. Murphy.

The latter work was published in 1914 by the N. C. Dept. of Archives and History, while the book concerning the Mecklenburg Declaration was published by G. P. Putnam's Sons in 1907.

Archibald Debow Murphey was Hoyt's grandfather, who lived from 1777 to 1823. He was a member of the Class of 1799 of UNC, the first class graduated from the University. Aside from being a jurist, he was a faculty member of the University and one of the first advocates of public education in North Carolina.

In the course of research on Peter Stuart Ney, who was one of Napoleon's lieutenants and who is said to have lived in North Carolina following Napoleon's overthrow, Hoyt has assembled a large and rare collection of books on the life and times of Napoleon. Since 1953 he has presented a large portion of this collection to the University Library. During the past year he has donated over 700 books from this collection to the William Hoyt Collection of French History at the University.

Also scheduled for the annual dinner are a number of announcements of significant acquisitions during the past year and the awarding of citations of honor to members who have made outstanding contributions to the Library.

The University Library is currently featuring an ehibition of gifts donated by Friends of the Library during the past year. The Friends is an organization composed of alumni, faculty and others interested in the development and growth of the Library.

Keepers Of A Phony Myth

Contrary to current tradition and the popular stereotype of Carolina's big-man-on-campus, the purpose of this University is to teach, to stimulate thought through academic endeavor.

Unfortunately, many present leaders in extracurriculars seem to regard academics as a sideline, an activity dabbled at between meetings, or athletic events.

The deterioration of the academic requirements for holding elective campus offices is one solid example of the lack of academic emphasis among student leaders.

Jack Markham was appointed Yackety-Yack editor recently by President Don Fowler—after he failed to make the necessary average to run for the post in the election. No one questions Markham's editorial ability. But it is obvious that, in appointing him to an office for which he was academically unqualified to run, President Fowler has plainly prostituted the University's purpose.

Former President Tom Creasy did the same thing in appointing Jim Fountain head cheerleader last year. Fountain did not have the required average to run, so Creasy appointed him after the election.

Fountain served admirably in his post. Indications are that Markham will fulfill his duties ably also. We do not question the ability of these individuals in their respective posts.

But we point with indignation to Creasy's and Fowler's actions in pulling Fountain and Markham into office through a loophole.

The big-man-on-campus who can't make the grade academically belongs to collegiate myths—not this University.

From Duke— An Answer

"Don't generalize — specialize," reads the sign in the Post Office ballyhooing the U. S. Army.

And while following this slogan's advice may land you a better G.I. job, educators today are realizing that just the opposite is true; the world of specialization needs the man of liberal arts.

The problem now seems to be how to train technicians needed to run this complex society and still endow these same men with an understanding of all fields. The long-term training of a nuclear chemist, for instance, includes little exploration into history, economics, and literature.

From that Gothic-tailored campus in Western Durham—Duke University—comes one solution to today's biggest educational problem. President Hollis Edens has just taken the wraps off a five-year plan for engineering students that consists of three years of liberal arts work and the final two in specialized training.

Under this new Duke program, one can master a highly technical field and still learn something of the heritage, language and values that has made us what we are.

Such a program could be implemented here for Business Administration and other specialized fields. Perhaps the University's educators will quit taking the Post Office sign seriously and give Carolina a program such as Duke's. It's one of the better answers to our biggest problem.

Gracious Living III (Second Series)

The intestine shock of civil butchery may descend any night upon the Upper Quad if the present hitch in Gracious Living there continues.

In all that stately courtyard, with four dorms—Manly, Grimes, Ruffin, and Mangum—hard by there is but one bench. All the dorms claim right to the bench. Nightly, the much-battered green seat has followed the fluctuating balance of power round and round the quadrangle. One dorm's residents resorted to chains, a lock, and a stout oak to keep the disputed property on their premises.

More benches, please. The Daily Tar Heel has taken the position before that cold cement steps make a poor place for philosophizing, and that Spring is the time for more benches. Philosopher is as philosopher sits.

Julius Caesar: Abandon Ship By Bugle Call

J. A. C. Dunn

THE THIRD PERFORMANCE of Julius Caesar by the Carolina Playmakers had about it (at least backstage, which was the only part we saw) a much more professional air than did Sound and Fury. This of course, is understandable, since the Carolina Playmakers are, to begin with, more professional than the Sound and Fury group. There was more order backstage; people did not look as if they were on a life and death errand, they just acted as if they had something to do and intended to do it with as little fuss and bother as possible.

WE ARRIVED SOON after the curtain went up, or rather soon after the actors first appeared on stage, since there is no curtain in the Forest Theater. We ran across Young Cato, who was standing around in a helmet made of upholstery cloth smoking a Lucky Strike.

"It's much warmer tonight," he said. This matter had not occurred to us before. Acting in a comparatively scanty costume must indeed be anything but comfortable if the weather demands more clothing than the costume provides.

We wandered past the Soothsayer, who yawned politely, into the costume room, which was almost empty at the time, dodged a Roman who was pacing up and down the floor practicing his lines, and discovered, as a result of talking to someone else who was merely wandering, that the bugle music which occurred at several points during the performance was actually a tape recording of the Navy bugle call for "abandon ship."

At this point another bugle call went and everyone within sight (and hearing) shouted "Hail Caesar!" at the tops of their lungs. We were caught unawares the first time, but the next time we had a go at Hailing Caesar ourself. It was quite enjoyable. There is something very exuberant and soul-cleansing about Hailing Caesar.

THE WINGS WERE very interesting. From the front they looked like nothing we had ever seen before. The whole structure was actually nothing but an immensely complicated system of struts and props, and little ladders and catwalks and so on. A few random-placed light bulbs gave the place an eerie atmosphere, an atmosphere which was greatly added to by the numbers of toga-clad Romans silently moving from place to place (most of them with rather anachronistic cigarettes in their hands). We learned that one Roman had fallen from one of the little ladders during rehearsal and broken his foot, but that he, as well as about five shots of morphine that he carried in his bloodstream, was still playing. The show must go on.

BUT WHAT WE found most interesting of all was the sound effects in the battle scene. After a bit of digging around we unearthed the fact that the sound-effects man had contrived four minutes worth of battle noise by placing a group of men in one room with table cutlery and then letting them shout and clash the silverware for the required amount of time. Unfortunately, it seems that toward the end of their stint of vocal debauchery, the noise makers ran out of things to shout, and began throwing in comments such as "Don't fire till you see the whites of their eyes!" and "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!" Needless to say, this does not fit in very well with a Shakespeare play, but when the battle scene came, we never noticed the difference. The sound effects of the battle scene were produced by means of several systems, each of which could have different sounds played over it, with the result that the battle had a sort of roll and throb about it.

'We Interrupt This News To Bring You The Latest Chapter Of John's Other Amendment—'

AS JAPANESE NEUTRALISM GROWS:

Links In The Old Chain Weaken

Joseph Alsop

The dull old saw, that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, is rapidly becoming a pungent criticism of American policy in Asia.

On the one hand, the so called "island chain strategy" has been the real justification of our Asian policy from the moment when President Eisenhower decided to allow the Chinese Communists a concealed victory in Korea.

For two years, our policy makers have gone on the rule that they could safely dodge any issue and abandon any position in Asia, so long as the line from the Aleutians through Japan and Okinawa, Formosa and the Philippines was firmly held. And with bland complacency, they have assumed there was no danger to this officially established American defense line in the Pacific.

On the other hand, however, the most vital links in the island chain have been more and more visibly weakened. In both its offensive and defensive aspects, the island chain strategy is in fact ceasing to be a valid strategy.

TWO-PRONGED ATTACK

The strategy of the island chain is most immediately endangered on its offensive side. In theory, as officially explained by Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, enemy aggression on the Asian continent is to be met with a two pronged attack based on Formosa and South Korea.

In view of Communist China's complete inability to supply a serious war on two fronts, this is a good theory. But in practice, although the divisions of Chiang Kai-shek and Syngman Rhee are still costing the American taxpayer a lot of money, the Chinese Communist leaders are being progressively relieved of any worries about this two front war.

In Korea, the enemy is increasingly protected by American disarmament, by his own fantastic fortifications, and by his own air build up. The existing air balance on the Korean penninsula proper is now on the order of three to one in favor of the Communists, with the air backup outside Korea also balanced in their favor. Anyone who saw the Korean fighting knows that an attack on the deep tunneled Communist entrenchments can not be considered for an instant while the enemy has air superiority.

In Formosa, meanwhile, the new two China policy may leave the appearance of strength. The Generalissimo's divisions may continue to be counted in the Joint Chiefs of Staff's paper games, even after an American back-down in the Formosa Strait. But after the demoralization such a back-down will inevitably cause, any attempt to use the Chinese Nationalist divisions offensively will be the most hare-brained kind of gamble.

CENTERED IN JAPAN

This, in brief, is what has been and is now happening to the capability of a two pronged attack that Secretary Dulles boasted about so grandly only a few weeks ago. Yet this loss of offensive capability is not so grave as the progressive loss of defensive value of the famous island chain. This defensive loss is a purely political process, mainly centering here in Japan.

Militarily and economically, Japan is the most essential of all the links in the island chain. With this link gone, Okinawa will be virtually untenable. Formosa will be meaningless. We shall be thrown back to the position in the Pacific that we held at the time of Pearl Harbor.

Yet no realistic observer of the on-the-spot facts of the situation in Asia can now take Japan for granted in the way the American policy makers still taken for granted. Japan's economic dependence on the United States, the surviving Japanese belief that the United States wins in the end, are the present mainstays of the Japanese-American alliance. But thoh those mainstays must be expected to snap if present trends in Asia continue.

The danger, to be sure, is not for today or for tomorrow. If there is another appeasement of the Communists in the Formosa Strait, there will be increasing doubts in Tokyo and Japanese-American relations will grow increasingly more difficult. But the Japanese-American alliance may be expected to survive. It will probably even survive next year's already foreseeable Communist triumph in Indo-China.

JAPAN NEUTRALISM

However, the Japanese-American alliance cannot be expected to survive a chain reaction of further Communist triumphs in Southeast Asia, such as seems likely to begin in South Viet Nam in 1956. That is too much to hope for, as the American embassy here has already bluntly warned Washington.

What is to be feared is not a complete reversal of alliances, but adoption by the Japanese of a sternly neutralist policy. But it will be a small consolation that the Japanese are not overtly on the enemey's side, when Japan's industrial potential is fully available to the Communitst, and when the island chain has been broken for good and all by Japanese neutralism.

Such are the developments that now loom ahead in the short and long run in the Far East. Maybe retreat and appeasement are still the best cure. But those who advocate retreat and appeasement have a duty to propose an alternative Pacific strategy for the United States, plus a free-world strategy of survival after most of the rest of Asia has been lost.

Self-Defeating Advantage

(The Christian Science Monitor)

Industry comes to colleges and universities in the spring. It goes after the best students. And it outbids teaching as a life career by such a huge financial margin that for many the prospects of rewards from other satisfactions are swept aside. This has been going on for quite a few years. What would happen if it kept up much longer? Would industry find that it had recruited so many potentially good teachers that there were too few good teachers left to turn out any more well-qualified graduates for industry to recruit?

That would be a ridiculous and a vicious circle. One educator at a recent conference on the school manpower crisis called it "killing the goose that lays the golden eggs." Another speaker at the Toledo, Ohio, meeting, a college president, characterized this competition as "serious."

Still another brought the problem into even harsher focus:

You want good teachers? Don't you know there are not enough poor teachers to go around?

It is utterly unrealistic, of course, to expect industry to lower its inducements to the level of teachers' salaries. And it is utterly unfair and unkind for a rich nation to expect indefinitely that those who are fitted and wish to become teachers and research scholars should make this choice at the current sacrifice demanded of themselves and their future families.

Here, for industry, is the answer of enlightened self-interest: Help the colleges to pay their faculties better salaries so they can continue to turn out good material for industry to recruit — but not with so self-defeating an advantage.

Passing Remark

Wiser Choice: Rio, Buenos Aires, & $800

Ron Levin

I stood there for what seemed like an hour when finally a fifty-two Chevvy pulled up and stopped with a sudden jerk. A deeply tanned face sporting a huge Sunday smile leaned over to the window. He looked at the sticker on my suitcase and opened the door.

"C'mon, I'll give you a ride over to Chapel Hill. I'm on my way to Burlington."

I got in figuring I was in for a half hour of dull talk about something or other, and sure enough, he started up.

"I guess you're in school over there, huh?"

"Yeah, I finish up in a couple of weeks. Then I'm going out West."

"That's good. Get all the traveling done, while you got the chance. You know, my old man gave me a chance to go to college when I was seventeen, but I joined the Merchant Marine instead."

HE WAS A SAILOR

It made sense now. The huge shoulders and thick arms and the deep tan all figured in. He was a sailor.

"Ya, see, my brother took my old man up and went to college, and I went to sea. You know what my brother does now?"

I imagined his brother to be some successful lawyer or doctor with a big house and two cars. I shook my head, and he laughed.

"He's an accountant for some firm up in Baltimore. He gets two weeks off a year for vacation, and he ends up in some place like Virginia Beach or Atlantic City fighting the crowds. A lousy stinking two weeks, that's all he gets. Me, I just been down to Rio, then around to Buenos Aires, up through the Canal and back to Norfolk. Jeez, that Rio's quite a town. You ever been down there?"

I felt like hiding in the glove compartment and meekly shook my head like the amateur wanderer I was. I had to say something.

'HOW'S THE PAY?'

"How's the pay in the Merchant Marine?"

"I was out fifty four days, and they paid me a little over eight hundred dollars." He lit up another cigarette and pulled out to pass an A Model out for its usual Sunday jaunt.

I thought about the graduates I knew teaching somewhere for a sum considerably less than eight hundred dollars a month. I even thought about my profs, and a little laugh formed inside.

"Yeah, you see, me and my wife. We're gonna take a little trip up to Canada, and then I got a ship that goes to Sweden waiting for me when we get back. Always something to do, somewhere to go, something new all the time."

TACITUS TO READ

Glen Lennox came up fast, and in a few minutes we were waiting for the stop light to change near the Carolina Inn.

He gave me a big wave as he drove off, and I stood there watching the car disappear in the long line of Sunday afternoon traffic. I had some Tacitus to read, but right then, I didn't feel like reading Tacitus or anybody else. Chapel Hill seemed like a thimble, and as I thought about the sun in Rio this time of year, Chapel Hill seemed like a very small thimble. I walked slowly back to my room thinking about an accountant in Baltimore and his two weeks at the beach, and suddenly I knew who had made the wiser choice.

Y-Court Corner

Rueben Leonard

ONCE UPON a time in the land of Carolinius, a group of powerful tyrants ruled the land with an iron roll book. Now these tyrants didn't use the roll book themselves, but instead, they gave each member of their working force a book and told them to live by it, swear by it, and die by it. The members of the working force were very busy but they knew that they must obey the central planning committee of tyrants, so they adopted the "Roll Book Religion." For that was the custom in those days.

GLOOM SETTLED over the land of Carolinius. The birds ceased to sing. The delightful voices that once issued forth from the various windows of Hill Hall were no more; only the audible whispers of rolls being called were heard. The working force had turned into a working farce—the members gave up their intellectual pursuits and worked themselves into a mad frenzy to see who could call the roll with the most effectiveness. As students strolled lazily across campus they could hear the working force calling their names—some rolls were set to music, some were made to rhyme, and some were left in disgusting prose (an influence created by the Temple of Business no doubt). For that was the custom in those days.

IN THE MEANTIME, the central planning committee realizing that many of the students (Po'r White Trash in those days) were not heeding the ultimatum allowing only three unexcused absences per class, knew that something had to be done. (In those days the tyrants did anything they pleased). The Central Planning Committee decided to spend one whole year's appropriations for the purchase of effigies of each of the students. The Effigy Industry was a big business in those days.

AN EFFIGY of each student was sent to the school in which he was registered and nailed to the wall there. For in those days it wasn't against the rules to drive nails in the wall. At the end of the day each member of the working force would send a message to the attendance bureau of the respective schools and give the names of the students who had broken the rhyme of the rolls that day. For that was the law in those days.

THE ATTENDANCE bureaus would immediately puncture the students who had broken the rhyme that day by sticking a purple pin in their effigy. Soon many of the students had three pins sticking in their carcasses. This was very bad because when they received a fourth pin they would be taken off of a roll and that sort of thing made the working force mad. That meant that they had to reset their roll to another rhyme. For there was very little rhyme or reason in those days.

ONE DAY as the semester neared the end, the inevitable happened—two students earned four pins. One student was a very good student having a "B" average in his overcut course. The other student wasn't a very good student, having an "F" average in his course. But the impartial tyrants only laughed at this sort of thing. The good student asked for justice (being the silly fool that he was, he just wanted to be dropped without a grade since he was passing the course). The tyrants looked puzzled at the mention of justice. "Ah, yes," one of them cried, "he used to play football here."

Both students received "F's" and were dropped from their respective courses, for that was the law in those days.

SHADES OF Tammany Hall. The New Regime of Student Government has brought with it a "new look." Where the thin ghost-like wisps of Parliament and Pall Mall smoke used to curl to the ceiling we now have mountainous billows of big-black-cigar smoke.

Even though Graham Memorial is enveloped in this black cloud—there is a silver lining. Student Government has at last reached the stage where the opposition parties are working together for the mutual benefit of the students. The University Party is in control of the legislature but has not, as yet, tried to cram any legislative measures down the throat of the SP. Since Don Fowler, a former Student Party man, is president, the SP may have a slight edge in the executive branch.

All in all, with the solons of both parties working together and Fowler appointing UP's and SP's alike, the coming year should be a very productive one for student government, the students, and the University.

Seven Wonders Of N.C.

(The Greensboro Daily News)

What are the seven wonders of North Carolina? Editor Don Shoemaker of the Asheville Citizen entertains himself and others by speculating on this.

The Seven Wonders of the Ancient World, as our readers will recall, were:

Great Pyramids
Pharos Lighthouse
Phidias Statue of Zeus
Mausoleum of Halicarnassus
Colossus of Rhodes
Temple of Diana at Ephesus
Hanging Gardens of Babylon

Editor Shoemaker nominates for North Carolina Carolina wonders the following among others:

The Cow Palace at Raleigh
The Blue Ridge Parkway
The Old Fort-Ridgecrest Southern Railway
A mammoth textile mill such as Cone
The carillon tower at Duke
The Playmakers building at Chapel Hill
The State Capitol building
Wright Memorial at Kill Devil Hill

But wait a minute. That's eight already, and Don hasn't even mentioned Dr. Archibald Henderson or Harry Golden.

ACC Net, Track, 2 Baseball Games This Weekend

Netters Close Out Season With 21-1 Mark By Blanking State

Carolina's tennis team closed out one of the most successful seasons in its history here yesterday with a 9-0 shut-out of N. C. State.

The win, the eleventh shut-out of the season, was the Tar Heels' twenty-first against only one loss, that to undefeated Miami. The victory also moved Carolina's new win streak to seven in a row since Miami broke a 30-match skein mid-way in the season.

The Tar Heels had little trouble in polishing off the Wolfpack, as five non-regulars and one regular swept all six singles. In the doubles, some regulars combined with the substitutes to sweep those, with only the number three team running into trouble.

With the regular season history, the Tar Heels netters turn to the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament which opens here Thursday afternoon. Two singles and one doubles entry are allowed from each school.

Yesterday's summary:

Kerdasha def. Greenberg 6-4, 6-2; Handel def. Casion 4-6, 6-0, 6-0; Bortner def. Cross 4-6, 6-1, 6-2; Livingston def. Frantz 6-3, 6-4; Gustafson def. Reichard 6-2, 6-0; Kasser def. Brinkley 6-1, 6-2;

Doubles — Greene and Bortner def. Cashion and Reichard 6-1, 6-1; Bradford and Gustafson def. Greenberg and McCoy 6-0, 6-0; Livingston and Kasser def. Cross and Frantz 2-6, 7-5, 6-2.

Problem Of Line-Up Switching Faces ACC

By The Associated Press

Is there anything morally or technically wrong about a coach shifting his tennis lineup from accepted standardized positions for the purpose of winning a match?

This is a question confronting the Atlantic Coast Conference on the eve of its annual championships and the debating will come up tomorrow night at the coaches' meeting preceding this year's tournament which opens on UNC courts Thursday morning.

"It's a question of ethics," says John Kenfield, coach of the UNC team and chairman of the conference Tournament Committee.

George Lott, coach of the Duke team and an old Davis Cupper, sees it differently. In a skirmish with Kenfield on the occasion of dual meet between the two teams earlier this season, he made it clear that he saw nothing wrong with arranging the pairings any way he saw fit.

"I'm hired to win," he is quoted as saying, "So I will arrange my lineup any way I see fit to accomplish this."

Kenfield said that in his almost 30 years of college tennis coaching he had run into only two incidents in which coaches revised their lineups for winning purposes. He thinks a team should use its normal lineup for all its meets.

UNC Edges N. C. State For Title In Intramurals

DURHAM, May 10 — First Place in the golf tournament and a Wake Forest softball victory over N. C. State gave Carolina a one-point edge over second place State here this afternoon in the annual Big Four Sports Day.

The Carolina athletes edged State 26-25, with Wake third with 21 points and Duke fourth with 16. Points were awarded on a 5-3-2-1 basis for first, second, third and fourth places respectively.

The winning Carolina group picked up three first places, winning the badminton, golf and tennis, and was second in horseshoes and third in volleyball, table tennis and softball.

With all but the golf and Wake-State softball scores reported, Carolina and State were tied at 21-each. Wake's 13-6 win over State and the Carolina golf victory clinched things for UNC.

One of the upsets of the day was the State horseshoes win over favored UNC. However the favored State volleyball team — composed of Varsity basketball players — was upset by both Duke and Carolina. The State club was volleybayy champion last year.

One of the main factors contributing to the Carolina Victory was the win in badminton. State had pushed through a vote adding badminton to the schedule of events at the last Intramural meeting of Big Four schools. Ironically, Carolina picked up five points in that event by taking first place while State was third, good enough for only two points.

State, Wake Tied For Big 4 Lead

Unless both should pick up wins, either N. C. State or Wake Forest will be in sole possession of first place in the Big Four standings following games today.

The Wolfpack and the Deacs are currently tied for first in the ACC standings with 5-3 records. Duke is third at 4-2 and Carolina last with 2-5 in Big Four competition. This afternoon Carolina goes to Raleigh to meet State while Duke is at Wake Forest.

Following today's games, only two more Big Four battles are slated this year. Friday Duke is at State and Saturday the Blue Devils meet the Tar Heels here.

The Big Four statistics:

Team	W	L	Pct	AB	R	H	2B	3B	HR	SB	RB	Pct

Mural Title Tilt Today

Sigma Chi and Joyner Dorm will meet at four-thirty this afternoon on Field 4 to decide the campus softball championship.

Sigma Chi dropped Chi Psi Monday to take the fraternity intramural title, while Joyner walloped the Dental School for the dorm title last week.

Cockrell Tops Loop Batting

With just one full week remaining in the ACC baseball season, Duke's Andy Cockrell has virtually sewed up the conference batting title. He is leading the ACC for the third straight week with a torrid .465 mark.

N. C. State's Joe Barringer is Cockrell's closest contender. Barringer is hitting at a .405 clip.

Gravitte is tied with Tommy Cole of Wake Forest for the home run leadership. Each has hit six. Gravitte is also tied with Cockrell and Roger Gaines of Clemson for the leadership in doubles with six.

The top sixteen batters:

Cockrell, Duke	58	22	27	.465
Barringer,, N. C. S.	74	15	30	.405

Busy Sports Card Starts Thursday

Sports fans will have to do some hustling here this week if they are to take in all the events scheduled as the Atlantic Coast Conference spring season rushes to a close.

Two ACC championship events are scheduled here this weekend, along with the final two games of Carolina's regular baseball schedule. In addition, the ACC golf championship tourney gets underway at Winston-Salem Thursday afternoon.

Tennis gets a head start on the others tonight when the top players from ACC schools gather in Wolen Gym to draw pairings for the annual tournament that starts Thursday on the UNC courts. The tourney will determine ACC singles and doubles champs. Carolina's undefeated club sewed up the team championship, which is determined by regular season won-lost records.

State-UNC Varsity, Frosh Clash Today

Carolina and N. C. State baseball teams battle today, with the Frosh scheduled for Emerson Field at three-thirty and the Varsity teams slated to meet at Raleigh at the same time. The Tar Heels will be going after their sixth ACC win against five losses, while the Tar Babies will be seeking win number nine. The Baby Wolfpack got one-hit pitching to shut out the Tar Babies 1-0 here Monday afternoon.

Maryland, Carolina and Duke are the favorites in the ACC track meet that will open here Friday afternoon. The Terps will be defending the title that they won at College Park last spring, by edging second place Carolina 59-57. With most of last year's outstanding performers back this spring, this season's meet is expected to produce a host of ACC records. Nearly all the marks set in last year's event have been bettered in dual meets this season.

Also on Friday afternoon, Carolina's baseball Tar Heels play host to Virginia here in an ACC game, then close out the season by entertaining Duke on Emerson Field Saturday afternoon.

Carolina's baseball Tar Babies will also end their season in a rush over the weekend with games at Wake Forest Friday and at Duke Saturday. Today the Tar Babies play host to N. C. State.

Saturday has been designated as ACC Sports Day at UNC, with the finals of the track and tennis tournaments scheduled that afternoon, plus a Big Four baseball game with Duke here.

Carolina Golf Team Edges DU

DURHAM, N. C., May 10 (AP) — The Carolina golf team handed Duke its second conference loss of the season today, 14½-12½, in a tight match that was not decided until the last hole at Hope Valley Country Club in Durham. Behind after nine holes of play, the Tar Heels rallied on the back nine to beat the Blue Devils.

Bolster (D) tied Parker (UNC), 1½-1½; Correll (UNC) beat Thomas (D), 2½-½;Parker and Correll beat Bolster and Thomas, 2½-½.

Sykes (UNC) defeated Hackett (D), 2½-½, Rothrock (UNC) defeated Ruffini (D), 2-1; Sykes and Rothrock defeated Hackett and Ruffini, 2½-½.

Hansen - Pruss (D) defeated Henderson (UNC), 3-0; Toms (D) defeated Ford (UNC), 2½-½; Hansen-Pruss and Toms defeated Henderson and Ford, 2½-½.

Athletes Of The Week:

Charlie Krepp (right) and Phil Drake are this week's Tar Heel Athletes of the Week. The pair of Varsity swimmers set two new American records each last week in AAU sanctioned record trials in Bowman Gray Pool. Krepp swam the 500 meters and 500 yard backstroke in 6:21.9 and 5:49.1, respectively, while Drake swam the same distances to set new breaststroke marks of 6:37.1 and 7:11.3. Charlie Yarborough, pole vaulter, was runner-up for the honor. Yarborough set new University, dual meet, and Fetzer Field pole vault marks last week with a 13'6½" effort against Duke.

Krepp, Drake Go After Four More American Records Today

After cracking four American records last week, ace Carolina swimmers Charlie Krepp and Phil Drake will go after four more marks this afternoon at five-thirty in Bowman Gray Indoor Pool.

Krepp, who smashed the 500 yard and 500 meter backstroke records, will be aiming for the 400 meter and 440 yard back records today, in the AAU sanctioned trials. Drake will try for the 400 meter and 440 yard breaststroke marks. He set new 500 yard and 500 meter breaststroke marks last week.

Officials for the record trial today will be Jack Lowder, Bob Linker, Ham Strayhorn, Bob Colbert, Carl Blythe, Dick Jamerson, Bill Meade, Lee Holmes, Ralph Casey, Ed Shawley, and Joe Hilton.

BOB and MONK of TOWN & CAMPUS SALUTE Phil Drake and Charlie Krepp

Drake and Krepp set two new American swimming records each last week in AAU sanctioned trials. Drake broke the breaststroke marks, and Krepp the backstroke. Both swam 500 yards and 500 meters.

We want them to drop by TOWN & CAMPUS and pick out shirts to their liking—compliments of the house.

We want the old and young alike of Chapel Hill to make TOWN & CAMPUS their headquarters for the finest in men's clothing. Drop in today.

YOU GET A GOOD CLOSE-UP of college smokers' preference for Luckies in the Droodle at right, captioned: Lucky Strike column in a college cigarette-vending machine. On campuses all over America, college students automatically get Luckies. Why? Simply because Luckies taste better. They taste better, first of all, because Lucky Strike means fine tobacco. Then that tobacco is toasted to taste better. "It's Toasted"—the famous Lucky Strike process—tones up Luckies' good-tasting tobacco to make it taste even better ... cleaner, fresher, smoother. Next time it's light-up time, why don't you pull for Luckies?

Coed Hurt In Summer Unable To Re-Enter

A UNC coed, completely disabled since an automobile accident last summer, will be unable to re-enter school next fall as she had planned.

Miss Martha Barber, Raleigh, was a summer school student when she was involved in an automobile accident last July 9 near Nelson. Thomas White Jr., also of Raleigh, was driving Miss Barber home from a dormitory picnic when his car left the road and crashed.

Miss Barber received a compound fracture of the left femur and was confined to Watts Hospital in Durham from July until November. Since that time she has been completely disabled. White received minor injuries.

At the time of the accident, Miss Barber's father was in Morehead City conferring with student government officers on a plan of student accident insurance for UNC students.

Cobbites Schedule Festivities

Cobb Dormitory will entertain all coeds with a dance Friday in celebration of its new $31,000 social improvements program.

The dance is scheduled to last from 8:30 to midnight. "There will be plenty of refreshments and entertainment for all," said Ellison Edwards, dance committee chairman.

Special guests for the dance will be Consolidated University President Gordon Gray, Mrs. Collier Cobb and Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

The newly-completed social facilities are located in the east wing basement of Cobb.

Recital's Audience Is Small

Another junior recital, by Beatrice Allston, soprano, accompanied by Eugene Hudson, and Nancy Eversman, pianist, took place in Hill Hall last Sunday.

Beatrice Allston began her recital with "Arduo e scoprire," by Monteverdi - Manning, which was followed by "Chioma d'Oro" by the same composers. Although her voice was somewhat unsure in the first number, improving in the second, there could be discerned a good understanding of Monteverdi's music. The concert was at this point interrupted through the loving admiration of a little black dog, which went up on the stage an humbly began to lick Beatrice's feet. She, with remarkable presence of mind, just smiled at the little dog, which was promptly sent about other business. The program went on with "Ah spietato!" from Amadigi, by Handel, and this number was done with good expression.

Nancy Eversman's part began with J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in F Major, from the first book of "The Well Tempered Clavichord." The Prelude was begun a bit too fast, which affected the clearness of Nancy's playing.

The Fugue was well introduced; but a bit confused in the development. Then came Clementi's Sonata, Opus 47, No. 2, which Miss Eversman played with good tempos throughout, with clarity and nice touch, very clean scales and all themes well developed and climaxed.

Beatrice Allston came back with two of Schubert's Lieder: "Lachen und Weinen," and "Gretchen am Spinnrade." Here her voice was better and she sang these two little gems with fine expression and musicianship. Next, Beatrice sang "Der Arme Peter," by Schumann, in a very satisfactory manner. Her diction is quite good and this helped very much towards everybody's enjoyment of this group of songs.

Miss Eversman came back on the stage and, assisted by Byron Freeman, doing the orchestral part in another piano, performed the First Movement, "Alegro Affetuoso," of Shumann's Piano Concerto in A Minor, in a rather creditable manner, although in a couple of passages Miss Eversman played a bit too fast, which marred to some extent an otherwise very nice performance, as both players have a fine touch and did a good job.

Beatrice Allston appeared again on the stage and did "Slumber Song," by Gretchaninoff, with good diction, fine musical understanding and expression, and so sang she the last two numbers: "The Island" and "In the Silence of the Night," by Rachmaninoff. This reviewer hopes that Beatrice Allston will correct the placement of her voice, which, at this stage of her development, can still be done. She is a fine musician and her natural voice has a pleasing timbre. The accompaniment by Eugene Hudson was generally good, although, in Schubert's "Gretchen am Spinnrade," he did get ahead of the singer, who showed the same presence of mind as in the episode of the black-furred admirer and began the "Lied" anew. Both Beatrice and Eugene did then a neat presentation.

Oliver Link As Hamlet At Catawba College

Oliver Link, shown above, is a drama student at Catawba College and recently played the leading role in the Blue Masque's recent production of Shakespeare's Hamlet. Link, who has played other leading roles there such as Macbeth, Oedipus and Everyman, is to play the role of Sir Walter Raleigh in this summer's Lost Colony production at Manteo.

Student From Monroe Runs For YDC Post

Henry Hall Wilson of Monroe has been endorsed as a candidate for state Young Democrats Club president at a general assembly of Young Democrats held here.

Joe Fowler of Mt. Airy was endorsed as candidate for national committeeman.

With members present from more than 25 counties, the group passed a resolution for the club to "go on record as endorsing and urging the candidacy" of the two members.

The resolution was offered by law students Bob Roberts of Kannapolis and Bob Byrd of Morganton and passed unanimously

Valkyries Tap Four Coed Juniors, Three Honorary Members In Predawn Fete

The Valkyries, highest women's honorary society on the campus recognized four outstanding junior students and three honorary members in a pre-dawn ceremony this morning.

Among the honorary members tapped were the wife of a UNC administrative official, an assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs and an exchange student from The Netherlands.

VALKYRIES (Top) COCKE, FOLGER, JACKSON
(Bottom) ASHCRAFT, KIMMEL, FRIDAY AND PONDER

Members are selected for their leadership, high ideals and service to the University community.

Undergraduates honored were Misses Donna Lee Ashcraft, Fairmont, W. Va.; Mary Jane Cocke, Asheville; Sara Alice Folger, Milledgeville, Ga., and Sara Alice Jackson, Lumberton.

Those receiving honorary memberships for their outstanding contributions to student life were Mrs. William Friday, UNC official's wife, who has been an active adviser to the YWCA-YMCA Joint Advisory Board, Panhellenic Workshops and Freshman Camp; Miss Lila Ponder, Student Affairs assistant and UNC alumna; and Miss Arendine Kimmel, Fulbright scholar in library science from The Hague, The Netherlands, president of the Cosmopolitan Club and exchange student leader.

Miss Ashcraft, an education major, is vice-chairman of the Student Party, member of the Dialectic Senate, Debate Squad, University Forum, YWCA and Orientation Committee. Recently elected president of Alpha Delta Pi sorority, she serves on the Panhellenic Council.

A sociology student, Miss Cocke recently received the Jane Craige Gray Memorial Award as outstanding woman in the junior class. Her campus offices include secretary of the University Party, vice-president of the YWCA and vice-president of Delta Delta Delta sorority. She is also active in such organizations as Womens' Residence Council, dormitory council and orientation.

Also a sociology major, Miss Folger has been chosen 1955-56 president of YWCA, in which she played a leading role this year. She has also participated in Leadership Council, Glee Club and Westminister Fellowship.

The fourth undergraduate, Miss Jackson, is a student in the School of Pharmacy, where she is past treasurer and current secretary of the student body. She will head the Women's Orientation Program next fall, as well as the YWCA Program Committee and the Personnel Committee of Chi Omega sorority.

UNIVERSITY CLUB CARNIVAL:

Girlie Shows, Rat Race And Ugly Man Contest Tomorrow

Friday 13 will be a lucky day for all who come to the University Carnival on Navy Field at 7 p.m., according to University Club Vice-President Joe Clapp.

In addition to girlie shows, luck contests and a rat race, the Carnival will feature a Theta Chi-sponsored "Ugliest Man on Campus" contest. The winner will be announced at the Carnival and will receive a mass of prizes ranging from beer to a loving cup.

The Carnival itself promises to be the "biggest and best" ever, according to Clapp. "This will be the last chance for everyone to get out and have one final fling before exams," he said.

Some of the entries, according to Miss Annette Niven, are golf putting, a dunk'im contraption and a rat race.

The rat race, sponsored by Smith Dorm, will feature several rats borrowed from the psychology labs. The rats will carry odds, just as in horse races, according to a Smith spokesman.

No Arsonists: Just Keeping Grass Away

No arsonist or would-be pyromaniac is responsible for the kerosene-drenched sidewalks on the campus.

According to J. S. Bennett, director of operations, the kerosene "is just a method to keep the grass off the sidewalks."

Grass comes up between the bricks, said Bennett, and kerosene is "the only things that won't spot the bricks." Since kerosene dries within half an hour there is little danger from lighted matches or tossed cigarette butts, Bennett.

Old Well Officers

All new officers of the Order of the Old Well are requested to meet at the Y-Court today at 1:00 p.m. in order that pictures may be taken.

Executive Committee May Talk On Tuition

The secretary of the UNC Board of Trustees yesterday said he thought the Executive Committee will discuss raising out-of-state tuition at its meeting next week.

Arch T. Allen of Raleigh, secretary of the full board, was questioned yesterday on the group's immediate problem—raising $88,245 asked of the University by the state Legislature last week. The trustees, in a meeting of the full board of over 100 on May 23, will have to decide whether to raise tuition for out-of-state students or find another way to raise the $88,245.

The Executive Committee will meet a week before the full board—next Monday—and, according to Allen, will probably discuss the money problem.

As to whether the Board of Trustees will be able to raise the money without raising non-resident tuition, Allen said "as far as I know," they won't.

Members of the Executive Committee include Trustees John Washington Clark, Randolph County; John Umstead Jr., Orange; W. Frank Taylor, Wayne; Judge John Parker, Mecklenburg; Mrs. A. H. Lathrop, Buncombe; Mrs. May L. Tomlinson, Guilford; Victor Bryant, Durham, and Thomas Pearsall, Nash.

Strength of the Executive Committee is usually limited at 12 members, but four were dropped by the General Assembly in trustee approvals this spring. The other four will be named by the full board in its May 23 meeting, according to trustee spokesmen.

Prep Students Slate Recital On Saturday

Students of the UNC Dept. of Music, Preparatory Division, will be heard in a recital at Hill Hall at 2:30 p.m. Saturday.

Piano students who will appear in the recital from the classes of Melvin Bernstein, Wilton Mason, William Newman, Lilian Pibernik, and Caroline Sites are: Mical Heyman, Jean Godfrey, Paula Sturdevant, Barbara Sturdevant, Bobby Winsor, Beth Harris Nancy Royster, Evelyn McKnight, Richard Bissell, and Jimmy Wenger, all of Chapel Hill; Tom Glymph, Durham; Mary Frances Hart, Elkin, and Bill Brady, Sanford.

Elizabeth Allcott and Virginia Ellis, both of Chapel Hill; and David Jones of Durham will be presented from Mrs. Hans Grainer's violin class.

Flutists from the class of Earl Slocum include Gerry Ham and John Hanft, both of Chapel Hill.

Ellen Cooke of Elkin will represent the voice class of Joel Carter.

Phi Beta Kappa

Phi Beta Kappa initiation will be held today at 5 p.m. in Gerrard Hall, announced Dean E. L. Mackie yesterday.

Following the initiation a banquet will be held in Lenoir Hall.

Three Negro Students Said Planning To Start Undergraduate Work Here Next Fall; NAACP Backing Them

Spokesman Ready To Take Issue To Court

By FRED POWLEDGE

Three Durham Negroes will apply for undergraduate admission to the University next fall, according to an official of the NAACP.

UNC Trustee policy provides that Negroes may enter graduate or professional schools "when such schools are not provided by and in the state of North Carolina for such racial groups." The trustees are not on record as allowing Negro undergraduates to enter the University.

The Negroes' spokesman, Attorney C. O. Pearson of Durham, said yesterday he plans to ask the University to admit the students. If the University refuses, said Pearson, he will ask the Board of Trustees. If trustees turn the trio down, he said, he will submit a petition in federal court asking that the students be allowed to enter.

The three Durham Negro High School Seniors have been refused undergraduate admission to UNC according to a report received last night.

Director of Admissions Roy Armstrong stated that under present UNC trustee policy concerning Negro students, "Undergraduates just aren't eligible.

'GOOD STUDENTS'

Pearson did not reveal the three students' names, but he did say they are graduating seniors at Hillside High School in Durham, and that they are "all good students."

Letters of application from the trio have been received by the admissions office here. Letters of rejection, stating trustee policy, have been mailed back to the students. As of this week no further correspondence has been received from the Negroes.

Attorney Pearson said parents of the three students have asked NAACP officials to help in entering their sons in the University. As of yet, he said, he has not notified University officials of his plan. Director of Admissions Roy Armstrong had no comment yesterday.

Pearson said he didn't know whether the students plan to commute or establish residence here if they enter. As for the chance of their being accepted, he said "I'm like the doctor; you never know until the patient gets well."

The trustee policy on admitting Negro students was established April 3, 1951, when the body decided Negro applications to graduate or professional schools "shall be processed without regard to color or race."

Pulitzer Winner To Talk Here

Pulitzer prize winning Vermont C. Royster, senior associate editor of The Wall Street Journal, will be the principal speaker at the Saturday evening dinner of the North Carolina Editorial Writers Conference to be held here in Chapel Hill this weekend.

Royster is a former resident of Raleigh and was graduated from UNC in 1935. Since that time he has worked for the New York City News Assn. and then for The Wall Street Journal, as a reporter, Washington correspondent, chief Washington columnist and then as senior associate editor in the New York office.

During the war he served in the Navy and was commander of a destroyer escort in Okinawa at the conclusion of the war.

When he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1953, his citation read: "An ability to decide the underlying moral issue, illuminated by a deep faith and confidence in the people of our country, is the outstanding characteristic of the editorials of Vermont C. Royster which won for him the 1953 award for editorial writing.

"In his editorials, he has ranged from the Robinson-Maxim prize-fight through such political events as the election campaign and the seizure of the steel industry by President Truman up to the significance of the New Testament's teachings in our daily life."

SEGREGATION TALK

Editors from 30 or more North Carolina daily, weekly and semi-weekly papers will gather in Chapel Hill for the opening session of the conference to be held tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., at which time there will be a panel discussion on the problems posed by the Supreme Court decision on segregation. Panel members will be C. A. McKnight, editor of The Southern School News, William T. Polk, associate editor of The Greensboro Daily News, and the Rev. Tom T. Edwards of St. Philip's Episcopal Church in Durham. Walter Spearman of the University School of Journalism will be moderator for the panel.

Al Resch of Siler City is chairman of the Editorial Writers Conference and Robert Mason of Sanford is the program chairman for this year's meeting.

AWARD WINNERS TAYLOR, BOLDEN AND McQUIRE
. . . for straight news, features and sports

Russell And Coffin Honored, Awards Made At Press Feed

Charles Phillips Russell and Oscar J. Coffin, both retiring members of the journalism faculty, were honored Tuesday night at the annual Press Club Awards banquet, at which Chancellor Robert B. House was main speaker.

The banquet was attended by students in the School of Journalism and many of the School's faculty members.

Club President Earl D. McGuire of Danville, Va., presented gifts to the honored guests, and Chancellor House paid tribute to their contributions to the University.

Coffin has been a member of the faculty in the Journalism School since 1926, and was dean until his resignation in 1953. Russell, who teaches creative writing and who has written a number of books, chiefly biographies, has been on the faculty since 1931.

Another feature of the banquet was the presentation of the annual student journalism writing awards, which consist of subscriptions to Time magazine and certificates of merit. The awards are given each year for student newspaper writing in the fields of straight news, sports, features, and editorials and columns.

Winners in the straight news division, judged by Joe Brown, city editor of The High Point Enterprise, were Raymond M. Taylor, Washington, first place, and Don Bolden ,Burlington, second. In feature writing, judged by Herbert O'Keef, Sunday editor of The Raleigh News and Observer, Bolden captured first place, Taylor second, and Bernie Weiss of Norfolk, Va., third.

In the editorial and column division, judged by Weimar Jones of The Franklin Press, Taylor won first and Jim Dunn, Charleston, S. C., second. The sports writing, judged by Jake Wade, UNC sports publicist, was won by Earl McGuire, first; with Weiss, second, and Ray Linker, Charlotte, third.

The awards were presented by Clinton T. Andrews Jr., Hickory, and Hazel Crawford, Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla., contest co-chairman.

The Press Club was organized years ago for members of the School of Journalism and members of campus publication staffs to promote fellowship among students interested in journalism as a vocation. Prominent speakers are called in during the year to talk to the club members during their meetings.

Walter Spearman of the School of Journalism faculty is the club's adviser.

Traffic Group Ponders Setting Up Car Court

By JACKIE GOODMAN

The Student Traffic Committee, in its first meeting yesterday, voted to investigate the possibilities of setting up a student traffic court here.

The committee was appointed April 29 by student body President Don Fowler. The purpose of the committee was to "expediate" the administration's proposal to introduce next fall a program of "compulsory registration of student automobiles and strict enforcement of regulations" through student government channels said Fowler at that time.

Layton McCurdy, chairman of the committee, told the members in yesterday's meeting the main problem is "to figure out a more effective system of getting these (student) cars registered." He said that the faculty is putting pressure on the administration concerning the great number of student cars here. He added that both Fred Weaver, dean of Student Affairs, and President Gordon Gray are opposed to denying students the right to have cars here.

Jim Monteith, committee member, suggested the possibility of setting up a student traffic court to regulate registration of student cars and to try traffic violations. The committee, however, did not make any recommendations as to what powers the court would have if it were established.

GOING TO STATE

The committee decided to go to State College in Raleigh on Friday to investigate the student traffic regulation there.

Other problems discussed were the problems of how to find students with unregistered cars before they have any violations and what to do about students who have cars that are registered in their parents' names.

The question of how such a court would be set up was also discussed. The two possibilities mentioned by committee members were by a constitutional amendment, which would call for a referendum, and by appointments made by the student body president.

The committee is scheduled to meet again at 7:15 p.m. Monday night.

Members of the Student Traffic Committee present at yesterday's meeting besides McCurdy and Monteith were Chuck Flack, Eric Jonas, Gardner Foley and Jim Dackery. Other members not attending are Frank Warren and Bob Mason.

Med Student Wins Award For Character

Harvey Allsbrook Page, second year medical student in the School of Medicine, has been named winner of the William deB. MacNider Award, according to Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, dean of the school.

The award was sponsored first by the second-year class of 1950 and was established as a public commendation of a sophomore medical student who is elected by classmates as possessing the intangible traits of good character which were typified by Dr. "Billy" NacNider during his 51 years as teacher and professor in the University.

The presentation is in the form of a plaque on which the recipient's name is to be inscribed each year.

In announcing this award, Dr. Berryhill also reported results of elections of officers for the Whitehead Society, composed of all Medical School students, and the chairman of the School's Honor Council, John Vassey of Asheville.

Whitehead Society officers for 1955-56 are William W. McLendon, Greensboro, president; William Purcell, Laurinburg, vice-president; Nat Sparrow, Chapel Hill, secretary; and Jack Hobson, Charlotte, treasurer.

FRIENDS OF THE LIBRARY:

Famous, Valuable Works On Display

By I. T. LITTLETON

During May the UNC Library will feature exhibitions of gifts donated by Friends of the Library during the past year. The annual Friends of the Library dinner will be held at the Carolina Inn on Friday.

William Henry Hoyt of New York will speak on "Reminiscence on the Evolution of A Book Collection." Approximately 130 persons are expected to attend.

The Friends of the Library, an organization composed of Alumni, faculty and others interested in the development and growth of the University's Library, have given during the past year several hunderd volumes which could not have been obtained by other means. Numerous rare and valuable items relating to North Carolina are on display.

PENN LETTER

Of particular interest is an original letter written and signed by John Penn of North Carolina. This letter was written at Philadelphia to North Carolina Governor Richard Caswell in July, 1778. John Penn's signature is one of the rarest of all signers of the Declaration of Independence. It is a gift of James N. B. Hill of Boston, Mass.

Also of wide state interest are the orginal documents signed by several early governors of North Carolina, a gift of University President Gordon Gray.

Nine items from Preston Davie of New York City are on display, including an original manuscript written in 1699, setting forth the claims of the heirs of Daniel Coxe to the territory of Carolina; a fine original map of the Battle of Camden, 1780, and three 17th century volumes relating to Sir Walter Raleigh.

FIRST PRINTER

Special display cases are devoted to the Bruce Cotten Collection of North Carolinana which the Library recently acquired by legacy from the Estate of the late Major Bruce Cotten of Baltimore, Md. Maj. Cotten was an alumnus of the University, class of 1895. Included in the Bruce Cotten Collection are extremely beautiful and rare copies of early North Carolina historical sources. Early North Carolina imprints exhibited include a 1752 compliation of North Carolina laws, published by James Davis in New Bern. Davis was the first North Carolina printer and began printing in 1749. On display is the only known copy of The Journal of the House of the Assembly, printed by Davis in 1765.

Exhibition cases contain selected gifts from more than 30 different donors. One of the most significant items is a book printed in Spain in 1491 which was given by Miles C. Horton Jr., of Greensboro. The Library's copy is one of three known copies in the United States. George Watts Hill of Durham has given several valuable albums of musical recordings to the Music Library. Representative of his gifts is a complete set of the recordings of Mozart's piano works.

LEWIS CARROLL

Numerous rarities donated by William A. Whitaker, class of 1904, are on display. Among these are several first editions of Nathaniel Hawthorne as well as a limited edition of Lewis Carroll's Through the Looking Glass, signed by Alice Hargreaves, the original "Alice." On the ground floor, display cases are filled with books given by Whitaker. One contains first editions and autograph letters of William Makepeace Thackeray; others, significant items from the Whitaker Collection of Costume Plates in Color.

The Chamber's Collar

The United States Chamber of Commerce resolution against teachers who "are addicted to Communist doctrines" calls up the old, worn picture of the bulls in the china shop.

The Chamber, since it feels called to toy with this very touchy problem needs to remember certain already-belabored facts about addiction to Communist doctrines. Addiction to "doctrines" is decidedly more complex than addiction to opium-eating in the de Quincey manner.

A teacher who may abhor, for the sake of argument, the Soviet movement as an entity may be "addicted" on the other hand, to certain "Communist doctrines." We know a history professor who is an economic determinist. We know an economist who believes Marx made a valid diagnosis when he saw society as subject to continuing class warfare. Neither of the two gentlemen gives endorsement to the Communist movement.

The stimatization of possibly valid economic and sociological doctrines, merely because they happen to be held coincidentally by Soviet theorists, is one of the gravest heresies of our academic time—and a heresy which could easily destroy objectivity in scholarship.

Communists who distort history and economics to serve their own interpretation are no more guilty than those who distort to serve a so-called capitalistic interpretation.

"A university," Dr. Robert M. Hutchins told a U. S. House of Representatives committee in 1952, > is a kind of continuing Socratic conversation on the highest level for the very best people you can think of, you can bring together, about the most important questions, and the thing that you must do to the uttermost possible limits is to guarantee those men the freedom to think and to express themselves.

> Now, the limits on this freedom cannot be merely prejudice, because although our prejudices might be perfectly satisfactory, the prejudices of our successors, or of those who are in a position to bring pressure to bear on the institution, might be subversive in the real sense, subverting the . . . doctrine of free thought and free speech.

The Chamber of Commerce needs to look at itself in a mirror. Music, art, scholarship, that continuing Socratic dialog have, at times, been collared by the prejudice of "Communist doctrines."

The Chamber of Commerce now proposes, in effect, that we harness objectivity with "American doctrines." Is that what they meant to do?

On To Goettingen!

High congratulations to Dave Mundy, our stout old adversary and reactioneer, on his being chosen first exchange student to Goettingen.

Goettingen exchange scholarships are among the high privileges this, or any, university has to offer its students. We can say that from our own angle, and in praise of the men who worked up the Goettingen idea and moved into a pioneering role in the student exchange program.

There is much, we are sure, to be said from the Goettingen angle. The revival of German nationalism, spurred by newly-won West German independence and her pending part in the western alliance, is a force to be handled with soft gloves. The American programs and ideas which have gained favor (perhaps forced) among the Rhinelanders will now be in the open market for close scrutiny.

We need diplomats, student and otherwise, to keep those ideas purchasable in the eyes of the new Germans. We hope Dave will do his part.

The Ugly Head Of Crime—3: Laundrymark

J. A. C. Dunn

THE CAROLINA THEATER was graced last weekend with a long yellow trailer which sat in the parking space of the Texaco station next to it and gave the whole area a rather sinister atmosphere. There were blue letters on the side of the trailer which gave the idea that within the vehicle there could be found an interesting display (free) of modern methods of scientific crime detection.

"We edged furtively up to the entrance and slipped unobtrusively through the door.

"Donations," said a voice, and there was a woman behind a microphone with a collection of change spread on the counter in front of her. "Pay whatever you can." We paid whatever we could, which happened to be our breakfast money, and went on into the trailer.

THE FIRST ITEM on exhibition was a large and confusing collection of little bottles and brushes and rubber rollers which, according to the label, had something to do with the chemical end of crime detection. We did not understand them, since the woman behind the microphone, who was, we suppose, there for the purpose of explaining the inevident details of the display, was more concerned with getting donations than with explaining. We moved on.

Next there was a shadow box with a pair of mens' shorts and a handkerchief tacked up inside it. "A corpse was identified," the card said, "by invisible laundry marks which were not detected until subjected to ultra violet light. Hold this cord down and the ultra-violet light will turn on." We held the cord down, the ultra-violet light turned on, but we couldn't see any laundry marks. Maybe we wouldn't make a good detective.

AFTER THE shorts and the handkerchief there was a replica of Florida's electric chair, a simple but sturdy wooden chair, with wrist and ankle straps and an electrode wire, which, as the sign said, was wired to the victim's head. We were invited (by the sign) to press the button and see how much electricity was shot through those unfortunates whom Florida wished to eliminate. We pressed the button, and the electro-something-or-others flew off from between two little brass prongs. Beside the chair was a sort of radio arrangement for receiving last minute reprieves, with a second-clock revolving insidiously in its face. To complete the effect, there was a photograph of a Floridian in the throes of electrocution. We passed on.

THE FINGERPRINTING display was quite interesting. "Put your hand in the right hand side of the box," said the sign, "and see what kind of fingerprint patterns you have under the magnifier. Then turn your hand over and look at your dirty fingernails." We put our hand in. The first, second and fourth fingers had a "lateral pocket" pattern, while the third finder had a common "whorl" pattern. Our fingernails were clean, thank-you.

We examined the tear gas guns, and equipment for detecting latent fingerprints, and other constabular impedimenta, and then slinked out past the calling for donations, determined to check our shorts for invisible laundry marks and to see whether we couldn't get the whorl on our third finger eradicated or changed to a medial pocket pattern, or something. We don't think we were followed as we walked down the street, but we couldn't swear to it.

'I'm Asking You In A Nice Way'

GOOD OR BAD?

All's Quiet On Capitol Hill

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON—"Now you know what it was like around here when Coolidge was President," Capitol veterans are explaining to Roosevelt-vintage friends as a dull legislative session enters the home stretch.

They describe a situation that was not expected when Democrats regained control of Congress last January. But somehow, the issues on which Democrats counted failed to achieve popular appeal. There have been no spectacular investigations; even that tried-and-true scrapegoat, the stock market, escaped unscathed from a probe of its operations.

A change of pace in the next two months seems unlikely. Routine matters like appropriations will predominate. A few controversies are coming up including a minimum wage bill and an effort to free natural gas producers from Federal regulation. But the Bricker amendment has had it, and the President's highway bill will be abandoned in favor of the old and tested methods, and the bill to re-establish rigid farm price supports which passed the House will get no serious notice in the Senate.

JUST DANDY

All this suits the White House just dandy. President Eisenhower is a small government, states' rights man. Also, unlike his immediate predecessors he puts no burrs under the saddle of the Congressional leadership, Democrats though they are.

Nor does he engage in the kind of battles for his own proposals to which Washington has become accustomed. His committees on various problems—transportation, fuels, intergovernmental relations—continue to churn out reports which are dutifully dispatched to the Hill. The rest is silence.

The Hoover Commission reports are virtually a dead letter with no fight being made for their enactment. Influential members of Congress believe that much of what they recommend is unrealistic and the failure of important Republicans to push them lends support to that view.

Democrats divide on whether the present lethargy is necessary and desirable.

Its defenders argue that the country is tired after a depression and two wars so that the present breathing spell is wise. They contend that the party can catch up next session and what it does then will be fresh in the minds of the voters next November. For example, plans are being made for a Democratic tax bill next year which will be tailored to the small taxpayer.

Some in this group suggest that the President is fishing in very troubled foreign policy waters. They believe the Presidential campaign will hinge on the results he obtains there, and so, they ask why make any sound and fury now.

COMPROMISE

The Democrats who feel their party is compromising with principle say that their mail shows the grass roots agree with them. They contend the country is not nearly so well off as Washington believes nor the President so popular. They want a charge of "no leadership" leveled at the President and held there.

Senate majority leader Johnson of Texas is of course a target of this group since he is largely responsible for the compromising that has been done. His friends answer that since he has only a one vote majority to work with he has to do what he does.

To add to the thunders of partisan silence, Senator McCarthy has all but disappeared from the Senate floor. He has said that reports he is sick were only "wishful thinking" on the part of his enemies.

Head Cheerleader Collison Charged Of Being Poor Victor

Editors:

Our Hero.

In dedication to the newly-elected head cheerleader in whom we, as students, put our confidence to show sportsmanship, truth, and respect for the good of our school and not the prestige of one individual. Before launching out to represent Carolina, I would suggest that he display suitable actions to his fellow associates.

Onions to Collie Collison who cut Pepper Tice from his squad because of "personal reasons" . . . It is quite obvious that the students wanted Pepper to cheer since there was only a margin of a hundred votes. But Collie, which is more important pleasing the students or yourself???

Also, our hero considers himself such an expert, experienced, capable judge that he couldn't listen to Jim Fountain's help. Consequently, Jim didn't return and a few cheerleaders sat together discussing and reaching their mutual decision. The hero's decision didn't correspond, as he felt he had sound reasons of a sexy figure without considering ability.

Webster defines sportsmanship as "honest, rivalry, one who in sports is fair and generous—a good loser, but graceful winner."

Not Enough Poor Teachers

Ralph McGill

"You want good teachers? Don't you know there are not enough poor teachers to go around?"

Dr. Mark O. Schilerer, superintendent of Cleveland's (Ohio) schools was speaking at the national conference on the national manpower crisis.

His bitter mood rode on his words.

"Industry comes along with its moneybags and hires its teachers out from under us . . . that's like killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. . . ."

The educators were gathered to discuss the growing shortages, already serious, in science, engineering, teaching, medicine, nursing and other professions.

A general conclusion was:

"Industry is now getting the cream of the teaching crop, leaving the skim milk for the schools and the colleges. Many of the teachers now are incompetent, they do not inspire their pupils, nor do they have any particular love for teaching."

Industry, of course, must continue to take trained men . . . It is neither practical nor desirable to reduce salaries in industry to the shrinking amounts paid teachers.

There is just one answer.

give much more generously, and annually, to education. The day of large endowment gifts from men of great wealth is about done. Tax and inheritance laws steadily reduce such contributions.

BITTERNESS

It will be folly if we fail to note that many scientists today are bitter and resentful. They are harassed by the McCarthy-type mind in the government. The recent death of Einstein, that kindly man whose greatest contribution was to the beauty of the gentleness in man, illustrates their irritation.

Had it not been for the generosity of friends, he would have died poor. As it was his estate was small.

Yet, it was his genius which brought about the greatest scientific revolution of our age. Out of his formulae came industries which will continue to make millions for owners. Einstein's only profits were from teaching.

NEED

About a year ago Enrico Fermi, the Italian scientist who fled Mussolini's Fascist Italy and settled in the United States, died of cancer. He was 53. It was he who conducted, at the University of Chicago, the first experiment which proved uranium fissionable. He was one of the great pioneers in a field in which several thousands of persons have already become wealthy.

Had it not been for a belated gift of $25,000 from the Atomic Energy Commission just before his death, his family would have been in financial distress.

Yet there are new millionaires today because of Fermi's discoveries.

Geiger, who invented the Geiger counter which has made many prospectors and mining companies financially secure, got but little.

The story could go on and on . . . for scientists the death of Fermi, and now Einstein, point up what seems an injustice.

Another cause of irritation is that while a physicist of ability pays full taxes on a salary of $7,000 or so a year, oil men are allowed a "depletion" deduction of 2½ per cent in taxes, and citrus growers are treated almost as well. Industries also are protected by tariffs. Farmers are assisted by guaranteed prices.

But, for the creative mind behind all this—and for the scientists, the artists and teachers there is no "depletion" deduction. (Salk and his vaccine are a present example.)

In addition to all this many in the government view scientists as dubious security risks merely because they are scientist. It is a serious problem. Life and opportunity are not on an equitable basis. It is not at all surprising there are shortages in teaching, in science and in the scientific professions.

Matter Of Fact

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—The change of atmosphere in Washington in the last few weeks is astonishing. Hardly a month ago there was more war talk than at any time since the Korean War. Now the talk is all of peace, with President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles both on record with optimistic remarks about the prospects. Why the change?

Partly, perhaps, it is wishful thinking induced by handsome spring weather. Partly, certainly, it is because of the carefully hedged Chinese Communist offer to negotiate on the Formosa crisis. Even more, it is because of the apparent willingness of the Soviets to withdraw their troops from Austria—the first post-war withdrawal of Soviet troops from Soviet-occupied territory. But in addition, there has also been a steadily growing belief in the Eisenhower administration that the Soviet regime may genuinely wish a period of relaxation of war tension.

There have been seemingly reliable reports that the Soviets restrained their Chinese Communist allies at the height of the Formosa crisis. But the belief that the Soviets may want a breathing spell, which is of course still very tentative, is also based on the following factors:

First, there is no doubt that Soviet agriculture is faced with a most serious crisis. Careful analysis suggests that the Russian urban population is growing at a rate of 4½ per cent a year, while food production is increasing at hardly more than half that rate. This analysis is largely confirmed by Communist party boss Khrushchev himself, and by other party leaders, who have made no bones about the seriousness of the crisis.

Population growing at double the rate of food production is a formula for eventual famine, as any child can see. The Khrushchev plan for averting this disaster envisages heavily mechanized agriculture in the arid, virgin lands of the Soviet Far East. So far, this solution has proved a costly failure. But the attempt is continuing, and it places an extremely heavy strain on the Soviet economy for tractors, transport of all kinds, and other hard goods.

Second, there is also a heavy, growing and directly competitive strain on the Soviet economy, arising from the demand for military hard goods.

The satellite ground forces are still equipped with Soviet war surplus and captured German arms, now rapidly becoming obsolete. With the Kremlin establishing a "unified command" in the satellites, to counter NATO, there is a real need to re-equip the satellite armies. At the same time there is also increasing pressure to re-equip the Red Army itself.

The tactical doctrine of the Red Army, which calls for enormous concentrations of foot soldiers and material to achieve a break-through, has been made obsolete by the tactical atomic bomb. The Red Army leaders are aware that this is so, and they are beginning to demand the great amounts of transport, communications equipment and so on required to provide dispersion and mobility as protection against atomic attack.

To add what may be the last straw, promised Soviet delivery of military hard goods to the Chinese Communists has fallen far behind schedule, and, according to intelligence reports considered reliable, the Chinese are angrily pressing for the promised arms. For political reasons, it is immensely important to the Soviets to make good their promises to the Chinese.

Thus a picture emerges of the already over-strained Soviet economy being subjected to enormous demands from two different directions, agricultural and military. Now add to the picture the further evidence of the steadily growing political influence of the Red Army. Marshal Zhukov's initiative in writing to his "old comrade in arms," President Eisenhower, is only the latest of many small signs that the army is becoming a decisive influence, as it never was under Stalin.

One such sign, for example, was a recent promotion list for Red Army generals. Always in the past there was a careful balance between the political, or party generals, and the professional soldiers. This time, according to a careful analysis by U. S. Army G-2, every single man promoted was a soldier with a good war record—and some had decidedly doubtful party records. Such signs clearly suggest that the Red Army is very much more independent of the Communist party, and thus very much more powerful, than ever before.

It seems to be a law of nature that professional soldiers—at least ground soldiers—are cautious about political adventures and over-extended commitments (President Eisenhower and Gen. Ridgway seem to be obeying this law here in the United States). It may be that the Red Army leaders, faced with an over-strained economy at home and risky commitments abroad, really are eager for a period of relaxation and retrenchment, perhaps even for the kind of "you stay in your back yard and I'll stay in my back yard" arrangement that soldiers like.

That at least, is the theory. It may be dead wrong. There are those who believe instead that the Soviets and the Chinese Communists are now making a brilliant double play, the object being to chloroform the Western alliance in Europe, and then kill it outright in Asia. But at least the theory outlined above is worth testing, and this the Eisenhower administration is now preparing to do.

Joyner Edges Sigma Chi For Mural Title

Converse of Sigma Chi is out at first on an attempted bunt in the above picture taken as Joyner edged Sigma Chi 8-7 to win the campus softball title. Davis is the Joyner first baseman making the put-out.

Although out-hit 10-7, Joyner Dorm used their safties to advantage yesterday in edging Sigma Chi 8-7 for the campus intramural softball championship.

Joyner, dorm division champs, put together a six run second inning and added singletons in the fifth and sixth frames. The sixth inning tally, which proved to be the victory margin, came on an error, a hit, and a pair of infield outs.

Bob Showfety led Joyner at the plate with a homer and a single in three trips. His homer came in the second with one man aboard. Mitchell and Hendren both homered in the third for Sigma Chi to pick up three runs. Mitchell's homer came with one mate on base. Glenn had three hits in four trips for the fraternity champs.

Duke's Hettleman First Seeded In ACC Net Event

Buzzy Hettleman of Duke and the doubles team of Herb Browne and Tom Bradford of Carolina are the top-seeded players in the Atlantic Coast Conference tennis tournament which opens on the UNC courts today. The seedings were made out by ACC coaches in a meeting in Woollen Gym last night. The coaches also set up the pairings for the first round of play. There are 54 singles entries and 26 doubles entries in the event.

Charles Atherton of Virginia was second seeded behind Hettleman, with Carolina and Duke taking all but one of the remaining singles seedings.

Third seeded was Browne of UNC, followed by Bobby Greene of Duke, Bradford, Bobby Payne of UNC, Dave Schimmel of Duke, and Dave Freishtat of Maryland, in that order.

Four doubles teams were seeded. After Browne and Bradford of UNC came Greene and Hettleman of Duke, Payne and Greene of UNC and Aye and Si of Clemson.

The finals of the three-day event are scheduled Saturday afternoon.

The first round pairings, as decided upon last night are as follows:

SINGLES

10:00-Beck (D) vs. Morris (UVa). Mitchell (C) vs. Greene (UNC), Browne (UNC) vs. LeBauer (D), Cashion (NCS) vs. Few (D), Theos (C) vs. Jones (WF), Frantz (NCS) vs. Rogers (WF), Schimmel (D) vs. Wise (C), Daughtridge (WF) vs. Soeer (USC), Whitworth (USC) vs. Kerdasha (UNC), Handel (UNC) vs. Rutledge (UVA), Hettleman (D) vs. Griffin (WF), Scherer (USC) vs. Livingston (UNC).

11:00-Atherton (UVA) vs. Memory (WF), Brinkley (NCS) vs. Gantt (USC), Freishtat (Md) vs. Greenstein (UVA), Heinz (USC) vs. Reichard (NCS), Dorsey (UVA) vs. Aye (C), Payne (UNC) vs. Kopf (D), Kammerer (Md) vs. Scarpa (C), O'Callagham (D) vs. Patterson (WF), Cromwell (UVA) vs. Plowden (USC), Greene (D) vs. Echols (UVA), DeCoursey (NCS) vs. Garren (WF), Mann (WF) vs. Thompson (UNC).

DOUBLES

The coaches set no definite starting times for the doubles matches. The doubles entries will play their matches whenever courts are available.

The doubles pairings: Rutledge-Echols (UVA) vs. Brinkley-McCoy (NCS), Greene-Payne (UNC) vs. Speer-Heinz (USC), Atheton-Valentine (UVA) vs. Mitchell-Wise (C), O'Callaghan-Few (D) vs. Griffin-Daughtridge (WF), Bradford-Browne (UNC) vs. Dorsey-Jones (UVA), Rogers-Mann (WF) vs. Kopf-Schimmel (D), Patterson-Jones (WF) vs. Freisht-at-Kammerer (Md), Handel-Gustafson (UNC) vs. Beck-LeBauer (D). All other doubles teams drew byes until Friday.

All contestants are requested by the tournament committee to report to the officials' table after their matches to report the score and find out their next match.

In ACC Track Meet

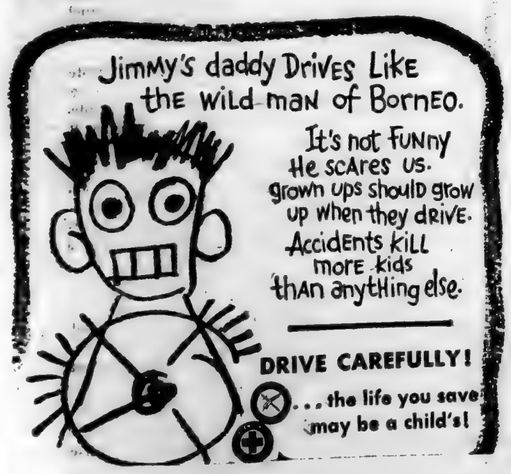
Time Trials Slated Friday, Finals Sat.

Dale Ranson, coach of the host Carolina team, has announced the schedule of events for the annual Atlantic Coast Conference track meet which opens on Fetzer Field Friday afternoon.

Trials in ten events are slated for Friday and finals in all fifteen events are on tap for Saturday.

The ACC meet will feature the top track performers from Clemson, Duke, Maryland, Carolina, N. C. State, South Carolina, Wake Forest and Virginia.

Five places will be determined for each event, with points being awarded on a 5-4-3-2-1 basis. All five place winners in each event will be awarded medals, and a trophy will go to the winning team.



Field event trials will open the meet Friday afternoon at three o'clock. At that time, qualifying for the shot put, Javelin, and broad jump will get underway. The discus trials start at 4:15. The schedule for the six track qualifying runs is as follows: 4:00, 440 yard run; 4:15, 100 yard dash; 4:30, 120 year high hurdles; 4:45, 880 yard run; 5:00, 220 yard dash; 5:15, 220 yard low hurdles.

On Saturday, finals in the pole vault, high jump, javelin, shot put, and broad jump will start at 1:30, with the discus finals scheduled for 2:30. The schedule for finals in track events are as follows: 2:00, Mile Run; 2:10, 440; 2:20, 100 yard dash; 2:30, 120 high hurdles; 2:40, 880; 2:50, 220; 3:00, Two Mile Run; 3:15, 220 yard low hurdles; and 3:25, mile relay.

No admission will be charged for Friday's trials. Admission to the finals Saturday will be fifty cents.

Wolflets Batter Tar Babies By 20-3 Tab

By JIM FINE

The State freshmen defeated the Tar Babies for the fourth time this year by the score of 20-3 in a game played yesterday at Emerson Stadium. State scored in the first on an error, a wild pitch, and a Texas Leaguer, to jump into an early lead.

The Wolflets bunched two singles in the top of the fifth for their second run. The State frosh also showed good defensive power early in the game as they pulled two double plays to snuff out potential Tar Baby runs.

The Tar Babies came back in the bottom of the sixth when Don Lewis singled. Larry King sacrificed him to second, then Roger Honeycutt flied to center for the second out. Delon Lambert came on to hit and promptly knocked a triple to deep left field. Joe Temple lined a long drive to right field, but a beautiful running catch by the State right fielder robbed him of a home run to end the inning.

State's big rally came in its half of the seventh when a hit batter, two singles in succession, plus three bases on balls netted the Wolflets nine big runs. McIver came on to replace Gilliand, and walked three straight batters. George Currin replaced McIver, giving up two runs before State second baseman Bradshaw grounded out.

Again in the ninth, State had a big rally. Pinch-hitter Castleberry swung the big bat in the last inning as he slammed a home run with two mates on base.

Score by innings:

State	100 010 918—20	16	3
Carolina	000 001 110— 3	8	7

ACC Golf Play Opens At W-S

WINSTON-SALEM, May 11 — The top golfers from the eight Atlantic Coast Conference schools will gather here today to open play in the annual conference golf tournament.

Undefeated Carolina took first place in the regular season race by dropping Maryland twice, Virginia, N. C. State and Duke. They were tied once by Wake Forest. UNC and Wake are pre-tourney favorites to have their top men in the finals.

The tourney determines the conference individual champ.

Last year's champ — Arnold Palmer of Wake Forest — will not be back to defend the title that he won.

Krepp, Drake Miss Records

Daily Tar Heel Athletes of the Week Phil Drake and Charlie Krepp failed yesterday to add the 400 meter and 440 yard American records to their growing strings.

Krepp, in the first trial, missed for the 400 meters by five-tenths of a second and the 440 yard by six-tenths. His times were 5:03.2 and 5:05.3 for the backstroke events.

In the second trial, Drake swam 5:42.5 and 5:44.5 in the breaststroke distances. The records are 5:31.5 and 5:33.8.

Last Friday both Krepp and Drake set new American records in the 500 meter, 500 yard distances. They will try again next Tuesday afternoon at 5:15 in the Indoor Pool to break the 400 meter and 440 yard records.

Krepp will again be swimming backstroke and Drake breaststroke.

Officials in next Tuesday's trials will be Carl Blythe, Ham Strayhorn, Bob Linker, Bob Colbert, Bill Meade, Jack Lowder, Warrenn Heemann, Lee Holmes, and Ed Shawley.

Win Ends State Hopes For Title

RALEIGH, May 11—Carolina pitcher Billy Joe Johnson spaced nine N. C. State hits, rapped three himself, including a homer, drove in two runs and scored a pair to lead the Tar Heels to their seventh win in their last eight starts here today.

Johnson's pitching and batting efforts were the big item as UNC topped N. C. State 10-5 in a game viewed by 1,500 spectators. The righthander fanned four State batters and walked only two in picking up his second win of the season against no losses.

Johnson and the Tar Heels took on the role of spoilers in walloping the Wolfpack, as the win virtually ended State's chances of winning the ACC title. The Wolfpack was tied with Wake Forest for leadership in the ACC before today's game, which was their last conference tilt of the season. Wake has one more loop game. They play winless Virginia Saturday afternoon.

The 'Pack jumped on Johnson for four runs in the first two innings, but the Senior settled down after that and allowed only one more run.

Meanwhile the Tar Heels were banging away at five State hurlers for fifteen hits, including homers by Johnson and Connie Gravitte.

Carolina picked up a pair in the first and added three more in the second, they exploded for five big runs in the sixth to sew up the game.

The Tar Heels have two more ACC games remaining on their schedule, both at Chapel Hill. They host Virginia Friday afternoon and close out the regular season against Duke at Emerson Field on Saturday.

Wake Forest Wallops Blue Devils By 12-5

WAKE FOREST, May 11. (AP)—Wake Forest reached three Duke hurlers for 10 hits and a 12-5 win over the Blue Devils here today.

The victory was the 19th of the season for the Deacons against five losses but did not count in the Atlantic Coast conference standings.

Left-fielder Frank McRae drove in four runs with three singles in three times at bat to lead the Deacon attack along with Bill Barnes. A triple by Barnes with the bases loaded climaxed a five-run rally in the third inning to put Wake Forest out front to stay.

The three Duke hurlers—Phil Vivona, Bob Theummel and John Rudisill—walked 13 and were charged with six wild pitches. Vivona was the loser.

Dick Kreutzer drove in three of Duke's runs with a two-run homer in the first and a triple in the seventh. Andy Cockrell homered in the seventh with one aboard.

Score by innings:

Ted Says He'll Rejoin Boston

By BOB HOOBING

BOSTON, May 11. (AP)—Ted Williams, one of baseball's all time greatest hitters, ended his retirement today with a phone call to the Boston Red Sox that he would arrive Friday.

"There's no use waiting any longer, I'll be in Friday," Williams said.

Williams called General Manager Joe Cronin from Miami where the final settlement of his divorce was recorded this morning.

"I'm not going to wait any longer," Ted told Cronin. "I've spent two days with my daughter. I'd made up my mind to play baseball again before the settlement was completed."

Although Williams never has explained his now discarded decision to quit baseball, friends said his marital difficulties were the principal reason.

Now that they have been resolved these same friends say that was all he needed to bring him back to scenes of his athletic glory.

SUMER IS ICUMEN IN

Sumer is icumen in;
Lhude sing cuccu!

Thus, as every schoolboy knows, begins T. S. Eliot's immortal Hiawatha. And no wonder "The Boy Orator of the Platte" (as T. S. Eliot is commonly called) was moved to pen such lighthearted lines! For summer (or the "vernal equinox" as it is frequently referred to) is the happiest season of the year, mild and balmy and contented-making.

Which brings us, of course, to Philip Morris Cigarettes. They, too, are mild and balmy and contented-making. But that is not all. They are also genial, placid, and amiable. But that is still not all. They are, moreover, smooth, pacific, and lenient. But hold! There is more. They are, in addition, tranquillizing, clement, and dulcet.

Indeed the list could go on and on, until every adjective is exhausted that would describe the mildness of Philip Morris, the subtlety of their blending, the delicacy of their flavor. What more perfect companion could be found to a summer's day? What more apt complement to a summer's night?

If you have been pleased with Philip Morris through the winter and spring—as who has not who has a taste bud left in his head?—you will find your pleasure compounded, your enjoyment trebled, when you smoke Philip Morris in the warm and joyous months before you.

My own plans for the summer (except that I will smoke Philip Morris through all my waking hours) are still vague. I have been invited to attend a writers conference, but I don't think I'll accept. I've been attending writers conferences for years, and I always have a perfectly rotten time. The trouble is that Alexandre Dumas and Harriet Beecher Stowe are always there. Not that I have anything against these two swell kids; it's just that it breaks my heart to see them. They're so in love—so terribly devoted and so hopelessly! Dumas will never divorce Jane Eyre while she is with Peary at the North Pole, and Miss Stowe has long since despaired of getting her release from the Pittsburgh Pirates. So hand in hand, brave and forlorn, they go from writers conference to writers conference while Dumas works on his monumental Stover at Yale.

No, thank you, I'll do without writers conferences this summer. I think instead I'll try to improve my fishing. As Izaak Walton once said, "No man is born an artist or an angler." I often turn to the works of Walton (or "The Fordham Flash" as he is familiarly called) when I am searching for a choice aphorism. In fact, I told him so when we met some years ago at a writers conference. Walton was accompanied, as always, by Henrik Ibsen (or "The Pearl of the Pacific" as he is known as). They—Ibsen ("The Pearl of the Pacific") and Walton ("The Fordham Flash")—were collaborating on Mister Roberts at the time, but they fell to quarreling and abandoned the project and the world, as a consequence, was deprived of a truly robust and entertaining comedy.

It is not uncommon, I must say, for writers to fall into dispute. They are, after all, a sensitive and high-strung lot. I'll never forget what William Makepeace Thackeray (or "The Body" as he was universally called) once said to me. "You show me a good writer," said Thackeray, "and I'll steal his wife."

Well, as I was saying, I think I'll give writers conferences a miss this summer, and I recommend that you do the same. Why don't you just take it easy? Swim and fish and sail and smoke and read and sleep and tan your lithe young limbs. I want the best for you because—if I may get a little misty in this, my final column of the year—I think you should know that it's been real kicks for me, delivering this nonsense to you each week.

And in conclusion let me state what Jane Austen (or "Old 54-40 or Fight" as she is called the world over) once said to me. "Nothing is so precious as friendship," she said, "and the richest man in the world is the one with the most money."

Summary Of Rep. Doughton's Dormitory Bill

"The Board of Trustees of The University of North Carolina, of East Carolina College and of Appalachian State Teachers College is hereby authorized to issue, at one time or from time to time, revenue bonds of the Board for the purpose of acquiring or constructing any project or projects," states Section two of the bill introduced Tuesday in the North Carolina House of Representatives by Rep. J. K. Doughton, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee.

According to Section 1 of the bill, "project" means and includes one or more dorms which may or may not have dining facilities and any "enlargements or improvements thereof or additions thereto . . . together with the necessary land and equipment."

The bonds which the Board would be authorized to issue under the bill may not mature after 40 years for the date and may not bear interest exceeding five percent per year. They may not exceed $2,000,000 for any dormitories built here, $2,000,000 for any built at State College in Raleigh, $1,000,000 for any built at Woman's College, $1,500,000 for any built at East Carolina College and $1,000,000 for any built at Appalachian State Teachers College.

If the bill is passed, it will allow the Board of Trustees to "increase the rentals for the facilities furnished by any existing dormitories . . . to provide, to the extent necessary, addition funds to liquidate in full any revenue bonds issued under this Act."

The bill also calls for an increase in the appropriations of three of the institutions so that "such increases in dormitory rentals above present levels . . . which were anticipated for the purpose of decreasing appropriations made for the next biennium may, as may be necessary, be applied on the interest and principal of revenue bonds" which might be issued under the bill. The increases which the bill calls for would include an $81,000 increase for UNC for each year of the next biennium, a $21,000 increase for State College for each year of the next biennium and a $12,500 increase for East Carolina College for each year of the next biennium.

New Quarterly Editor Wants To Discover New Talent

By JACKIE GOODMAN

"I intend to focus the magazine primarily on discovering, if need be developing, and presenting young authors of this campus," said Bill Scarborough, new editor of the Carolina Quarterly, yesterday.

Scarborough, junior English major from Mt. Gilead, was recently chosen the 1955-56 Quarterly editor by the magazine's Advisory Board.

The new Quarterly chief said that he intends to carry out his main purpose by emphasizing "three very important aspects" which the Quarterly "must fulfill to be a successful magazine." In listing these aspects, Scarborough said, "It has to be of high enough quality to interest people who are concerned with serious literature. It must also be of high enough quality to be a mark of prestige for any writers who publish in it. It has to be a working laboratory for students interested in editorial criticism and the evaluation and presentation of literature," he said.

Scarborough said that with two exceptions, all positions on the magazine are open, added that personnel is "urgently" needed.

In discussing other plans for next year's Quarterly the editor said, "We hope in the future to be able to pay authors of acceptable articles for their writing." He added that this will not include short stories and poetry. "We hope to start a poetry award and perhaps a dramatic award to correspond with the fiction contest," said Scarborough. "Also, if possible, the Quarterly will sponsor at least one, perhaps two, lecturers who will talk on the subject of literature in general, writing in particular."

The magazine will continue to publish outside material as it has done in the past, according to Scarborough. He said that this will be done for two reasons. "We hope to make the Carolina Quarterly of interest not merely to students at the University, but to all people interested in the development of creative writing. Also, presentation of authors from other places will tend to give local writers something to live up to, something to surpass," he said. He said he and the Quarterly staff feel that any magazine has an obligation to present its audience with the greatest variety of material as is possible.

Scott To Read About Controversial 'Mac Dec'

North Carolina Sen. Kerr Scott will read parts of Cradle of Liberty, a new booklet that is now being published on the highly controversial Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, in the United States Senate on May 20, which is the date the disputed document is supposed to have been drawn up in 1775.

The booklet contains the writings of Dr. Archibald Henderson, retired UNC professor, who said yesterday that the publication will contan his research of 43 years on the subject.

Dr. Henderson, who retired in 1948, was with the Dept. of Mathematics for half a century and rose from instructor to Kenan Professor and then to head of the department. He was one of the first scholars to comprehend the Einstein theory of relativity and is the official biographer of George Bernard Shaw.

Scott will not only read a part of the booklet, but every senator and representative in Congress will be presented with a copy, which is being published by the Mecklenburg Historical Society and is expected to be off the press this weekend.

The North Carolina Senator will read the first five clauses of the "Mec Dec," as it is often called by many persons. On May 20, when the Gentleman from Haw River reads from the Cradle of Liberty, it will not be the first time the Senate has heard of the Mecklenburg Declaration.

In 1819 the senators from Virginia and Massachusetts were at each other's throats concerning which of these states had started the revolutionary ball to rolling. At this point Representative William Davidson of Charlotte jumped into the scrap and claimed the honor for Mecklenburg County and North Carolina. However, little attention was paid Davidson because Thomas Jefferson and John Adams doubted North Carolina's claims.

Covering The Campus

The annual spring picnic sponsored by the Newman Club will take place Saturday afternoon at Clearwater Lake.

The group will meet at 2 p.m. in the Morehead Planetarium parking area. The event will be open to all club members and their friends.

rge Bernard Shaw may be seen. One the second floor in a special display room cases are devoted to Shaw's play, Pygmalion. A program for the first performance as well as many foreign translations and programs of Pygmalion are shown. The Henderson Collection of Shaviana now numbers more than 1,000 items. In the Shaw Theatre Companion (1954), edited by Raymond Mander and Joe Mitchensen, it is pronounced to be the greatest Shaw Collection in the world.

Selected Heritage Press and Limited Editions Club books given by Dr. William P. Jacocks also are being displayed.

FRENCH HISTORY

Several cases on the first floor contain selections from the William Henry Hoyt Collection of French History. Among the Hoyt items are sample volumes from the famed Harry B. Smith Collection relating to Napoleon Bonaparte, which consists of autograph letters, documents and prints relating to Napoleon. The collection contains letters signed by Napoleon, Josephine, all members of Napoleon's family, his marshals, generals, friends and enemies. Hoyt has added more than 700 volumes during the past year, making the collection total more than 1,000 volumes.

Legislature Will Dip In Moneybag Tonight

By NEIL BASS

Again tonight the UP-dominated student Legislature will probably be dipping into student funds.

The general surplus fund, from which the Legislature makes appropriations, is already roughly $900 below what is termed a "safe operating level."

Yet tonight's agenda bulges with requests by various organizations for $1,450 more.

The $1,420 that groups are pleading for tonight will, if all the bills are passed, be split four ways.

The largest slice requested is by the Carolina Forum. The Forum regularly gets $1,800 from each year's budget — $300 for each of six speakers. But according to the Forum, it presented nine speakers to the campus; thus incurring a debt of $600 which student fees must pay.

The next biggest request comes from Tarnation, campus humor magazine. The Tarnation bill says the magazine has been progressing at a "sound" financial rate for the past two years. The bill requests $350.

A $300 chunk is called for by the Goettingen student exchange program. This bill states $1,960 is "necessary" to carry out the program.

The last request is called for by the Carolina Handbook on the basis that its last two editions have received aid from the Legislature.

81 Seniors And Juniors Tapped Into UNC Chapter, Highest Scholastic Group

Eighty-one UNC juniors and seniors, 58 of them from this state, were initiated into Phi Beta Kappa, the University's highest scholastic honorary organization, in ceremonies in Gerrard Hall yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Raymond Adams of the UNC English Department addressed the new members at a banquet held afterward in Lenoir Hall. His topic was "Intervals of Contemplation."

In his address Dr. Adams scored "little un-free minds" which threaten democratic freedom, and collegiate classes and courses which fail to inspire the student although accomplishing their purpose on paper.

"In the University administration," he said, "statesmanship is postponed. It cannot be delegated to a committee nor to a conference nor to a chain of command.

"Creative thinking is a venturing of one man into the unexplored. That man deserves to be given the intervals of contemplation without which statesmanship cannot come to a university nor a business nor a government nor to a single man—that most independent and most important state of all."

Referring to "small-minded men," Dr. Adams said that "in the name of preserving democratic freedom, they have been withholding information and deciding what shall be withheld from the rest of us, delighting in playing a cloak-and- dagger game, until our democratic freedom even in simple and harmless matters is threatened by a breed of martinet such as has not operated in America before."

1954-55 Phi Beta Kappa officers who participated in the initiation were President Paul Likins, Elkhart, Ind.; Vice-President John DuBose, Durham; Herbert Browne Columbia, S. C., recording secretary, and Dr. Ernest L. Mackie UNC Dean of Student Awards, corresponding secretary and treasurer.

N. C. STUDENTS

Students from North Carolina among the 81 were William R Beckman, Eliska L. Chanlett, John M. Gwynn Jr., Lucia P. Johnson Richard M. McKenna, Herbert W. Pearson Says Negros Will Appeal To Gray

By FRED POWLEDGE

Attorney C. O. Pearson, legal counsel for three Negro students who want to enter the University next fall as undergraduates, said yesterday he plans to take his case to Consolidated University President Gordon Gray "sometime next week."

Director of Admissions Roy Armstrong said Wednesday the three students "just aren't eligible" for admission as undergraduates.

The three students, all graduating seniors at Hillside High school in Durham, are being backed in their plans by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, according to Pearson. Pearson said he is legal representative for the NAACP in North Carolina. He declined to name the three students.

University trustee policy says Negroes may enter the graduate and professional schools "when such schools are not provided by and in the state of North Carolina for such racial groups."

Pearson has said he plans to carry his case to federal court if necessary.

Meanwhile, Director of Admissions Armstrong said yesterday he had heard "nothing further" about the matter.

'Boomerangs' Here

The "Princeton Boomerangs," an amateur quartet group, will perform here tonight at 8 o'clock in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial.

The "Boomerangs," who sing college songs and 1920 barbership tunes, are all members of the student body of Princeton University. They have made several tours of Southern colleges in recent years, but this is their first visit to the UNC campus. The program is being sponsored by Graham Memorial Activities Board.

This active group of singers, including Yonkee Peeler, baritone; Pete Chamberlain, second tenor; Jim Millinger, bass, and Loe Lawarence ,first tenor, specializes in close harmony displayed in a wide variety of well-known songs.

Other colleges included on their present tour are Bryn Mawr, Swarthmore and Chestnut Hill.

Awards, Medals Given At Pharmacy Meeting

A number of awards and medals were presented in the School of Pharmacy at the annual Awards Night in Howell Hall here this week. Dean E. A. Brecht presided.

The Lehn and Fink Gold Medal for the highest scholastic average during four years of study went to W. Darle Shouse of Rural Hall. The Buxton Williams Hunter Medal for scholarship and campus citizenship went to Jonathan Adoneran Hill of Troutmans.

The Merck Awards for outstanding scholarship were presented to C. Barker Hargett of Chapel Hill and Russell G. Sigmon of Conover. The Bristol Award for meritorious scholarship went to Milton L. Higdon of Franklin.

The School of Pharmacy Student Body Award for highest qualities of character, deportment, scholarship, participation in extra-curricular activities and promise of future distinction in the profession was presented to Miss Edith Woodman Trosper of Greensboro.

The Kappa Epsilon Award to the woman student who has demonstrated qualities of leadership, character, service and scholarship was presented to Miss Oveda Fisher of Whiteville.

The Pharmacy Senate Award for greatest loyalty and service to the School of Pharmacy went to Alfred Holt Mebane III of Jackson Heights, N. Y.

Brumfield Point Gets Approval

The Interdormitory Council voted unanimous approval to the first objective in President Lewis Brumfield's "two-point" program Wednesday night.

The session was the last of the semester for the council.

In Brumfield's inaugural address a month ago, the former Cobb Dormitory president stressed two particular items that he intended to effect during the next scholastic year.

They were:

(1) Increased monetary support for the dormitory social programs.

(2) An improved, yet "unfearing" relationship with the administration.

Council members endorsed by an affirmative motion the increased "monetary support" point Wednesday night.

Last year the IDC got $4000 out of the sum paid for dormitory rents. Of this amount, $2000 went to individual dormitories outright, and $2000 went to central IDC office for proportional distribution.

Thus Brumfield proposed giving the entire $4000 to the individual dormitory social programs without keeping any funds for the IDC to distribute at its discretion.

'MONUMENTAL STEP'

After the council had approved Brumfield's idea, Raymond Taylor, president of Old West Dormitory, called it a "monumental step toward restoring dormitory rights."

According to Shelton Alexander, chairman of the IDC Court, two of the eight dormitory residents tried for participation in last month's panty raid were convicted.

These two were put on "probation," said Alexander, but he didn't say for how long. He said that this would not necessarily be the "permanent" policy of the court regarding panty raid violations.

The entire session was carried on in an informal air with little dependence on parliamentary procedure in the strict sense of the word.

According to Brumfield, this will be the way that all meetings are carried on during his administration. His idea for partially dispensing with parliamentary procedure, he said, was so that council members wouldn't hesitate "to speak their minds."

Student Legislature Slices $1450 Requests; Allocates $800 To 3 Organizations

The student Legislature sliced edges off the total $1450 requested in bills last night and actually handed out only $800.

There were no measures on the Legislature agenda except bills requesting appropriation.

The dollar slices came from bills requesting money for the Carolina Forum and the Tarnation, campus humor magazine.

A bill asking for $200 for the Carolina Handbook was defeated.

The only measure which met with unconditional success was a bill calling for $300 for the Goettingen student exchange program.

On this measure, the Legislature underwrote itself for the full amount. This means that the exchange committee is supposed to seek financial help from other sources, but if it is unsuccessful, then the Legislature will assume the entire $300 bill.

The session was spiked with pressure groups representing the agencies and publications seeking appropriations.

The amount asked for by the Carolina Forum' — $600 — was cut exactly in half. The Legislature finally granted $300 for debts "already incurred."

TARNATION OFFICIAL?

After arguement as to whether or not the Tarnation was an official student publication, the request sought by that publication was cut $150 — from $350 asked to $200 granted.

Reuben Leonard, former Tarnation editor, insisted that the magazine was recognized by South Building as being "official."

EXODUS

There were several other measures the Legislature was slated to review, but a mass exodus of legislators coupled with heavy absences, forced the body to adjourn for lack of quorum.

The Legislature must meet in a special session to complete the transaction of this semester's business.

This will be one of the attractions at the annual Spring Carnival tonight at Navy Field, according to Collie Collison, president of the University Club, which is sponsoring the event.

The carnival will begin at 7 p.m. In case of rain it will be held Monday at 7 p.m. at Navy Field.

Collison said yesterday, "This year's carnival promises to be the best yet."

The announcement of the winner of the Theta Chi's "Ugliest Man of Campus" contest will be a special feature of tonight's event.

The University Club and the Carolina Athletic Assn. have asked that all spectators please keep off the track tonight. It has just been worked over for an important track meet this weekend, according to Collison.

Over 2,500 Students Expected For Carolina Summer Session

An enrollment of over 2,500 students is expected for the 1955 summer session at the University, according to Director Guy B. Phillips.

The first term will open with registration on Thursday, June 9, three days after the annual spring commencement exercises. The six-week term will end with final examinations July 15-16. July 18 through August 24 will be the dates of the second term. The 2,500 enrollment figure would equal the 1954 first term number, he said.

Director Phillips also announced a number of visiting faculty members who will be on the campus for the summer. The Law School, he said, will have four visiting professors from the University of Texas, Ohio State University, Vanderbilt University and the University of Southern California.

Carroll L. Riley of the University of Colorado will lecture here in the field of anthropology. Guest lecturers in the Chemistry Department will be Charles R. Spell, University of Georgia, first term; and Frank B. Schirmer, Clemson College, second term.

Director Phillips explained that the largest number of visiting staff members will appear in the School of Education "since that is the field in which the largest number of registrations will be carried."

GM Sells Stamps

Graham Memorial Student Union has started selling stamps, according to Mrs. Douglas Fambrough, GM office manager.

Government stamps, much-asked-for and never on hand until now, said Mrs. Fambrough, will be kept in the information office for sale to anyone who needs them.

Lambeth PB Chief

Tom Lambeth was named chairman of the Publications Board this week.

At its first regular meeting since the new publication editors assumed their posts, the board also elected Yackety-Yack Editor Jack Markham as treasurer.

Jay Zimmerman was approved as new business manager for the yearbook, and several minor financial matters were settled.

Scales Granted Bail Pending Trial Appeal

WASHINGTON, May 12 (AP) — Junius I. Scales, Communist leader convicted of violating the Smith Act, today was granted bail of $35,000 pending his appeal.

Chief Justice Warren decided to allow bail after the Justice Department conceded that "The issues involved are substantial and they have not been passed on by the Supreme Court or any of the courts of appeal."

Scales, 35, was charged with advocating violent overthrow of the government while heading the Communist party's Carolinas district. He was sentenced to six years April 22 at Greensboro, N. C., after a two-week trial. Since then he has been in prison at Winston-Salem, N. C.

TO BE ARGUED

The appeal will be argued before the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond. Warren specified that his bail grant is effective only until final action is taken on the appeal.

When Scales was arrested at Memphis, Tenn., last November, bond was set at $100,000. This later was reduced to $35,000, posted by his mother last Dec. 21.

Scales' attorney, David Rein of Washington, urged Trial Judge Albert V. Bryan of Alexandria, Va., to let the defendant remain at liberty under that $35,000 bond after his conviction. Bryan refused.

Rein then applied to Circuit Judge Armistead Dobie, who also refused to allow bail. The application then was brought before Warren, who hears such matters from the 4th Circuit.

UNC student Charles Childs, who joined the Communist Party and reported its activities to the Federal Board of Investigation, testified in Scales' Greensboro trial.

Library Meeting Underway

William Henry Hoyt, New York attorney and author of a study on the currently controversial Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, will be the principle speaker here at the annual dinner of the Friends of the UNC Library tonight at 6:30 p.m. in the Carolina Inn.

Approximately 150 members of the organization are expected to be present from throughout North Carolina. As in the past, citation of honor will be awarded to members who have made outstanding contributions to the library. Recipients of these citations are selected by secret ballot and no announcements concerning them are made until the time of the dinner.

Dr. L. R. Wilson, former librarian of the UNC Library, now faculty member of the University's School of Library Science and chairman of the Friends of the Library, will preside at the annual meeting.

Hoyt is the author of The Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, a Study of Evidence Showing That the Alleged Early Declaration of Independence by Mecklenburg County, N. C. on May 20 1775, is Spurious.

CONTROVERSY

The book concerning the Mecklenburg Declaration was first published by G. P. Putnam's Sons in 1907. Outside of historical circles, little has been heard of the 48-year old book since its publication until the recent controversy concerning the authenticity of the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence.

Hoyt's speech before the Friends of the Library will be on "Reminiscence on the Evolution of a Book Collection." The attorney is a book collector of note and in the course of research on Peter Stuart Ney, one of Napoleon's lieutenants who is said to have lived in North Carolina following Napoleon's overthrow, Hoyt, has assembled a large and rare collection of books on the life and times of Napoleon.

Since 1953, he has presented a large portion of this collection to the University Library. During the past year he has donated over 700 books from this collection to the William Henry Hoyt Collection of French History here.

Cobb Dorm's Party Is Put Off A Week

The Cobb Dorm party, scheduled for tonight has been postponed until Saturday, May 21.

According to Charles Hyatt, Cobb resident, the party, which was to celebrate the grand opening of the new social room was postponed because of the late arrival of furniture and incomplete arrangements.

J-School Offering M. Of A.

A Master of Arts program in Journalism will begin here next September, according to an announcement made yesterday by the School of Journalism.

According to the announcement, the program is designed to meet the needs of four groups of students. The groups are as follows: professional journalists who wish to prepare for advanced positions requiring a broad knowledge of the legal, historical, economic and social aspects of the mass media, recent journalism graduates who wish to strengthen their preparation for professional work, students interested in journalism teaching or in academic or commercial research in the mass media field and college and university graduates who did not major in journalism but now wish to prepare themselves for journalism careers.

The last group will be required to complete certain undergraduate requirements, either by course work or examination, before they can be admitted to full graduate standing, said the announcement.

Among the graduate journalism courses to be offered are communication and opinion, history of journalism, international communications and comparative journalism, seminar in content analysis, the press, the constitution and the law, seminar in history of journalism, functions and responsibilities of contemporary journalism and media research methods.

Information concerning admission, scholarships and assistantships in this program may be obtained form the Dean of the School of Journalism.

Confusion Between GM, Administration Delays Selection Of Union Director

Confusion over the relationship between a permanent student union director and the University administration has delayed selection of a new Graham Memorial chief.

"As far as I know, there's no clear relationship between the GM Board and the University administration," declared GM Director Jim Wallace at the Wednesday meeting.

"The only relationship I have had with the administration," Wallace continued, "has been through the dean of student affairs office. And that relationship has not been clear. Can directives be handed down from the administration? Where does the board's authority stop and the administration take over? No one has drawn the line very clearly."

Wallace pointed out that the hiring of a new director on a permanent basis would be "impossible" until the GM-administration relationship is cleared up.

Dean of Student Activities Roy Holsten produced a memorandum by Dean of Student Affairs Fred H. Weaver, calling for "the need for attention to the organizational relationship between the student union and the University administration."

SOUND POLICY

According to the Weaver memorandum, " . . . Sound administrative policy suggests that the appointment of the director should be subject to final approval by the Chancellor on the advice of the director of student activities and the dean of student affairs. I expect any really capable person would require this assurance of approval by the administration before he would accept a 'permanent' appointment. I think this should be pointed out to the board.

"If considerable expansion is contemplated, and especially if it is planned to seek funds for a new building or to obtain authorization to construct one on a self-liquidating basis, attention should be given to the question of fiscal control. I am not here attempting to say what the ideal connection between a student union and the University administration is; but the existing structural relationship is not, in my opinion, administratively sound."

The Weaver memo concluded, "If the changes now being considered were to be carried out without first taking steps to insure certain elementary safeguards to administrative liaison and responsibility, I am certain that much conflict and confusion would result . . . "

President Don Fowler, at the request of the GM Board, will appoint a committee to study the GM - administration relationship. The job will be handled by three students, two faculty members, with Dean Weaver and Director Wallace as ex-officio members.

Another group, named by Fowler, will consider candidates for temporary director. It is called the Personnel Committee. The need for a temporary director was seen by members, since Wallace's term expires in September, and it is not expected that the GM-administration relationship will be cleared up by then.

Members of the Personnel Committee are Chairman Bob Young, Lewis Brumfield, Miss Susan Fink, Dean J. M. Parrish and Dean Weaver.

The GM Board will meet again next Friday at 3 o'clock in the Grail Room of the student union.

Time To Break Jim Crow's Back

We have turned the monthly pages of our calendar but a few times since Elmer Davis called time on the hydrogen bomb front. It is two minutes till midnight, Mr. Davis said, and high time for action to be taken.

We will alter Mr. Davis' metaphor and purpose to say that it is now two minutes till noon on the segregation front. It is a part of public record that applications for Negro admission to the undergraduate departments at this University are in the files of the Admissions Office. And although we are set in temporary immobility by the absence of Trustee policy on the new applicants, their application alone is occasion for hopefulness.

But let none be mistaken. If the Trustees of the University fail in their duty as citizens to uphold the law of the land, if they falter before this challenge to create for the University itself a new and broader scope, we may well look back upon the present moment as two minutes till midnight, in fact, on the segregation front.

The prospect that this school may make the keepers of its gates blind to the false and unChristian criteria of color and race is, in its best sense, the prospect for new optimism. While we have this prospect it is a poor time for reservation and doubt.

We are, true, immobile at present. This immobility need not be bad in the long run if it is temporary. But to ward off a total display of intertia, nothing would serve better than an expression of opinion from campus leaders. Decisive spokesmanship and initiative on the part of student leaders banished Jim Crowism from the seating plan at football games a few years ago. But that specter from a past we are trying to put behind us remains in a much more important seating plan.

Implementation of the Supreme Court's decision has no more fertile ground on which to work than the campuses of higher education, and we believe a ready acceptance of higher education's role is obligatory.

The Trustees of the University, as they consider the admission of Negro students to the undergraduate departments, will work with loud and forceful voices at their backs; and we fear that they will yield to pressure against the right unless the students themselves demonstrate their own willingness to welcome others, regardless of color, to class.

But if that demonstration of willingness comes, as it must now, they can follow but one course: and Jim Crow's back will be broken for good in Chapel Hill.

'Mec Dec'

Current efforts in the General Assembly to deify the historically questionable Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence are absurd—and frightening.

The House Committee on Conservation and Development has been considering a measure to glorify the Declaration that professional historians deem doubtful. The head of the University's own History Department, Dr. Fletcher Green, appeared before the group this week along with other historians to tell legislators the historical facts of life on the "Mec Dec."

The historians say that without documents there is no genuine and valid history. On the other hand, legislators seem bent on making a tradition the cause for rewriting history.

Meantime. Senator Kerr Scott plans to read parts of this document that has become a joke in academic circles in the U. S. Senate. Every Senator will receive a copy of the document, too.

We pause to laugh—and cringe a bit—because when those who govern try to rewrite history to suit their whims (and egos), we are reminded of Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia.

Let the legislators stick to making laws, and leave history writing to the professional historians. Perhaps the history professors in the University would enjoy rewriting the General Assembly's budget. It would seem that they would have as much license to do that as legislators have in trying to rewrite history.

GM Muddle

What is the relation between Graham Memorial and the University administration?

"The relationship is not clear," according to GM Director Jim Wallace.

". . . The existing structural relationship is not, in my opinion, administratively sound," according to Dean of Student Affairs Fred H. Weaver.

The Graham Memorial Board of Directors found itself faced with this problem this week, so they appointed a committee to figure out the relationship.

It seems almost impossible that the student union and the administration have operated on the same campus all these years without establishing a definite relationship. But, apparently, this has happened.

There are several reasons for this lack of bearings, for not knowing where GM and the administration stand in relation to each other. First of all, the hiring of a permanent GM director seems to call for a more concrete spelling out of where the GM Board's power stops and the administration's takes over. Also, the recent survey of the University administration has clearly placed student government functions under Dean of Student Activities Roy Holsten.

Now a committee of students, faculty, and Dean Weaver are going to sit down and decide what apparently has already been made clear in the survey of the University administration—that GM is under the administration.

Naturally, since the students control the Board of Directors of the student union, their voice will be heard, and heard more loudly than faculty and administration voices. It does not seem unreasonable for the University to want a clear definition of its relation with the union. However, since the administratvie survey has already placed student government under the administration (as it always has been, even before the survey), forming the committee seems like so much wasted effort.

BARRING THE FAIRCHILD Sean-a-Graver at the News Inc., the establishment which prints this newspaper, the most frightening machine we have run across in many a mechanical moon is the coffee dispenser in the kitchen of Graham Memorial.

We sidled into the kitchen the other day, bent on persuading the machine to relinquish coffee for our benefit. The coffee dispenser, as most people know, is a large upright green coffin with a coin slot over its heart, a window in its solar plexus, and a sort of selector-dail over its collarbone. The selector dial says "Black; Sugar; Cream; Sugar and Cream." One turns the little knob to the preferred combination, and the preferred combination is what one gets.

We turned the knob to "Sugar and Cream," fed the coffin a dime, and crouched, ready to run at a moment's notice. The machine sullenly accept our dime, wheezed, went into labor, groaned once or twice, and gave birth to a cup of coffee behind the little window in its solar plexus. One has only to raise the little window, remove the cup of coffee, stir same with a sliver of pine from the nation's forests that Graham Memorial provides for this purpse, and voila! Of course it tastes perfectly foul, as coffee in a paper cup always does. But that is neither here nor there.

AS WE STIRRED our coffee frantically to keep the paper cup from absorbing the sugar, a voice from behind us said,

"Y'know, the machine I'm waiting for is the one where you put in fifty cents and a scotch and soda comes out. Just like that machine, only the sugar would be a couple of cubes of ice, the cream would be an ounce and half of scotch, and the coffee would be soda water."

We said this sounded like a fine idea. When?

"Of course the only trouble," our informant continued, "would be the question of the drinking age. It would be difficult to control who went to the machine and put in fifty cents for a drink."

We admitted this, and suggested that perhaps it could be confined to bars and nightclubs where only those who are of age are admitted.

"No," was the reply, "because the bartender's union would immediately say the machine would keep men out of work. I mean you should have it right here in Graham Memorial."

We murmured something about the State Legislature's attitude toward college students being as dry as most of the counties they represented.

"Of course one way you could control it," the gentleman went on, "would be to issue everyone a card when they reached the age of 21. Then when they wanted a drink, they would only have to stick the card in a slot in the machine and an electric eye would satisfy the inner workings that the buyer was old enough to go around drinking scotch out of machines."

We inquired how anyone could control the fact that a 23-year-old might lend his card to a 17-year-old, and that every time this happened many downright upstanding people would jump up and down and get red in the face and howl incoherently about juvenile deliquency and the younger generation and the children of transition and so on.

That stumped him. He gave up and asked us if we happened to have access to any ready scotch. We replied that we were about to ask him the same thing. He swigged his coffee from his paper cup; we gulped ours. We parted, mutually sympathetic and brooding over the question "Now who would have some scotch on a Sunday afternoon?"

——TIME TO QUALIFY——

'University' Must Be Universal

Editors:

The inevitable time has come when this institution, being faced with the applications of Negroes for the undergraduate school, has the opportunity to qualify for the title "University." Of course, no institution can claim to be a University unless it is universal in its acceptance of qualified students, and it is obvious that the admissions office has a limited concept of a University. With the decentralization of responsibility between the admissions office, the administration, the Board of Trustees, and the state legislature, it is difficult for students to know what they can do to help create a situation in which they can have a complete educational experience. It is impossible for us to have this complete educational experience when a large segment of the citizenry is excluded from our environment.

I believe that we as students have a responsibility to ourselves and to our Negro friends to do what we can to see that they are admitted to this institution. If we can do nothing else we should make our opinions known, for the opinions of students have had a great effect on administrative policy in the past and they can do it again.

Every state needs a University. Why don't we do our part in seeing that North Carolina gets one too!

MEETING AT THE SUMMIT:

'Operation Feel-Out' Gets Underway

Stewart Alsop

"Operation Feeling - Out" is now about to begin. The purpose is to test Soviet intentions — to try to find out whether there is anything real and solid behind the small signs and portents suggesting that the Soviets may actually want a relaxation of tensions.

"Operation Feeling - Out" is official American policy, duly approved by the National Security Council and President Eisenhower. But it should be understood that it is a testing operation and no more.

With the long heralded "meeting at the summit" apparently in prospect, and with optimistic talk suddenly being heard all over the place, a lot of people are beginning to think that an actual settlement of major East-West issues may be in sight. No such settlement is at all likely — or at least no informed official believes so.

What is apparently in prospect instead is a long period of "intense diplomatic activity," which means that both sides will go on for a long time sniffing at each other, like suspicious dogs. The meeting at the summit, if it takes place, will be hardly more than a particularly high-level sniff. One lawyer-official compares the meeting to an introduction between principals in a legal case, before the principals' solicitors get down to business.

ELECTION PRESENT

It is no secret that President Eisenhower and Secretary Dulles only agreed to this curious ceremony as an election present to the hard-pressed British Conservatives. Both previously believed that there should be a top level meeting only if "Operation Feeling - Out" were a success, and some real area of agreement had first been established.

Instead, in order to satisfy the supposed hankering of the British electorate, the meeting at the summit will precede the feeling-out process rather than the other way round. The meeting may turn out to be a useful high-level sniff. But it is nonsense to suppose that a real settlement of major issues — above all the German issue — could emerge from a few days of guarded talk between the chiefs of state.

Indeed, there is very little expectation that a real settlement is likely to result even when the solicitor-Foreign Ministers get down to business. The heart and soul of any general agreement would be, of course, an agreement on Germany — without such an agreement the cold war cannot possibly end. And there is no sign that either Russia or the Western Allies are prepared for the kind of drastic policy change a German settlement would require.

For ten years, both East and West have shared a nightmare — that a reunited Germany might become allied to the other side. The Russians are not likely to agree to a German settlement which would leave Germany in NATO and American troops on German soil. And this country is equally unlikely to accept any settlement which would leave Germany ostensibly neutralized, with American forces withdrawn across the Atlantic. Any such settlement would knock the Western alliance into a cocked hat.

NO WAY OUT OF OLD STALEMATE

There is no visible reason for supposing that any new way out of this ancient stalemate is about to be found. There is, to be sure, a new element in the equation, West Germany, a prosperous nation of 50,000,000, sovereign again, and getting ready to rearm.

It has long been a second nightmare in Washington that the Russians might offer the Germans the sort of deal no German government could turn down. The formula might be an offer of reunification on the basis of free elections, in return for a German promise to abandon NATO and tell the Americans to get out. The former German territories behind the Oder-Neisse line might be thrown into the pot, to make the bargain more tempting.

If the Germans accepted such an offer, or even looked like accepting it, this country and its allies would be faced with an enormously threatening crisis. The Austrian negotiations have made this second nightmare particularly vivid. The Soviets may conceivably have something of the sort in mind. But always before — and with good reason — they have sopped short of the kind of offer which would really tempt the West Germans.

The Soviet Communist pupets would be overwhelmingly defeated in any free election in East Germany, thus publicly exposing world communism as a fraud perpetrated by a tiny minority. The abandonment of the German puppet would hardly encourage others. The loss of East Germany would mean the loss of important uranium mines. It would give restless Poland a common border with freedom. For such reasons, if the Russians do make the kind of offer Washington has long feared, it will mark a truly revolutionary change in Soviet policy.

For the same reasons, any such dramatic Soviet initiative is believed improbable. Indeed, most officials doubt that the coming period of mutual sniffing will produce any great drama at all. About the most the "Operation Feeling - Out" might produce is a tacit agreement not to commit mutual suicide. But even this would be a considerable step forward.

APATHY, APATHY, all is apathy. Of the five thousand, three hundred, and ninety-five students in the undergraduate schools of the University, only twenty-one per cent of that total took time to vote whether or not they wanted a fee raise.

Several of the ones that did bother to vote managed to scribble a few words of advice to the politicos. The first such adulterated ballot that came to my attention went something like this: "I am against any change. I wish you make this clearer. Which way do I vote to leave things as they are? You 'verbose' politicians, how can I understand you?"

Ah, tomorrow's leaders—that's what the students at Carolina are. We do have one consolation though. As long as South Carolina retains her statehood North Carolina does not have to worry about becoming the most backward state in the Union.

While we are on the subject of our sandlapping cousins south of the border, read the report below of a weekend spent in the pompous palmettoland.

"OO PAPA DOW," said the emaciated little cat with the Washington Square haircut, pegged pants, and pistol pockets. His partner was a girl of about seventeen, 37, 25, 36. She was wearing pink shorts with a black sweater that would have been a nice fit for her when she was twelve—but she was a big girl now.

The rhythm of Joe Turner's "Flip, Flop, and Fly" gushed from the juke box and was immediately absorbed by the twenty odd bopsters on the cement dance floor of the Myrtle Beach Pavillion.

THE KID standing next to me took a sip of brew and looked down at his date with one of those "gone" looks and said, "Baby, you drop anchor while I hustle a couple of reefs from a smoke machine." "Awlrighty dawl," she drooled, "I'll watch you go."

As the kid bopped over to the cigarette machine, another cat, looking more like a long drink of gin than a human being, wandered up and asked her for a dance. "Sorry daddy-o," she cooed, "my date is awfully jealous." "Oh his is, is he, well you tell him I'm a pretty mean muthah myself," meowed the long thin one.

FROM THE Pavillion we wandered back to the Welcome Inn. There were more high school kids on the porch than you can stuff into the Planetarium on a Spring morn.

Two Carolina men had just checked into the Inn (not a very good name for the place, but on the other hand . . .) and were looking over the jumbled mass of teen age humanity on the porch. The two gentlemen, being quite looped, were trying to find a pair of legs, a pair of arms, a torso, and a head that when put together would make a decent looking date. They weren't having much luck.

One of the girls that they were talking to didn't look so good, but she certainly had a nice looking friend with her. "Tiger" (the girl that didn't look so good) said, "Boys, I want you to meet Barbara, she is 'Miss Greenville.'" "Well what do you know, another celebrity—Barbara, meet me, 'Mr. Textile Mill of 1955,'" quipped one of the Carolina gentlemen. That was too motch; we went up to the balcony.

NOW THE balcony overlooked the main thoroughfare and could be jumped from in case of a raid. Gerald, one of the Greenville boys, was sitting propped against the bannister. "Hey boysh," he mushed, "have a drink of Vodka." "Itsh pretty good stuff but I don't have anything to mixsh with it." We hated to deprive him of his bottled fun so we turned to leave. Hearing a cry of alarm, we whirled back around to see Gerald floundering on the roof beside the balcony. We pulled him back to safety and he knee-walked off to the head.

REMEMBERING THAT Ron Levin had written about how the high schoolers had turned the Marine Room into an "Opium Den," we decided to have a look-see.

Levin was right, the kids were really whooping it up. Charlotte Central had the upper hand for a while, but then another high school group would come in and raised just a little bit more hell than Central.

Several servicemen sat bleary-eyed on stools around the bar watching the junior wrecking crews do their jobs and wondering just what was with the kids.

SEEING THAT the Marine Room was no more exciting or different than the other dimly lighted places of amusement (?), we turned to leave, but before we could get out the door we notived that two of the Greenville chaperones were sitting at a table beside the door—both were skunk-drunk to the-gills. Oh well, they were only 22 years old, why should they stay sober. Everyone 22 years old gets drunk, even if they are chaperones.

"DON'T STAY in your stuffy old dorm room," said Dan Turner, one of the exalted keepers of the cues, "come on down to the Graham Memorial pool room and get behind an intellectual eight-ball."

Dan hasn't been the only one that has bemoaned the fact that the pool room is going to pot. Students are not taking an interest like they did when the pool emporium was first opened.

There are always plenty of tables unoccupied so why don't you amble on down to the basement and indulge in a game of rotation, pocket-eight, or nine ball.

UNC's Tar Heels Slight Favorites In ACC Track Meeting Opening Today

Terps Are Big Threat

Trials for the annual Atlantic Coast Conference track meet get underway today at 3:00 on Fetzer Field. Qualification runs are slated in four field events and six track events today, with the top performers moving into the finals Saturday afternoon.

Shot, javelin, and broad jump trials start at three, with the discus qualifying beginning at 4:15. In track events, the 440 yard run is set at four o'clock, followed at fifteen minute intervals by the 100 yard dash, 120 yard high hurdle, 880, 220, and 220 low hurdles, respectively.

No trials are being run in the high jump, pole vault, mile run, two mile run and mile relay. These events will be part of Saturday's finals program. No admission will be charged this afternoon. Saturday's admission is fifty cents.

Carolina's unbeaten Tar Heels, on the way back to the track superiority they enjoyed in the old Southern Conference, are slightly favored to add the outdoor title to their indoor crown in the two-day meet.

They'll have to contend with a dangerous Maryland squad and Duke's one-man team, Joel Shankle, who last spring won three events and tied for first in a fourth.

Coach Dale Ranson's Carolina team won seven meets this spring, whipping every conference foe except Clemson, whom the Tar Heels did not schedule. They rolled up a point margin of almost 2-1 as only Maryland and Princeton were able to stay within 15 points of the Tar Heels.

Maryland slipped past Carolina by less than two points to win last spring's initial outdoor ACC meet, but the Tar Heels won the indoor meet last February by a half-point over Jim Kehoe's Terps. Duke finished third and South Carolina fourth in each event.

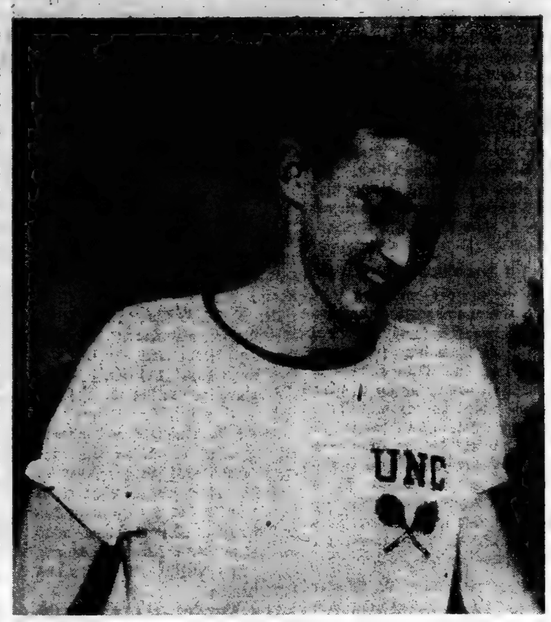
Three Tar Heels will defend their titles in the 15-event meet. They are Boyd Newnam in the 880; Roger Morris in the discus and Charlie Yarborough, who tied Shankle in the pole vault. Yarborough recently vaulted 13 feet, 6½ inches, the best ever done by an ACC or Southern Conference athlete.

Shankle, of course, is the No. 1 individual in the meet. Last spring he swept the high jump, broad jump and high hurdles and tied in the pole vault.

The pre-ministeral student, who winds up his collegiate career this spring, recently took the broad jump and high hurdles, each for the second year in a row, at the Penn Relays. His :14.1 dash in the 120-yard high hurdles was the best turned in over the nation through May 2, according to the NCAA. In addition, he did :23.2 in the 220-yard low hurdles, also the best time in the nation this year.

In his four-year varsity career he has scored well over 600 points and holds three Duke records and shares another. In six dual meets this year he has averaged 26.5 points, twice scoring 28 for new Duke records.

Jim Beatty, Carolina sophomore, who won the two-mile run in the recent Penn Relays, will find Dave Miller of State defending this title. Maryland's Ben Good is back to try for a second mile victory. South Carolina has speedy Tommy Woodlee defending in the 100 and 220-yard dashes and a top javelin entry in Dick Bartulski who has bettered 195 feet.



Five Tar Heel Netters Advance To Quarter-Finals

By TOM SHORES

At 9:30 this morning the quarter-finals in the singles division of the First Atlantic Coast Conference Tennis Tournament will be played, featuring five of the six starters from the host team, North Carolina. Buzzy Hettleman and Dave Schimmel from Duke, Charles Atherton from Virginia, and the quintet from Carolina, Herb Browne, Don Thompson, Tom Bradford, Bobby Payne, and Pete Green, waded through the rest of the conference netters with virtually no trouble at all in play yesterday. The only two eye catching matches were Pete Green's upset of Dave Freshstat, Maryland, who was seeded eight, and Don Thompson's 6-3, 6-4 win over Bob Green, fourth seeded from Duke. Pete Green won 6-3, 6-2. All eight players to reach the quarters won in straight sets.

The story today will be quite different in view of the fact that only the two finalists will be left when todays action is over in the singles play. Buzz Hettleman, seeded one, will take on Carolina's colorful Bobby Payne in the feature match. In the same bracket Don Thompson and Tom Bradford square off with the two winners playing this afternoon for the shot at the crown tomorrow. In the other bracket, Atherton meets Pete Green while Herb Browne and Schimmel tangle. These two winners will also play tomorrow afternoon in the semi-finals.

Doubles play received rather a slow start yesterday with the bulk of action in that division slated for today. Browne and Bradford, UNC, seeded one did not play but swing into action this morning. Second seeded team of Hettleman and Bob Green play Thompson and Ronnie Kerdasha while third seeded Payne and Pete Green meet Atherton and Massie Valentine (UVA). Aye and Si, the Burmese duo from Clemson defeated N. C. State's best doubles team and will meet Bill Morris and Ted Mulholland in the quarter-finals. Immediately after the quarter-final singles play, the doubles will take over with the quarters and semis slated to be finished today. Then midway in the afternoon the singles will see the semi-finals completed to set the stage for the finals Saturday.

Herb Browne, above, Carolina's No. 1 man and third-seeded in the ACC tennis tournament advances to the quarter-finals of the meet today.

In The Majors

NEW YORK, May 12 (AP)—Probable pitchers for today's major league games won and lost records in parentheses:

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Philadelphia at Cincinnati (Wehmeier 2-2 vs. Ridzik 0-2.)

Brooklyn at Milwaukee (Loes 3-1 vs. Buhl 1-2).

Pittsburgh at Chicago (Littlefield 2-2 vs. Rush 1-2).

New York at St. Louis (Gomez 1-3 vs. Lawrence 1-2).

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Cleveland at Washington night (Garcia 2-3 vs. Schmitz 3-1).

Chicago at Baltimore night (Consuegra 2-0 vs. Wilson 1-3).

Kansas City at Boston night (Cecarelli 0-1 vs. Nixon 4-2).

Detroit at New York (Gromek 1-5 vs. Ford 3-1).

Cockell's Gym Showing Poor

San Francisco, May 12, (AP)—If Don Cockell doesn't show more against Rocky Marciano than he does in the gym, the little fat man will be just another horizontal British heavyweight Monday night at Kezar Stadium.

"He's a horrible gym fighter," we are warned before he climbs through the ropes at his training camp in suburban San Rafeal. After it's over, you are advised to pay no attention to what you see.

Jack Solomons, the British promoter, shrugs off Cockell's workouts.

"In London, I can't even get the boxing writers to bother to look at him in training," he said. "They say he never shows them anything. He just practices his moves but never executes them."

The challenger's manager, John Simpson, hastens to explain that Don dislikes public workouts, feels it's "a bit rotten" to show up his sparring partners.

American observers who never have seen Cockell fight must draw their conclusions from what they see. To put it mildly, there has been no rush to climb on the invader's band wagon.

Obviously ill at ease in a head guard, Cockell has a disturbing habit of walking in with his head in the air. Harry Matthews found out what happened when he made the same mistake against Marciano.

Cockell holds his left hand low, inviting the right hand bombs that the heavyweight champion throws. He shows little ability at fighting on the inside and tying up his man. A left jab is Don's best weapon and he has a tendency to counterpunch to the body after he draws a lead.

ACC Tennis Coaches Require Players To Compete In Order

Atlantic Coast Conference tennic coaches tonight voted to require member teams to play their best player in the No. 1 spot in the lineup.

The ruling came on a vote of six of the eight member schools after there had been some friction recently between Duke and North Carolina, with some charges of lineup juggling contrary to player ability.

Duke Coach George Lott was not present, but the Blue Devils were represented by Bob Cox. The unanimous approval of the plan by six coaches gave it the effect of a permanent part of the conference rules. Wake Forest and South Carolina coaches were not present.

The new rule reads:

"Lineups for dual meets shall be determined by each coach on the merit system. This means the player playing in the No. 1 spot shall be the best player on his squad, and the positions to be filled by the remaining players, two through six, will be placed according to their respective abilities.

"Doubles lineups shall be exchanged before matches start the same as in singles. Thereafter no player so named can be moved down. However, substitutes may be used anywhere before the matches start."

The Summaries

Tar Babies At Wake Today, Duke Saturday

Carolina's Tar Babies will try to bounce back from two consecutive losses to N. C. State's freshman team today when they go to Wake Forest to meet the Deaclets. Saturday the Tar Babies close out their regular season against Duke at Durham.

The Carolina frosh have an 8-4 mark on the season.

Wins Can Boost Club Over .500

Carolina's baseball Tar Heels, apparently just hitting their stride, will wind up the regular season schedule here today and tomorrow against Virginia and Duke, respectively.

The Tar Heels have been pounding some of the ACC's top pitchers almost at will of late in winning seven of their last eight starts. Wins on Emerson Field Friday and Saturday will give Carolina a 9-7 ACC mark and 12-9 over-all record.

Coach Walter Rabb has three pitchers ready to go against UVA and the Blue Devils. Tom Maultsby, Jim Raugh and Morris Hall are all rested. Billy Joe Johnson, pitching and hitting star in the 10-5 win over N. C. State Wednesday, will probably not see action this weekend.

The Tar Heels walloped UVA 7-2 at Charlottesville earlier in the season and have split a pair with Duke, losing 2-1 and winning 6-5.

Hitting has been the main factor in the late-season Tar Heel surge. In their last three games — wins over USC, Clemson and State — the Tar Heels have hit in double figures as a team, getting fifteen safties against USC and State.

Today's game is slated for three thirty, with Saturday's contest, a feature of ACC Sports Day here, is scheduled for three o'clock.

New Outfielders Give A's Bench Big Boost

BOSTON, May 12 (AP)—Lou Boudreau says the Kansas City Athletics now have a stronger bench, but he doesn't plan a platoon system. And he's still worried about his lame pitching staff.

The A's skipper was taking stock of his new personnel after yesterday's last minute scramble before the player-limit deadline.

"Up until this time if I made one move I had shot my wad," Boudreau said. "We could scarcely come up with a pinch runner. With the bench we now have we will be able to make some moves."

The A's bought outfielder Enos Slaughter and pitcher Johnny Sain from the New York Yankees, pitcher Ray Herbert from Detroit and outfielder Harry Simpson from Cleveland.

None of the purchase prices was announced, but it was estimated the four additions represent a cash investment of at least $75.000.

Club officials figured they have everything to gain and nothing to lose but owner Arnold Johnson's money, which Johnson has declared expendable in the field of personnel improvement.

The acquisition of Simpson and Slaughter gives the A's six outfielders, three of them left-handed hitters and three right-handed.

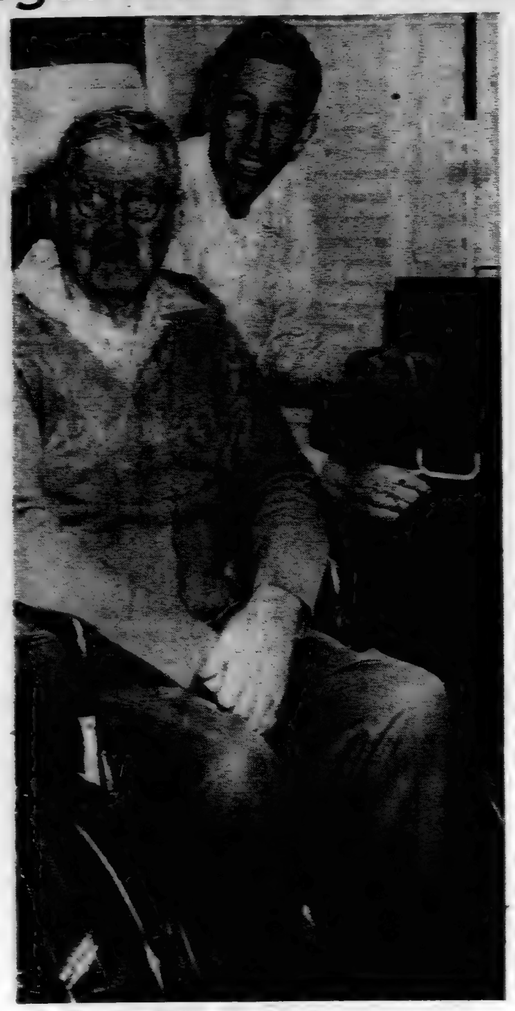
ABOUT WOOLLEN GYM:

Old Sarge: He Has Tales To Tell

By JANE DICKS

For a man who saw the New York Giants play back in the 1880's, at the time of Tim O'Keefe, Roger Connor, "Smiley" Mickey Wells, even before John McGraw's time—"Old Sarge" has a mighty sharp memory. He can check you out on almost any major ball game or player for the last 50 years with no trouble at all.



John Joseph Keller Sr., better known to the old and young—students past and present—of the University as "Old Sarge", was born in Stamford, Conn., May 21, 1873. He is the only veteran of the Spanish-American War living in Orange County today.

"Old Sarge" came to Chapel Hill in 1930 to run the equipment room of the University's Athletic Department at the request of the late Charlie Woollen, entrepreneur extraordinaire, who had heard of him through Claude Rankin of Fayetteville, a classmate of Mr. Woollen's. Old Sarge recalls Rankin's proposition to take "a good job in Chapel Hill and that doesn't mean selling insurance."

CAN CHUCKLE TODAY

A lot of students for one reason or another passed through the ordeal of Sarge's sabre-sharp voice and beetling brows. But most of these same students recall their trials and tribulations with a chuckle today: Chuck Erickson (Director of Carolina Athletic Department), "Choo-choo" Justice, "best man we ever had on the field," says Sarge; Johnny Branch, "now there was a clever player;" and among the many others were Henry House, Ralph Gardner, Jim Tatum, Charlie Shaffer (Director of Developments, UNC), Tom Evins. "Tom Bost was no athlete," says Sarge, "but he was the busiest man on the campus."

As Director of Alumni Annual Giving, Tom replies from the safety of Miller Hall today, "Sarge is so right. Who wouldn't be busy if he were caught between the hot fire of "Colonel" Bob Madry's orders to get information for the News Bureau and Old Sarge's fire-eating reports from the gym."

"Old Sarge" and "Young Sarge" Keller, past and present managers of UNNC Athletic Equipment Room, listen to their shortwave radio for baseball news across the nation.

News Leader Photo

No one had ever been in charge of the athletic equipment before Sarge arrived. Students got what they needed from a much overworked checking staff and it was hoped by all hand that said equipment would eventually turn up back in the so-called storeroom. Times being what they were in the 1930's equipment was about as scarce as prosperity, so Sarge sort of filled in the gap between issued and returned property.

"WHAT IS—AND AIN'T!"

Now to an old Army man with 30 years service, equipment and supplies just naturally fall into two categories—what is and what ain't. With a gruff manner which Charlie Shaffer swears "scared the hell out of me," Sarge held to Army regulations. His manner hid a heart of gold, nevertheless, and Shaffer says that many a piece of equipment sold quietly under the counter to a hopeful athlete.

There is the tale of the young Carolina student who, encouraged by the thought that cleanliness is next to godliness, approached Sarge for more soap. "Bring in the old bar, young feller, and I'll give you a new one." The astonished student pleaded that "there isn't any old one—we've used it up." Sarge made a quick deal for a handful of soap suds. So the story goes.

Getting on with Old Sarge's ability to remember things. Such as baseball dope and the soap and players. It's all very clear to this young man of 83 summers who sits ramrod-straight in a wheel chair where he has been confined since a fall broke his hip. "Sergeants in the Army are trained to remember and not make mistakes. There's not much time for paper work when you're chasing a Moro in the jungles of Jolo," Sarge recalls.

He ought to know. Jolo was the bastion of the Moros in the southern islands of the Philippines and Sarge was there during the Moro campaign. He remembers well the Spanish-built town with its walled city, smallest of its kind in the world which a man could walk around in 30 minutes.

GOT $13 A MONTH

When Sarge enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1899 a private got $13 per month, ration allowance was $8 per month. But he recollects no special gripes about the chow: "The pool room and barber shop concessions on the posts gave a percentage to the mess halls and somehow the gravy never ran out."

Texas City, Texas, stands firm in Sarge's memory for that's where he learned that "mules aren't as dumb as they're cracked up to be." Now Texas City is just flat, flat ground—for miles—from the harbor on inland. One afternoon in August, 1915, a tidal wave was reported and the troops were ordered to move the mules from overhead picket lines to ground lines. When the rains came and might closed in. Sarge and his buddies moved into a small tarpaper shack they called a Day Room which was furnished with odds and ends, including a couple of pool tables.

About midnight the order came to move back to higher and safer ground. According to Sarge that would have been "some moving back." But an order was an order. He stepped to the door. He opened it. Got a mouthful of water. Sarge slammed that door shut quick. Water had risen more than shoulder high. Meanwhile the men, 125 of them, were sitting on the pool tables literally keeping the shack from floating away. And hold er they did!

By morning the storm had passed. And the mules? Those dumb mules? They were safe and sound. At their regular lines waiting calmly for morning chow.

ANOTHER NEAR MISS

Sarge had another near-miss. Ordered from Manila with his artillery unit in September, 1917, he reached Brest, France, on November 9, 1918, one year and two months later and only three days before the Armistice. Says Sarge with a grin, "That was ok by us."

Sergeant Keller had been with the Fourth Field Artillery for 15 years when Congress passed a law which permitted a man to be rotated from an overseas assignment to the states regardless of his unit's assignment. This was the beginning of the end for the "old" Army. In those days a man enlisted and remained with the same outfit until he retired or resigned. It was his hometown. Here he made good or failed. Here he fought beside his pals in time of war and shot crap or raised a family in time of peace. Sarge says sadly, "That was the end of a fierce unit pride you don't find in today's Army."

Sarge retired in 1927 and after working for the Elks Club in Fayetteville he came to Chapel Hill in 1930. It has been his home ever since. The equipment department consisted of a small room under Emerson Stadium. He laughs when recalling, "In that time a man had to take his socks home if he wanted them washed. Now look at the place today!"

A BLUE-COLORED TEAM!

One more story must be told. That is the one about the time the ink-dyed practice jerseys colored the football team blue just three days before the State game. All night long a weary group of players were tested and examined and examined and tested by harried infirmary doctors led by Dr. Berryhill and hovered over by a frightened and worried Sarge. There were no ill effects but for the record no laundry ink has been used by the Athletic Department for number jerseys since 1936.

John Joseph Keller, Sr., Master Sergeant, U. S. Army, saw cot Frances K. McGee, 1st Lieutenant, Army Nurse Corps, of Louisville, Kentucky, at a dance. Give or take a war now and then, certain regulations just couldn't be broken. For one, an enlisted man doesn't dance with a commissioned officer. "Now I wondered," Sarge reminisces. "I wondered what an Army nurse would say if an Army sergeant asked her to dance." Lt. McGee was delighted. The dumbfounded sergeant learned she was on terminal leave and therefore wasn't breaking any rules. Sarge and Miss Frances were married in August, 1919.

HERE'S 'YOUNG SARGE'

"Old Sarge" and Mrs. Keller have one son, John, Jr., today known as "Young Sarge", who served with the Fifth Air Force in World War II. When Old Sarge retired from the University in 1945 it was just natural and fitting that Young Sarge should take over. He had been hanging around the gym since he was a small tyke. And why not another Keller to look after the athletic department."

The University has had good times—like getting the Kenan Stadium and Woollen Gym and a lot more money. And there have been the hard times as Charlie Woollen knew them and Sarge, when Mr. Charlie pasted on his desk in June, 1933, a cartoon which read,

"I don't think we will be able to pay you this month professor, but we'll give you two tickets to the big game." Old Sarge remembers and Young Sarge carries on. Another Carolina tradition has been established.

Dorm-Building Bill Revamped; West Carolina College Added

RALIEGH, May 12 — The bill concerning the issuing of revenue bonds for the purpose of building dormitories which was introduced Tuesday in the North Carolina House of Representatives was junked today and was replaced by another bill.

The original bill included all three branches of the University of North Carolina, East Carolina College and Appalachian State Teachers College. The new bill includes West Carolina with the other school covered in the first bill.

According to the new bill, the Boards of Trustees of six schools will be able to issue bonds for the purpose of building new dorms.

The bill introduced today was introduced by the same men who sponsored the first bill. These men are Representatives J. D. Doughton and John Umstead. After being introduced the bill went to committee and will probable be reported to the House floor Friday. It should be on the House calendar for debate Monday night.

The money to be used to pay off the bonds under the bill will come from two sources — increases in room rents for present dorms and apparently from total rents of the new dorms to be built with the money from the issuance of bon

Fellowship Group Sets Meet Tonight

The Carolina Christian Fellowship, UNC chapter of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, will have a banquet tonight at 6:30 in the Nurses Residence Recreation Room.

Dr. E. M. Gitlin of the Dept. of religion will speak on "The Place of Grace and Works in a Christian's Life." Dr. Gitlin is also the faculty advisor to the Fellowship.

About 40 students and alumni are expected to attend the banquet, which will be prepared by students. Miss Marge Waynick is chairman of the group preparing the banquet. She is being aded by Misses Carol Jean Suther and Nancy Stockwell and Don Cox and Neal Smith.

The Carolina chapter of the Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship was founded in 1950 by a group of students who were interested in a Christian group that would meet the needs of a Christian student on a large university campus.

The Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship is an internation organization of evangelical students. It was begun at Oxford University in the mid 19th century as a group that had no denominational ties. The idea spread from England to Canada, Australia, the United States and European countries.

"The emphasis is on a daily life with God through Jesus Christ, a practical Christianity that changes a person from self-centeredness to God-centeredness," according to a Fellowship spokesman.

Officers of the local group are Don Cox, president; Bennett Myers, vice-president; Miss Laura Robertson, secretary - treasurer, and Miss Barbara Pendergraft, missions secretary.

To Visit Campus

First Lt. Andrew Ball, United States Air Force, will visit on the University campus today. He graduated from UNC in 1953 and was awarded his Air Force commission at the end of Air Force summer camp that summer.

Bell received the Air Force Association Medal for distinguished service cadet in 1952, he was designated as a distinguished military graduate. His rank in the Corps of Cadets was Lt. Col, Air Inspector. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Thirteen Student Leaders Ask Trustees To Consider Seriously Admitting Negroes

By FRED POWLEDGE

Over a dozen student leaders yesterday came to the aid of three Negro students who want to enter the University as undergraduates.

The leaders, among them YMCA and YWCA presidents and a former and present editors of The Daily Tar Heel, asked the Board of Trustees to give the three students "their most earnest consideration" and asked them to "approve if at all possible the admission of these students."

The three Negroes, all from Durham, are being backed in their plans to enter UNC by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. Attorney C. O. Pearson, Durham lawyer, is legal counsel for the students and the NAACP.

The students have been turned down by the University Admissions Office. Pearson has said he plans to take his case to Consolidated University President Gordon Gray "sometime next week." If the administration does not allow the students to enter, said Pearson, he will take the case to the trustees. If trustees resfuse, he said, he will seek a federal court order.

University policy is to allow Negroes in graduate or professional school when the state does not provide such schools for Negroes.

Signers of the statement released yesterday said they "believe that admission of Negroes at the present time will serve the best educational interests of both races, and will set a precedent for the rest of the state and the South as a whole."

The statement termed the school's decision "one of the most momentous decisions in the history of the University. That decision, whether or not to admit qualified Negro students to the undergraduate schools next fall, will not be an easy one to make; and the results of a decision either way will be far-reaching."

Integration, said the statement, will sooner or later "become a reality," and it "can become one now at the college level."

"The University of North Carolina," said the statement, "if it accepts this challenge to leadership, has an opportunity to preserve and make clear its position as a great liberal institution. Therefore, we urge the Board of Trustees and the administration to give this matter their most earnest consideration; and in the light of the Supreme Court decision, the tradition of the University and the implications of the Christian faith, to approve if at all possible the admission of these students. The ideal of human equality and freedom of association is one that can no longer be relegated to some future time."

The statement was agreed to by Owen Norment, Asheville, this week recognized for service to the University YMCA; Bob Hyatt, Cherokee, outgoing YMCA president; Bill Lefquist, Asheville, also recognized for service; Charles Kuralt, Charlotte, this year's editor of The Daily Tar Heel; Chal Schley, Eccleston, Md., National Student Assn. Coordinator; Bob Young, Asheville, new president of Graham Memorial Activities Board; Don Geiger, Tampa, Fla., unsuccessful candidate for this year's student body presidency and this year's chairman of the Student Party; Graham Rights, Winston-Salem, incoming president of the University YMCA; Miss Sally Folger, incoming YWCA president;

Ed Yoder, Mebane, and Louis Kraar, Charlotte, present editors of The Daily Tar Heel; Miss Ruth Jones, Charlotte, this year's chairman of the Women's Residence Council, and Martin Jordan, Concord, this year's student body vice-president.

Legislature May Get Negro Bill

A highly informed but unnamed source yesterday said a resolution will be introduced in student Legislature calling for administration and trustee help in admitting three Negro undergraduates to the University next fall.

The source, himself a member of student government, said a petition, signed by 15 student legislators, has been presented for the purpose of holding a special session sometime during the coming week. Original purpose of the special session, said the source, was to consider money legislation left over from this week's meeting.

But, said the source, a resolution is in the process of being drafted. It would, according to the source, ask student government leaders to help the three students, all graduating seniors at a Durham high chool.

Speaker pro-tem Jim Monteith, questioned yesterday, said a petition for a special session had been signed and given to him.

Howie Named To Lead Business Fraternity

Jim Howie, junior in the School of Business Administration from Monroe, was elected head master of Alpha Lambda chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, professional business fraternity, in elections held this week.

Other officers elected by the group are David Ashford, Scotland Neck, senior warden; Sam Penegar, Monroe, junior warden; Bill Horner, Burlington, scribe; Helson Benyunes, Danville, Va., chancellor; Larry Hinson, Monroe, historian, and Lonnie Sides, Charlotte, treasurer.

Want A Ride, Buddy? Call Graham Memorial

Graham Memorial is now offering a "ride-home service" for all students who wish to find rides home at the end of the semester and for all students who have cars and are able to offer rides to other students, according to a GM spokesman.

The service will require two-way cooperation between car owners and rides, with the Graham Memorial information office acting as a "middleman," said the spokesman.

He explained the setup as follows. A car owner who desires to carry riders should call the information office (5611) and give information concerning when he plans to leave, his destination, how many riders he is willing to carry and the cost to each rider. A student who desires a ride should call the office and ask for information concerning any available rides. GM will tell him the name and phone number of a driver who is going his way.

City Expert Coming Here For Confabs

Hugh R. Pomeroy, noted city planning consultant, author and lecturer will appear at two public events here next Tuesday, it was announced by the Dept. of City and Regional Planning.

Pomeroy, who is director of the Westchester County, New York, Planning Dept., will conduct a seminar discussion at 2 p.m. on the subject of "Metropolitan Area Planning Problems." At 8 p.m. he will deliver a public address on "New Horizons in City Planning," dealing with problems of city growth and the role of the city planner in solving them. Both events will be presented in the Morehead Planetarium Faculty Lounge and will be open to the public without charge.

During the past year Pomeroy has travelled extensively in Germany, the Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden and Finland, studying reconstruction, planning and building.

Before accepting his present postition Pomeroy was connected with the Los Angeles Regional Planning Commission, the Virginia State Planning Board and was executive secretary of the National Assn. of Housing Officials.

A specialist in matters pertaining to zoning and subdivision control, Pomeroy is also a lecturer in planning at Columbia University. In 1950 he was a visiting professor here at the University in the Dept. of City and Regional Planning.

Some Were Confused On Vote Meaning

Apparently there was some confusion among the 1,183 voters in this week's referendum on the proposed hike in student fees.

According to some ballots which were found lying in the office of The Daily Tar Heel yesterday, the voters could not understand the ballots.

Here are some of the remarks which were written on the ballots: "You 'verbose' politicians, how can I understand you?" On the same ballot the confused voter had written, "Which way do I vote to leave things as they are?"

Another befuddled voter gave up in his attempt to check the ballot "for" or "against" and wrote, "I do not want fees raised—you figure out how I should check."

A third voter who was also apparently confused remarked on his ballot that the phrasing of the changes was "very poor" and added that such phrasing "is perhaps clearly meant to pull wool over the student body's eyes!!!"

Pictures Get Old, But Beauty Lives On And On

The above picture's a week old, but the Caroline Coeds posing therein are just as pretty as when they entered in the Sigma Chi Derby's "Miss Modern Venus" contest. The 21 entrants are (top row, left to right) Misses Carolyn Nelson (with only half her face showing), Betty Brunson, Harriet Watson, Nancy Buran, Sally Edgerton, Frankie Junker, Marge Edwards, JiJi Rainwater (who won the title of Miss Modern Venus for 1955), Alice Eison, and Cat Berryhill. Bottom row, Misses Carol Taylor, Nancy Nussear, Donna Booe, Joan Palmer, Joan Adams, Sylvia Yelton, Elizabeth Floyd and Jerry Bane. Not shown because of picture size, but just as pretty, are Misses Marcia McCord and Ricky Branham.—Roland Giduz photo.

Patterson Wins Grant In Religion

Bobby Joe Patterson, senior from Amarillo, Tex., has been awarded a Danforth Foundation Fellowship for next year, according to an announcement by Dr. Bernard Boyd, chairman of the Religion Dept.

Patterson is the first Carolina student to be awarded a Danforth Fellowship. He transferred to the University here from North Texas State.

PATTERSON

The Danforth Fellowships are given to students of outstanding academic ability who plan to prepare themselves for college teaching and who evidence a broad, deep religious faith in their sectors of Christian tradition. The amount of such a fellowship depends upon the needs of the student and the fellowship is renewable until the holder shall have completed his formal training.

Coed 'Responsibility'

The Women's Honor Council in a statement yesterday called the attention of every woman student to "her responsibility to uphold the Campus Code."

"Behavior such as that which was reported during the recent raid on women's dormitories—yelling from dorm windows, etc.—is definitely regarded as 'unladylike behavior,'" said the statement, added that similar behavior will be considered a failure to "adhere to the Campus Code, and violators will be dealt with accordingly" in the future.

Danziger Schedules His Annual Farewell

Edward G. Danziger, owner of Danziger's Old World Restaurant, will hold his annual farewell party for graduating seniors and his friends Monday at 8 p.m.

Danziger, who has been honoring the seniors with an annual supper for the past ten years, promises an array of all kinds of food and delicacies for the supper.

He also requested that anyone who can play an instrument or sing come and entertain at the supper.

University Band Sets Lawn Concert Sunday

The UNC Concert Band will present a lawn concert under Davie Poplar at 4:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The band will be under the direction of Herbert W. Fred. Soloists for the evening will be Roger McDuffie, Greensboro; Scotty Hester, Reidsville; Eddie Bass, Farmville; Robert Brown, Wakefield, R. I., and Charles Culbreath, Fayeteville.

In case of rain the concert will be given in Hill Hall at the announced time.

The program for the evening has been released as follows:

Final Exam Schedule

The University Library will be open until 10 p.m. on the Saturday night (May 21) before final examinations, according to an announcement yesterday. Circulation, Reserve, Business Administration, Current Affairs and Reference departments will be staffed.

Library hours between the end of spring semester and the beginning of summer school are listed as follows:

Wednesday, June 1	7:45 a.m.-5 p.m.
Thursday, June 2-Saturday, June 4	9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Sunday, June 5	2 p.m.-5 p.m.
Monday, June 6-Thursday, June 9	9 a.m.-5 p.m.
Friday, June 10	7:45 a.m. 10 p.m.

(Regular summer hours will be 7:45 a.m.-10 p.m.)

No student may be excused from a scheduled examination except by the University Infirmary, in case of illness, or by his General College faculty adviser or his dean, in case of any other emergency compelling his absence, according to a notice issued by Edwin Lanier, director of the Central Office of Records.

The final exam schedule for the present semester is as follows:

All 2 p.m. classes on MWF and *BA 180	Tuesday, May 24, 8:30 a.m.
All noon classes on MWF	Tuesday, May 24, 2 p.m.
All 2 p.m. classes on TTS and *Economics 31 and 32	Wednesday, May 25, 8:30 a.m.
All 12 noon classes on TTS and all *Naval Science	Wednesday, May 25, 2 p.m.
All 1 p.m. classes on MWF and *BA 71 and 72	Thursday, May 26, 8:30 a.m.

Forum Plans 'Bipartisan' For 1956

The Carolina Forum will strive toward a more "bipartisan" representation next year, said newly elected Vice-Chairman David Reid yesterday.

"Unfortunately the Forum has had many more Democrats (all but two) this year," Reid said. Reid indicated that complaints about unfair representation have been received.

Explanation of the seemingly Democratic tendencies of the Forum lies in the fact that although more invitations were sent to Republicans, more Democrats responded favorably, according to Reid.

Reid said he hoped the Forum would regain the importance it once had. "Important speeches" used to be made here and the new Forum would "like to recreate that" atmosphere, said Reid.

The Forum hopes to get a more vavied slate of speakers next year, Reid said. "We hope to get some writers, educators and historians," he said. He also said the Forum would avoid "bottlenecks where two or more speakers are scheduled for the same month." Also, no late spring speakers will be scheduled, he added.

Where's Evidence?

"I think the Dean of Student Affairs Office is against student government."

Charlie Wolf said this at a Student Party meeting this past week, adding only that "student needs are not being met." He made no other clarification of this serious charge; he mentioned no specific "needs" that are "not being met."

Student leaders, like so many slogan-salesmen, are frequently uttering such judgements—without offering any evidence. To Wolf and other student leaders who feel that Dean Fred Weaver's office is "against student government," we ask for specific evidence.

How can one pass judgement without evidence?

Something Old Has Been Added

Just how extra are extracurricular activities on campus?

A group of Yale University professors this week concluded that their Ivy League school will have to put classroom studies ahead of athletics and weekends. The Yale men revised their curriculum to emphasize a harder course of study.

Meantime, in Chapel Hill the extracurricular cacophony can be heard from Navy Field to Graham Memorial, though the fires of spring exams are about to flare. The extracurricular circle is always wide and fast-moving.

And according to the Eli educators, all this extracurricular activity is detrimental to "intellectual achievement."

". . . The emphasis on athletics, extracurricular life, weekends, and a beehive of activity outside the classroom on which prestige and success are felt to turn, now make an environment which involves serious conflict with important educational goals," reported the Yale committee.

While the obvious purpose of this University is the pursuit of learning—intellectual achievement—extracurriculars serve a vital purpose.

Perhaps Dean Fred H. Weaver put a precise finger on the role of extracurriculars last spring, when he said:

> I wish we could get away from this artificial distinction between the curricular and the extracurricular, between instruction and student activities. Surely a student playing the role of Ophelia in Hamlet for the Carolina Playmakers is engaged in an activity which is not less educational than studying Hamlet in English 50. Ttaking part in a debate may be less academic, but it is hardly less educational than English 44—Public Speaking. Some student activities are closely allied with the instructional program. But, as we all know, many student activities have nothing whatever to do with education in the formal sense. But these activities are here and they are here to stay, and it behooves us to put them to the best possible educational use. Let us then consider college education as a process in which everything that happens, whether for good or for ill, is a part of the educational experience.

If more of Carolina's extracurricular activities would emphasize intellectual stamina rather than brute force on the playing field, or popularity in the political arena, they could be deemed "cocurricular" activities. Surely, they would contribute more to what Dean Weaver termed "the educational experience."

Since this isn't likely to happen in the near future, we advocate, along with Yale, more emphasis on classroom activity. At times, we almost "extracurriculate" ourselves out of an education.

A Heigh Ho And A Patch On Our Eye

J. A. C. Dunn

WE ARE ALWAYS interested in advertising. In fact almost any of the countless methods man uses to draw the attention of other men to himself interests us. But publication advertising interests us particularly, because the magazine or newspaper advertiser must catch the reader's eye in silence. The radio can make a loud noise and say "Get out and buy it today!" and television can (and frequent does) say the same thing, simultaneously make arresting faces at the reader. But magazines and newspapers can only work through the eye.

OUR ATTENTION WAS drawn to the progress that has been made in publication advertising by an ad we saw in an old copy of the University Magazine published on this campus about 60 years ago. "GENTLEMEN get ready for winter," the ad said half-heartedly. "We are now ready to sell you . . ." and the advertiser drew a deep 14-point breath and launched himself wearily into an extended list of his wares.

We can also recall a few ads we saw in some 30-year-old copies of National Geographic: the tonic plug which depicted a beautifully drawn but wholly uninspiring bottle of whatnot; the automobile ad self-consciously praising the relative virtues of the Pierce-Arrow car; the milinery ads crowed with pictures of ladies' hats that all looked like two thirds of a cannonball hollowed out and befeathered. They are rather grey-looking ads; they look more like a layout man's space filler than a merchant's attempt to sell.

BUT NOWDAYS ONE can see a startling change in advertising gimmicks. There is, for instance, the Hathaway shirt man, who sails a boat, drinks cocktails, and photographs wild animals, all with a patch over his eye (and a Hathaway shirt on his back). There is Fearless (perforated) Fosdick, who takes salary cuts with a grin and finds it impossible to call anyone except the chief of police by his right name all for the sake of Wildroot Cream Oil. On the pages of The New Yorker we find the notorious Commander Whitehead, who goes backstage at the theater, entertains his nephew with an impromptu piano recital, paints pictures of flowers, and even (we suspect) sleeps with that Schweppes Sparkling Water stuff, accompanied continually by a hefty cash backing and an alluring beard.

And we must not forget the 107-pound weakling who, sneering contemptuously at Charles Atlas, George Hackleraiser (or whatever that man's name is who makes one "commando tough"), and others of that ilk, slouches across the magazine page and whines, "I was a 107 pound weakling; then I bought a Carrier Air Conditioning Unit. I'm still a 107 pound weakling, but boy, is my bedroom cool!"

Of course, to complete the picture — which it really doesn't since we could go on like this forever — there is always Max Shulman, who, in his column "On Campus," manages to choke out a few euphemisms about Philip Morris cigarettes every few days in paragraphs diluted with tepid wit and horrid syntax.

ALL THIS MODERN advertising may sound pretty grim (and a lot of it is), but it does have one virtue. Though one may not rush right out and buy a Bendix as soon as one sees the full page spread, one can be thankful that the picture of the silly woman gesturing gaily at an empty Frigidaire affords one some sort of visual oasis from the grisly Sahara of articles like "I Spent Six Days Going Over Niagara In A Barrel."

—Matter Of Fact—

Will Ike Run Again In '56?

THE LATE JUSTICE VINSON SWEARS IKE IN
. . . Will '53 inaugural scene be repeated?

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—Whether President Eisenhower will run again in 1956 is sure to be debated endlessly, until the President himself gives the deciding word. Pending that time, this reporter has attempted to put the debate on a slightly—very slightly—more scientific basis, by taking a one-man poll.

In a long day on the telephone, twenty Senators and twenty newspaper reporters were reached—an adequate sampling, according to polling theory. There seemed to be more Republicans than Democrats with their noses to the grindstone, so the final proportion among Senators was twelve Republicans to eight Democrats. All interviews were "not for attribution," to promote candor. The answers to the question "Will Ike run?" broke down as follows.

THE POLL 6

Flat, confident no: Two Democrats, two newspapermen, no Republicans.

Hesitant no: One Democrat, four newspapermen, still no Republicans.

Flat, confident yes: Seven Republicans, one Democrat, five newspapermen.

Hesitant yes: Four Republicans, four Democrats, eight newspapermen.

Unupsettable fence-sitter: One Republican.

Ster n refusal to participate: One newspaperman.

This works out to 72.5 percent "yes," 22.5 percent "no," and 5 percent no answer. The heavy majority view that the President will run was perhaps not very surprising. Yet the pulse-feeling did develop some features worth remarking.

CYNIC

Except for one cynical newspaperman who thought the President's supposed reluctance was an act, everybody assumed that the President really did not want to run. Why should more than seven out of ten think he would run, despite his own genuine inclinations?

Part of the answer is found in another very general belief. Two Democratic Senators and a couple of reporters thought that the President might be beaten. But almost everyone else agreed in substance with a Democratic Senator who has himself been spoken of as a White House possibility:

"For the first time, just in the past two or three weeks, I've begun to think he might not go. But I still just can't see how he can resist the pressure. Hell, anybody we put up, he'd knock his head off, and if they put anyone else up, we'd knock his head off. So the Republicans just can't let him go to Gettysburg."

Over and over again, in one form or another, came the phrase: "He can't resist the pressure." The Republicans naturally tended to put the matter on a high plane. "Ike's a soldier," said one Republican who spoke for the rest, "and he's got a tremendous sense of duty. He knows he owes it to the country and the Party to run, and he's never shirked a duty yet."

The reporters and the Democrats tended to be more cynical. One literary Democrat compared the President to the reluctant lady in Byron's "Don Juan," who, "whispering 'I will never consent,' consented." A reporter, no admirer of the President, had this to say: "Ike's really a pliant kind of guy, at least about politics—look at the '52 and '54 campaigns. They'll really hold his feet to the fire this time, and in the end he'll go."

One of the two Democrats who flatly predicted that the President would not run had an odd explanation: "Shucks, I like golf too, and I'm up in '56. Suppose I'd already made up my mind not to run again, why, I'd be out on the course half the time. But I want it, and here I am up here running myself ragged. Ike's not running himself ragged, not by a long shot."

If women's intuition is worth anything, the majority is wrong. Sen. Margaret Chase Smith has publicly voiced her doubts about the President's running, and one reporter's wife who answered the telephone agreed: "All the women I know say no."

MALE MAJORITY

Yet her husband, a brilliant White House reporter, spoke for the male majority: "Ike really does love that farm, and he really does hate Washington—he says so openly—and Mamie really does want him to retire. But what can he possibly say when the men he admires most tell him: 'Mr. President, you've got to run, or everything you've stood for is lost.'"

The results of this pulse-taking were, obviously, even more inconclusive than usual; since the one person who could give a really authoritative answer was not available for questioning. But the interviews did suggest the amazing extent to which President Eisenhower now dominates the American political scene. "The man's a great political genius," one reported remarked. "He does what no politician in American history has been able to do—he makes hardly any enemies, only friends. And the Republican party's not going to let its one and only political genius retire."

'Hey—Don't Get Too Far Ahead'

Over The Hill

Charles Dunn

MISTAKE: There was a fellow who always carried his dates around to see some of his friends. One night, when the fellow was dating a certain girl for the first time, he drove up and one of his friends walked out to the car. The fellow with the date started to introduce her to his friend, who in turn ended what could have been a beautiful friendship by saying "Oh yes, I met her the last time you brought her by."

BUSY JOB: It was during the ten-minute break between classes and everywhere everyone was rushing to his next class, when co-editor Ed Yoder leisurely strolled down the walk, flanked on either side by an attractive and attentive coed. He was busy thinking about something important, and everyone knew it. That is almost everyone.

But from the opposite direction came one who knew not the look of thought, and knowing Yoder and hoping to meet the coeds almost yelled, "Hello Ed." Editor Ed made not a sound, turned not his eyes from the path, broke not his thought-train. The supposed friend stopped short, surprised and wondering.

But the situation was well in hand. The coed on Yoder's left turned, smiled sweetly and said, "Hello." And then returned her attention to the co-editor.

THE OTHER: Most folks around these parts know that every year along about this time the ladies and gentlemen from the University have parties. And at some of these parties, it is a known fact that limited quanities of beer are consumed, Such is the setting for this bit of space filler.

At the University there are some ladies who like the taste of beer, and there are some who don't. The case is the same with the men. Some men date women who like beer, and vice versa. Then again there are some men who date women that don't like beer, and vice versa. There are some ladies who like beer that want their dates to learn to like beer. Such are the characters in this bit of space filler.

By combining the setting and the characters, we have a boy trying hard to drink the beer, but finding it quite a task, even with the encouragement of his date. She begs, she threatens, and at last she promises "that she will kiss him for every swallow of beer he drinks."

Knowing quiet well that she wouldn't kiss him with all the people around them, he agreed and proceeded to force down several swallows.

She did.

MORE BEER: Three of the boys broke loose the other night and attempted to drown their sorrows; each in a can of beer. After a bit, they finished their beer, and all they had left was the can and a little free time. One found a stack of old newspapers and began folding them the way he used to fold them on his delivery route.

They made nice little throwing objects, so he threw a few at a light, but it was too far away, and they had little success in hiting it. Then they thought of the empty beer cans, so they stood them on top of each other and the game began. Each fellow had three folded papers to throw at the stacked beer cans. A point was given for each can knocked to the floor (they must have made a lot of noise), and the game was 20 points.

Seems hard to believe but these boys had fun, and the games lasted for a couple of hours. And nobody knows or cares, who won the most games.

THE DAY of reckoning approaches. Final exams will begin one week from Tuesday and end only Heaven knows when. For a week and a day students will suffer a living Hell. Business majors, English majors, history majors and drum majors will tear their hair. There will be a general weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. Now all this moaning and groaning is very necessary for a well-balanced educational aquarium.

The teeth gnashers will be sent to the Dental School for the molarmen to experiment on, the wailers will be sent to the Psychology Department to undergo several tests to determine their complexes, and the weepers will end up crying on their instructors' shoulders. Next semester the University Testing Bureau will interview all those that flunked and try to determine what is wrong with them. Yes, it takes all kinds of people to make the world go 'round. But as our friend Kerr Scott says, "So will a good swallow of tobacco juice."

EVEN THOUGH we stand on the brink of final exams and disaster, all is not lost. Here is the solution to your problems. Take all your textbooks for this semester, and place them neatly on your desk Then borrow a pencil from your roommate and carefully erase all marks you have made in your books. After you have done this, bundle them up in a little stack and head for the library.

This is where the fun begins. Don't go to the library—stop off at the Book Exchange and sell your books. You should be able to sell at least two of your total for about ten cents on the original dollar that you paid for them. If you had any money at all when you started out for the library you add that to what you received for your books and you will probably have enough to go to the movies.

Take the extra change in your pocket and buy popcorn—this will serve two purposes. One, you will have to eat one less meal at Lenoir Hall, and two, you will be subsidizing the popcorn growing farmers that graduated from State College thereby relieving the government of several billion dollars in subsidies.

SO YOU are sitting in the theater. The picture isn't very good so your mind starts to wander. You think of the Thanksgiving you spent in New York (along with two hundred dollars). You remember the evening you sat in the Fulton Theater watching Elliot Nugent and Sally Forest tickle the audience's spine with a "Seven Year Itch." You laugh inwardly at the remembrance of some of the choicer lines. You take another look at the screen and realize that "Seven Year Itch" has been made into a movie and you will be able to see it again.

KNOWING THAT Tom Ewell and Marilyn Monroe play the leading roles, you wonder if MM's lines will replace the verbal lines that were undoubtedly by the censors.

Sex is a funny thing you think. Sex always attends all the parties that you do, but it is seldom if ever mentioned. Sex stands up on the coffee table and pounds itself on the chest and says, "I'm really quite funny—I'm sex and nobody ever talks about me."

The subject of sex makes you think of your marriage final. Why don't they let you make out the final exam for the course? You laugh aloud at the thought. The other students turn around to see who is laughing—they think you are crazy—what a lousy flick.

THE MOVIE finally ends. You leave the theater and walk east on Franklin St. Chapel Hill high-schoolers pass at rather frequent intervals. One boy has his arm around his girl friend so tightly that she lets out a howl. "Whata you think I am," she blurts, "a bottle of 'Poof.'" The boy snickers and they move on. You pass Jeff's, see the girlie magazines in the window, and almost stop. "No, the magazines won't do me any good," you say to yourself, cut by the censors.

"it's the old touch that counts. You pass Harry's. Damn nice people, those Macklins. Harry has been in the hospital. Mrs. Mac and little Harry have been running the place. They don't have to worry about finals. No sir—just customers. You remember the time you asked one of the waiters what "lox" were. He didn't know—why should he? The aromas of salami and pastrami curl lazily past your nose as you move on.

What a night. The sky looks like someone has taken the bubbles out of a champagne glass and sprinkled them over a sheet of atmosphere the color of that-girl-in-your-history-class' eyes. You don't stop. You keep walking.

IN FRONT of the Post Office you stop long enough to read for the ten thousandth time the signs advocating the pleasures to be derived from an enlistment in one of the branches of the service.

Join the Navy. Join the Marines. Join the Mao-Mao. See the world. Learn a trade. Hunt headhunters. The thought of headhunters makes you wish that a tribe of the "shrink-your-own" boys would abduct a few of your instructors.

You continue walking down the street. The very idea—the head of the department's head sticking on a pole. It would make nice conversation in Y-Court.

YOU ARRIVE back in your room and start to undress for bed. Your freshman roommate is sitting in a corner pouring over his textbooks. Little does the stupid fool realize that instructors never take their final exams from the textbooks. He'll learn.

You turn the ceiling light off and finish your cigarette. Your roommate is still in the corner studying by the light of his desk lamp. As you pull the cover up over your head you congratulate yourself on a day well spent.

Tennis, Baseball Washed Out; Try, With Track, Today

USC, UNC, Terps Top Trials

If yesterday's rain-soaked trials are an indicator, Carolina, Maryland and South Carolina should dominate the show this afternoon when the annual Atlantic Coast Conference outdoor track meet opens on Fetzer Field at 1:30.

The Tar Heels, Terps and Gamecocks were the leaders in the trials held for ten of the fifteen finals events on tap for today, as Maryland placed an even dozen competitors in the finals and UNC and USC had eleven each. Duke was fourth in the qualifying totals with six.

The pole vault, high jump, javelin, shot put and broad jump open today's program at 1:30. Track events get underway at two o'clock, and will be run at ten minute intervals starting with the mile run and then the 440, 100, 120 high hurdles, 880, 220, two mile, 220 low hurdles and mile relay in that order. The final field event of the day, the discus, will start at 2:30.

As expected, Duke's Joel Shankle was the outstanding single performerin the trials, taking first place in the 120 high and 220 low hurdles and the broad jump and finishing fifth in the 100 yard dash.

The trials' summary:

Broad jump—Shankle (D), Yarborough (UNC), Christofferson (D), Mayer (D), Messersmith (Md), Ladner (WF), 23' 8½".

Shot put—Morris (UNC), Lawshe (D), Dyson (Md), Maslow (UNC), Kirby (C), Silas (USC), 49' 0".

Javelin—Ladner (WF), Marcinko (UNC), Wilson (UNC), Donney (U VA), Ricks (Md), Bartuski (USC), 182' 9¾".

440—Wilscher (USC), Leas (Md), Hemler (Md), Whetstone (USC), Wilson (Md), Hower (Md), 50.3.

100—Woodlee (USC), McMullen (UNC), Russell (UVA), Patrick (U SC), Shankle (D), Thomas (USC), 10.0.

120 high hurdles—Shankle (D), Bowen (C), Scott (UNC), Rhule (U NC), Gratten (UVA), Higgins (D), 14.8.

880—Carter (C), Newnam (UNC), Faass (Md), Jones (NCS), Grim (Md), Roberts (USC), 1:55.1.

220—Russell (UVA), Thomas (U SC), Woodlee (USC), Hemler (Md), Wilson (Md), Wilcher (USC), 22.3.

Discus—Morris (UNC), Dyson (Md), Silas (USC), Lawshe (D), Collins (USC), Kaufman (UVA), 153' 10⅞".

220 low hurdles—Shankle (D), Bowen (C), Scott (UNC), Grattan (UVA), Rhule (UNC), Wilson (U NC), 24.4.

Rain Pressures Tennis Entries

Thanks to a hard rain shortly after noon yesterday, the singles tennis champion of the Atlantic Coast Conference may have to win three matches today before he can lay claim to the title.

Quarter finals were scheduled here yesterday in the ACC tournament, but had to be postponed due to the deluge. According to host coach John Kenfield of Carolina, an attempt will be made to run off quarterfinal, semi-final and final matches today, but if time should run out, the finals matches could be played tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon.

Tournament officials plan to get play started as early as possible this morning and race against the clock to complete the event before dark.

One of this morning's feature matches is a quarter-finals battle between Herbe Browne of Carolina and Dave Schimmel of Duke, third and seventh seeded singles entries. Other top singles matches pair first seeded Buzzy Hettleman of Duke against Bobby Payne of UNC, Tom Bradford of Carolina against teammate Don Thompson, and second seeded Charles Atherton of Virginia against Pete Green of UNC.

Doubles competition was also halted in the quarter-final stage by the rain and will be continued today. Top-seeded Browne and Bradford of Carolina drew byes in the first round, but will move into action today along with the other doubles teams.

The feature match of today's quarter finals should be a dual between second-seeded Hettleman and Bob Green of Duke and third seeded Thompson and Ronnie Kerdasha of Carolina.

Carolina Has 3-Stroke Lead

Winston Salem, May 13 (UP)—Pete Arend of the University of Virginia waded through the rain in par 71 to take a three-stroke lead at the halfway mark in the Atlantic Coast Conference golf tournament here yesterday.

Three strokes behind at 74 were Carolina's Larry Parker, Leonard Yaun of Clemson and Melvin Deitch of N. C. State.

In a tie for fifth with 75s were Larry Bell and Willie Henderson of North Carolina, Terry Thomas of Duke, and Mickey Gallagher of Wake Forest.

The University of North Carolina held a three-stroke lead in team competition play.

The Tar Heel foursome of Parker, Bell, Jimmy Sykes and Joe Correll had an aggregate score of 303. Duke and Virginia were tied for second place with 306, Wake Forest was fourth with 309.

Raugh Gets Mound Nod

Rained out of their game with Virginia here yesterday, Carolina's baseball Tar Heels are scheduled to entertain Duke's Blue Devils on Emerson Field this afternoon at 3:00.

The Tar Heels can move into third spot in the Big Four standings with a win over the Blue Devils this afternoon, although the game will not have any bearing on the Atlantic Coast Conference race. It will be the final game of the season for Carolina.

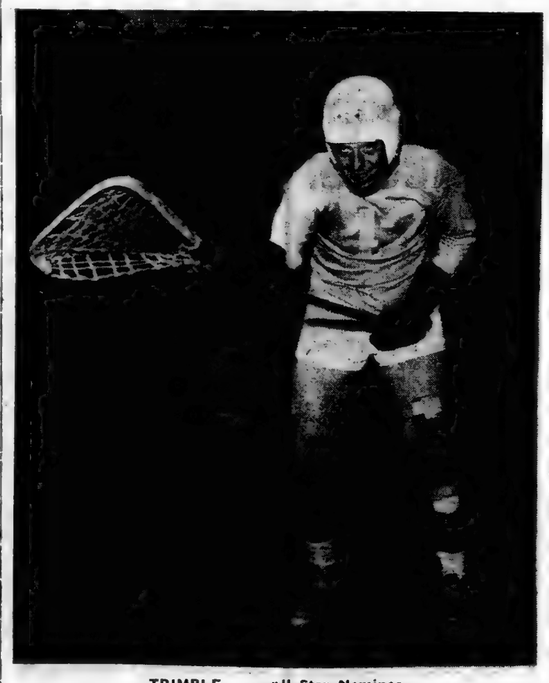
Coach Walter Rabb announced yesterday that he plans to start strikeout ace Jim Raugh against the Blue Devils. Raugh and Lefty Davis are currently battling it out for the strike-out crown in the ACC.

With Wake Forest virtually assured of the regular season ACC title and the Big Four crown, today's game shapes up as a battle for third place in the Big Four. A Carolina baseball team has never finished last in the Big Four.

The Tar Heels and Duke have split a pair of one-run games this year, with Duke winning the first game 2-1, and Carolina taking the second 6-5.

The Tar Heels, after a slow start, began getting good pitching and backing it up with lusty hitting to win seven out of their last eight games and move up from last place in the ACC. In their last three outings, the Tar Heels have hit in double figures as a team, getting 15 against South Carolina and N. C. State.

According to Rabb, the game with Virginia will not be rescheduled, as it would not have a direct bearing on the ACC race. Virginia was winless in conference competition.



Trimble All-Star Nominee

By AI KORSCHUN

Steve Trimble, senior lacrosse player from Washington, D. C., has been nominated for a defensive position on the South team in the annual North-South All Star game which will be played at Johns Hopkins University in early June. Trimble, who was nominated by Carolina coach Art Greenbaum to represent the University, has also been recommended by a number of prominent coaches, among these being Bob Sandell (Va), Charlie Herbert (Md), and Jack Persons (Duke).

Steve, who Co-captained the team this season, played brilliantly all season and led a Tar Heel defense that was one of the finest in Carolina team has ever fielded. In addition to his leadership on the field, Trimble's outstanding defensive play consistently repelled scoring threats of the opposition.

Trimble, who had never played lacrosse before coming to UNC, started the first game he had ever played in, and was a consistent starter for the Tar Heels for the next three years. In addition to his participation in sports, Steve has also been active in other fields on campus. He is a member of Phi Delta Theta, a member of the NROTC and has been Batallion Commander, has been vice-president of both the Monogram Club and the Scabbard and Blade, and is a member of the Order of the Old Well.

HAPPENINGS ON THE HILL:

Pity The Poor Writer

By SUSAN ANDES

Consider with me a moment the plight of a social editor. She calls one fraternity house on campus, and asks to speak with the social chairman. After a few seconds delay someone comes back with the reply "he's not here."

What to do then? Well . . . try to find out when he will be back and then go on down the list to the next fraternity and call there. This time if you're real lucky the person you want to talk to may be there.

You tell him who you are, and what the purpose of your call is.

"Have you any news for the paper today?"

At the other end of the line there's a few seconds hesitation and finally your answer comes back something like this.

"Ahh somebody got pinned last week . . . now lemme see, what was that girl's name?"

Boy on other end of the phone yells to one of the brothers asking who John Doe pinned. The two confer for a few minutes and he reappears to tell you he'll find out and call you back.

(Take it from me he'll never call back.)

At the next house you call, everyone is so eager to find out who the call is for that someone on each of the three floors answers the phone and all three voices cheerly shout out "Gamma Goof-off House."

As you try to regain your composure either one or all three of the previous boys who answered the phone hangs up and you have to start all over again.

You call back the Gamma Goof-off House and this time the prexy himself comes to your aid. Now you'd think a big wheel like him would know what's coming off around the house. Well he tells you that there's a party going on over the weekend and that its going to be a REAL blast!

AHH! PROGRESS!

After that call you begin thinking to yourself that you really have made progress. for at least that's one real piece of news. Now only 24 more fraternities to call.

At the next house the social chairman is there and he's a jolly fellow who delights in teasing and he's got time to spare. even if you haven't. So he tells you that Mo Shmoo is pinned . . . but if you are an alert social editor. you may discern a slight murmur and several giggles in the background. If so, take heed, for our practical joker here is up to no good. you may be sure.

He proceeds to tell you that Mo Shmoo just got pinned to Kitty Cookoo from Morganton. If Mo Shmoo, the brunt of this poke, isn't around the phone at this time, you can just imagine the shock he receives when he reads his name as being pinned to Kitty in the next issue of the newspaper.

Mo Shmoo isn't the only one who gets pinned to one or more girls in the course of a month or so: for the house boys of the local frats seem to be the most popular men on campus, from the number of times that some of them have been pinned.

Needless to say this could go on for an eternity . . . or so it seems. But now would you really like to know what I found out this week as I made my weekly phoning of the various houses?

Well let's see.

The Zetes have pretty much left their house empty this week, for many of them have headed to Morehead and Myrtle for the weekend.

The Theta Chis and the Pi Kappa Phis are partying together tonight at Hogan's with a wiener roast and ale party. They've even got a combo coming out to do the works up right.

Its the Sigma Chis' beach weekend and they'll be at the Anderson Manor in Myrtle.

Former President Truman Makes 'Firm Commitment' He'll Talk Here In 1956

Former President Harry Truman has definitely accepted an invitation to deliver the Weil Lectures on American citizenship on March 15, 16 and 17, 1956.

Truman wrote University President Gordon Gray: "I will make that a firm commitment, and no matter what happens, I won't let anything interfere with it — unless I break my neck or something equally as unavoidable."

Truman had originally agreed to deliver the lectures this spring, but was preventeti from doing so.

In making the announcement, Prof. Alexander Heard, chairman of the University's Committee on Established Lectures at whose request President Gray extended the invitation, said Truman and the committee had agreed that detailed plans for the former president's visit to North Carolina would not be made until after January 1, 1956.

The Weil Lectures were endowed 40 years ago by the families of Henry and Sol Weil, prominent citizens of Goldsboro. The lectures last year were given by Galo Plaza, president of Ecuador from 1948 to 1952. The first lectures were given in 1914 by William Howard Taft, former president of the United States.

Pat Hunter Chosen Chairman Of University Dance Committee

Pat Hunter, junior from Charlotte, was recently elected chairman of the dance committee to replace retiring T. Kepley.

Other officers elected were Sandy Sanders, secretary; Ed Hennessee, head doorman, and Don Miller, court chairman. Coach Marvin Allen was appointed faculty adviser.

Members of the court are Pat McCormick, Van King, Ed McCurry, Johnny Medlin, Ken Oakley and Bob Mason.

Holdover members of the committee are McCormick, King, Medlin, Oakley, Don Kentop and Mebane Pritchett.

The complete committee will be filled out in elections next fall.

Grad Course To Be Given In Nursing

The University will be one of six Southern universities which will join with the Southern Regional Educational Board in putting into full operation next fall the nation's first regional program of graduate education in nursing.

Miss Lucille Spalding, professor of nursing, represents the University on the program's Board of Directors, who represent all the participating schools — University of Alabama, Emory University, University of Maryland, University of Texas, Vanderbilt University and UNC.

A grant of approximately $80,000 was given to UNC and each of the five other institutions during the past year to develop the master's degree program in nursing. Funds came from the W. K. Kellogg Foundation.

The Commonwealth Fund has also committed grants to each of the schools to provide fellowship for graduate students.

In addition the Commonwealth Fund granted $24,450 to the Southern Regional Education Board this spring to continue the seminars in which the universities plan the several graduate program. The two foundations have committed a total of about $750,000 over a five-year period to launch the regional program.

Each school of nursing is establishing specializations which supplement what the other five

'Final Frolic' For Y

A "Final Frolic" for all coeds who are members of the campus YWCA will be held tomorrow at 5 p.m. in Battle Park.

After a picnic supper, the girls who attended the Centennial Convention in New York will give their reports and Y awards for the year will be presented.

Tickets, costing 50 cents, may be purchased at the Y office or from representatives in the dorms. In case of rain, the affair will be held in the Rendezvous Room.

Miss Marcia Smith is in charge of planning the picnic.

Fifth UNC Student Wins Fulbright Grant

A fifth UNC student has been awarded a Fulbright Scholarship for graduate study abroad during the 1955-1956 school year, Dr. Sturgis E. Leavitt, campus Fulbright program advisor announced yesterday.

James Edward Engel, graduate student from Harbor Beach, Mich., is the latest reciepient of a grant for study at Georg-August University, Goettingen, Germany.

Four other students who recently received Fulbright Scholarships for the coming year are Thomas E. Wilgus, Washington, D. C.; Miss Velma E. Bourgeois, Baton Rouge, La.; Julian E. White, Jr., Richmond, Va., and Peter G. Kalogridis of Winter Haven, Fla.

Engel, who has been working toward his doctorate in German, will begin his studies at Goettingen next fall after a two-week orintation course at Bonn. While there he will pursue his studies of German literature and Germanic linguistics, and carry out research on the medieval drama for use in his dissertation.

A graduate of Catholic University in Washington, D. C., where he received his A. B. and M. A. degrees, Engel has studied also at Middlebury College. He

UNC Graduate Set To Preach

James Haney, a student at the Mt. Airy Seminary and a 1954 graduate of the University, will be guest preacher at this morning's service at the Holy Trinity Lutheran Church.

While at the University, Haney was elected to membership in Phi Alpha Theta, Phi Beta Kappa, the Order of the Golden Fleece and the Order of the Old Well. He was also president of the UNC Inter-Faith Council for two years and of the Lutheran Student Assn. for one year.

Demands Now Different On News—Royster

Changing times have put changing demands on the nation's newspapers if they are to contiue to serve their readers properly and profitably, the North Carolina Editorial Writers Conference was told last night in its meeting here.

Vermont Royster, senior associate editor of The Wall Street Journal and a former Pulitzer Prize winner, said newspapers are losing their role as suppliers of quick headline news and as providers of entertainment for the family. He addressed the annual dinner at the Carolina Inn Ballroom.

The editorial writers, meeting here Friday night, heard a panel discussion on the South's approach to the desegregation question. The topic was discussed by William T Polk, associate editor of The Greensboro Daily News; C. A (Pete) McKnight, former editor of The Charlotte News and present editor of Southern School News and the Rev. Thomas T. Edwards rector of St. Phillip's Episcopal Church in Durham.

The conference will close this morning, following a business session at which summaries of critiques will be given and election of officers will be held.

Saturday morning and afternoon sessions were devoted to editorial critiques, led by the following North Carolina newspapermen: Hal Tribble, The Charlotte Observer; Al Dickson, The Wilmington Star; Stanley Moore, The Morganton

Carnival Re-Slated Tomorrow

The University Club's annual Spring Carnival, which was originally scheduled for Friday night, will be held tomorrow night at 7 o'clock on Navy Field.

According to a club spokesman, the weatherman is expected to cooperate a little better than he did last Friday, when rain caused postponement of the event.

The spokesman added that whether it rains or not, somebody is going to get wet, for one of the carnival events will be a contraption designed to let a contestant lunk some unfortunate coed, if the contestant is successful in playing the game.

Other carnival attractions range from a rat race to a girlie show to the announcement of the winner of the "Ugliest Man On Campus" contest, according to the spokesman.

Mangum Competition Set Monday

Monday morning will be the deadline for entries in the contest for the Mangum Award in oratory.

The contest, sponsored by the Di Senate and the Phi Assembly, will be held at 8 p.m. Monday in Di Hall on the third floor of New West. It will be open to the public.

All seniors interested in competing for the award should submit their names to Dean E. L Mackie's office, 312 South Building.

Speeches for the contest should be original oratory of 10 minutes length on any subject, according to a contest spokesman, adding that only three entries have been received so far.

The Mangum Award, established in 1878, is the oldest award of the University. It was founded by Misses Martha Person and Mary Sutherland Mangum, late of Orange County, in memory of the father, Willie Person Mangum, class of 1815. The award has been continued by descendents of Mangum.

The award, which is a gold medal, is awarded to the member of the senior class who in the opinion of a group of judges gives the most excellent oration in the contest.

Fiddles, Not Footballs, Set For Kenan Pines

"Swing your pard-ner and promenade," and not "we want a touchdown," will be the sound echoing from Kenan Stadium here next month when the eighth annual Carolina Folk Festival gets underway under a Carolina moon June 9.

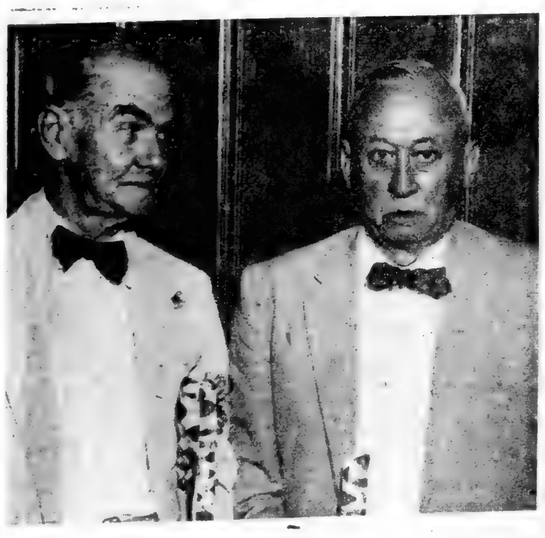
As usual, George Pegram, the Iredell banjo-picker, will be on hand to entertain at the three-day event. Other well known entertainers who have been featured in past festivals and who will be on hand are J. Laurel John, the Georgia fiddler; Mrs. Freda English ballad singer, and Obray Ramsey banjoist, both of Madison County

Bascom Lamar Lunsford of South Turkey Creek, director of the festival, has already set up headquarters in Chapel Hill and is busily engaged in completing final arrangements for this year's festival, which according to Lunsford, will be "by all odds the best yet."

The festival, sponsored by the N. C. Folklore Council, is under the direction of the UNC Extension Division, headed by Russell Grumman of Chapel Hill.

Approximately 650 contestants are expected to be entered in this year's festival, including string bands, ballad singers, and clog and square dancers from throughout North Carolina and other southern states.

Lunsford has been visiting public schools, colleges and community folklore groups in all parts of the State arranging for performers to appear in the annual event.



The mountain section will be represented also by Earl and Bill McElrath, clog dancers from Buncombe County; a number of dance teams, including the Allegany group from Sparta, headed by Homer Edwards; Mancho Sneed, Cherokee Indian fiddler, and Walter Parham, Buncombe harmonica player.

From the central part of North Carolina will come such groups as the Duplin County dance team; the Durham County Do-Se-Does; the Foot and Fiddle Dancers from Alamance; the Wildcat Dancers from Orange, and the Scottish highlanders from Cumberland County.

String bands will include Ed Norwood and his band from Chat-

Striking 'Co' From 'Ed'

"I wish you'd just forbid the use of the word 'coed' in your newspaper," we were told by our good friend, Miss Mary Gilson, the other night. "It sets the woman student apart as something different from other students."

The more we think about it the more we agree with Miss Gilson. If the fairer sex are "coeds" we reckon we're "eds"—but our exclusive claim to the "ed" doesn't make sense at all as long as we're both supposedly being educated.

It's pure discrimination and we are hereby agin' it. We've given the girls the vote; we've given them a seat in the classroom; and as a matter of Sonth'n gentlemanliness we'll strike the "co" from "ed."

'The Time Has Come, The Walrus Said, To Talk Of Many Things'

Sometimes we tire of trying in our inadequate way to carry on the great Socratic tradition of gadflyism, of buzzing and worrying and trying to sting our readers about the issues that really count. If we tire, we are sure you must too.

We would like to sit here with the typewriter keys under our fingers and produce a column of comment and agreement on Dr. Adams's penetrating address, which we would and do hope you will read anyway. Kingdoms rise and fall, but the crucial matters of mind and state and metaphysics—so many of which Dr. Adams touches upon—stay at a rising pitch that never falls far, if at all. We would like to talk about them.

But this time, hoping as we write that today is one of those sunny and unhurried days in Chapel Hill, one more fit for communion than conflict, we will, in keeping with that hope, play the role of the examiner of a needle in a haystack.

By saying this needle lies in a haystack, however, we don't mean we think this is a trivial matter; this is a needle, and it lies at the heart of what Dr. Adams talks about:

> Even in a university, there is not much time to wear a thinking cap, to brood, to contemplate . . . Students . . . are endlessly active, they live in an atmosphere of noise, they study with a radio turned on; and if a period of quiet comes that might be an interval of contemplation, like Joe the Fat Boy they fall asleep.

But the malady goes beyond Chapel Hill, of course; it goes beyond the university. Not many hours after the address had been made, another N. C. paper reprinted this cry from The Boston Herald, a cry which we don't consider too far removed from the question of contemplation and noncontemplation:

> Where is the village green, the town square, the plaza which yesterday graced our communities and served as places for gathering and gossip?

"Gossip" here is the unfortunate word, but "village green" and "gathering" go together. The green, the square, the plaza, the post-office have ceased to be places of gabfest as in the days when Chapel Hill's original gadfly, Horace Williams, had the campus talking and contemplating about why dogs catch rabbits or why Bob Ingersoll was (or was not) an "evil" man.

Think back, as we did, to the oldest of academies and you have a different story. Academy, academic: Those words crowd the campus. But one begins to wonder if their real meaning has an application any longer. When Plato founded his academy he named it so because "academe" meant grove: and he and Aristole and the others who plied the mind at that first academy strolled up and down along the shady "peripatos" as academic learning was born. Among the trees.

We know we have served up a lot of tangents with that original needle we set out to talk about. But some editorial writers just can't stick to the subject.

Swiftly, Grimly, They Remain Lean Souls

J. A. C. Dunn

"QUITE EARLY IN the history of medecine the doctors found out that a man could digest his food best if he ate it with pleasure among cheerful friends. So it is with books. You may devour them by the thousand, swiftly and grimly and yet remain the lean soul that you were. The only mental food that will turn to new tissue within you, and build itself into your mind, is that which you eat with a good surge of joy and surprise that anything so exciting should ever have been written."

This passage we discovered in a small Pelican book entitled A Writer's Notes on his Trade, by a gentleman named C. E. Montague, who used to write for the Manchester Guardian. It seems to apply particularly aptly to the general state of academic mind which we have observed in a large number of people during the past couple of weeks. As a matter of fact we are suffering from this same state of mind ourself.

WE DO NOT feel lazy, nor do we think anyone else feels lazy. The mental malady which seems to be spreading with epidemic force over the campus does not stem from that old dodge, spring fever. We had an interesting comment from a man who has been around here for some time now and who has seen this mental slump take the student body by the scruff of the neck and force it into a state of near collapse many times.

"It isn't that the students don't want to work," he said. "They do. They realize perfectly well that exams are coming and that the culmination of the semester's work is just over the next rise. The trouble is that they've had enough.

"Ever since September they've been sitting down in the evening or in the afternoon, or every other evening, or every other week, or when ever it is they study (which, by the grades in my course now, appears to be never), and plugging knowledge into their heads. They sit still and read or do math problems, or lab execises or something, and use nothing but their heads. This gets tiresome. Young people are not built to sit still all the time; they have to get out and move around, make noise, do something. This does not mean that most of them do not do something when they are not studying or in classes. But after a while, just the fact that they have to look forward to eventually getting back to the books and plugging more knowledge in is enough the send them fleeing uptown for a beer or a movie.

"They're stale. They don't want to learn anymore. They want to get outside and forget they ever learned how to read and then change the face of the earth.

"Saturday classes accentuate this trouble. This prevalent state of mind is why we have panty raids. I think Mr. Lewis Brumfield's recent remark that there is not enough to do in the dorms is an extremely acute observation. Any student who has trouble studying at this time of year I don't blame a bit. I have trouble sometimes making myself sit down to grade papers."

THIS IS GOOD. At last someone we agrees with us. The trouble with the people who doze off in the Library and the people who just "lie down for a little nap," and wake up at six next morning is not that they are really sleepy. They have simply got to the point where they are reading books, "swiftly and grimly," and yet remaining "the lean souls that they were."

We do not offer any solution to this problem. We merely point it out as consolation for those who are worried about the amount of work they are getting done.

Intervals Of Contemplation Now Lost In The Grinding Of Collegiate Wheels

Dr. Raymond B. Adams

(The following excerpts are from an address heard by the new initiates of the University Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa on May 12. Dr. Adams is Professor of English and acting head of the department in the absence of Dr. Dougald McMillan)

The great Phi Beta Kappa address was, of course, the address Ralph Waldo Emerson delivered at Harvard in 1837; it was, wrote the poet Lowell, "an event without any former parallel in our literary annals, a scene to be always treasured in the memory for its picturesqueness and its inspiration. It was our Yankee version of a lecture by Abelard," —you see, the Middle Ages keep insinuating themselves into our poets' sentences. Custom dictated the title of Emerson's address, Phi Beta Kappa addresses at Harvard in those days were always titled "The American Scholar." But when Emerson's address was reprinted that year in England, where even Harvard custom had no force, the pamphlet had a bet ter title. It was "Man Thinking." And, sure enough, Emerson's scholar is not particularly American; but he is thinking man anywhere.

Anywhere, but not any*how*. Man's thinking is systematic:

> The scholar of the first age received into him the world around; brooded thereon; gave it the new arrangement of his own mind, and uttered it again. It came into him life; it went out from him truth. It came to him short-lived actions; it went out from him immortal thoughts. It came to him business; it went from him poetry. It was dead fact; now, it is quick thought. It can stand, and it can go. It now endures, it now flies, it now inspires. Precisely in proportion to the depth of mind from which it issued, so high does it soar, so long does it sing."

That is to say, the creative thinger is not merely an accumulator of facts. Carol Linnaeus illustrates the process. He gathered data whenever and wherever he could, friends sent him materials, flowers, leaves, root systems, fruits, higgledy-piggledy as they happened to be available. And when the data was in, Linnaeus brooded over it, he contemplated it, he took time to bring some order out of the seeming chaos, he indulged in an interval of contemplation until all the hodgepodge items of data arranged themselves around a principle that emerged in his mind until it seemed as if they had polarity in relation to his principle; and the result was the Linnaean system of plant classification, still in use, almost a law of nature. What came to him data went from him a great truth—but not until there had been an interval of contemplation during which the bread and wine of data were transsubstantiated into the body and blood of truth. You've had it happen to you, for ever scholar in his way is a priest of truth. You've gathered data from here and there for a term paper; and then you've brooded over the batch of material; and out of the brooding has come an orderly term paper that made a contribution toward the event of tonight. It will happen to you again and again. The cares that infest the day, the little nameless acts of kindness and of love, the incidents of business and of home life will come to you a hit-and-miss medley; you will brood on them in some blessed interval of contemplation until order appears and a "philosophy the guide of life" results which, if you are lucky, will satisfy you forever.

NO TIME TO BROOD

But no good term paper, no creative piece of literature, no abiding scientific theory, no philosophy of life can appear without its interval of contemplation. Dead fact cannot become quick thought until the fact has passed through the alembic of thoughtfulness. That word alembic literally means cap, and in this process of creative thought we can let it mean thinking cap. So what we are saying is that you cannot amount to much as a thinker until you will put on your thinking cap. The "brooding thereon" of the Emersonian scholarly process is an essential element, a sine qua non.

But in 1955, even in a University, there is not much time to wear a thinking cap, to brood, to contemplate. Students certainly find little time for intervals of contemplation, and they make for themselves even less time than they might otherwise find. These are times that try young people's souls. So even college students join the general public in the avoidance of thinking. They are endlessly active, they live in an atmosphere of noise, they study with a radio turned on; and if a period of quiet comes that might be an interval of contemplation, like Joe the Fat Boy they fall asleep. Many have concluded that it won't do to think too much; so shrewd students make do what will do.

Faculty members can secure few intervals of contemplation either. A great influx of students and a great efflux of relative income from appropriations or endowments has left the teacher little time for creative thinking. The machinery of a university down in the ratchets and escapements where the classroom teacher is one of the cogs (that is down where the machine really ticks) has truly become a fantastic mechanism consuming time and energy when it should be salvaging time and energy. With what result? With the result that in a modern university, especially in a modern state university, very little creative thinking is done by the faculty. Articles get published; but most of them are gatherings of data that never went through the alembic but appeared in print as items of data properly footnoted. Books get edited. But how few books get written! One can gather data on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons and on Saturday afternoon unless the lawn needs mowing and get a reputation as a scholar thereby. But one won't get a reputation as a thinker that way.

NO GLORY FOR A DEAN

Nor is it any better among the big wheels of the collegiate machine. The intervals of contemplation never come for the dean and cannot come in the very nature of a university these days. So challenging statements of purpose seldom come from the dean. Creativeness doesn't have a chance. Being the dean must be a good deal like being a dishwasher, no sooner do you get one mess cleaned up than the next mess starts demanding attention. There's no perspective and no future in being a dishwasher. It was never much help to that functionary to call him a "pearl diver." And I suspect the college functionary doesn't think there's much percentage in being called "dead." But departments and schools hunger for challenging policies and for articulate men free enough to take the short-lived actions into an interval of contemplation so that before it is too late we can have for our generation some immortal thoughts.

Presidents and chancellors need to be articulate too. But are they allowed to be creative thinkers? I suppose, looking at them from the vantage point of a cog down where the machine does its real ticking, that these top functionaries have the least time of all to be creative. They must be glad-handing every visitor, smoothing down every ruffled feather that lifts a pinion on the campus, making a few remarks to every gathering of visiting firemen, seeking money, and (I am sure) dropping exhausted into bed night after night. Statesmanship is postponed. It cannot be delegated to a committee nor to a conference nor to a chain of command. A committee never contemplated anything. Creative thinking is not a cooperative venture. It is a venturing by one man into the unexplored. That man deserves to be given the intervals of contemplation without which statesmanship cannot come to a university nor a business nor a government nor to a single man—that most independent and most important state of all. Yet from universities and businesses and governments and individuals we have taken away intervals of quiet, knowing all the while that without them life will never be transmuted into truth, actions will never be transmuted into thoughts, business will never become poetry, and the morale in a university will break because the sense of the campus will be that educational occasions are tided over rather than seized with the firmness and vision that might have been brought to bear had there been an interval of contemplation when creative thinking could have been done.

THE EDUCATED MUST BE BRAVE

Thus Emerson, speaking for Phi Beta Kappa, prescribed for those young scholars, for all scholars, and for us what Dante centuries before had called "the excellent delight . . . the true blessedness which is gained by the contemplation of the truth." Blessed are those who have intervals of contemplation, for they shall have creativeness; and out of creativeness, certainty; and out of certainty, bravery. One cannot hold a truth unless he has worked his way through details to the principle that underlies the details; and one cannot be brave unless he holds fast to a truth. And the educated man man must be brave.

We fear, and rightly, sudden bombardment and the shattering of our skies by guided missles carrying hydrogen warheads. Our conscience has not been very good since Hiroshima, and we are not sure that those who took up the atom may not perish by the atom. Such is a natural fear probably good for our corporal soul—provided we can keep corporation and soul together. But we fear one another; we fear informers amongst us; we fear to go on record in any positive way lest at a later and worse time those positive ideas shall have become unpopular and the record then may rise up against us. So at last we fear the very intervals of contemplation we so much need, for the latter end of contemplation is truth amidst the appearances. We know too (for we have not come through college without catching hints of the obligations of intellectual integrity) we know that once we by ourselves and for ourselves find truth, it will not be gainsaid. Then we must take a stand or hate ourselves ever after. It is more comfortable to be decorous and yield to the lesser fears than to run the risk of taking a stand. Yet decorousness is not comfortable either, for then we shall have yielded, a very unsatisfying performance.

It's an old dilemna. There is comfort to be bought by not facing up to the truth; but there is no comfort within ourselves unless we face up. Shall we have comfort around us or shall we have comfort within us? It seems we cannot have both.

THE MOST DEPRESSING PROBLEM

. . . There will be forever with you one problem that has vexed man through all history: the problem of a free mind. The issue of intellectual freedom arises to acuteness in every human generation and forces itself upon every thinking person. It is common; but it does seem particular with us. Communism dare not permit the free mind; fascism dare not permit it. And unfortunately democracy, fearful of both communism and fascism, thinks in its fear that freedom of mind cannot be permitted either. Little un-free minds think in terms of knowledge that must be classified away from open discussion. In the name of preserving democratic freedom small-minded men have been withholding information and deciding what shall be withheld from the rest of us, delighting in playing a cloak-and-dagger game, until our democratic freedom even in simple and harmless matters is threatened by a breed of martinet such as has not operated in America before. This is likely to be the problem that will depress you most and challenge you most. In some measure it has faced every educated person. It happens to be facing educated people now in an aggravated form and demanding of them more creative thought than it has demanded of some college generations in quieter times.

It will be no trouble to gather data about the problems. The times will see to that, the data will come merely because we are thinking beings in a living society. You know, of course, that there are no ivory towers any more. But there will be difficulty in securing the intervals of contemplation which thinking beings need as the data accumulates. The times will see to that difficulty also, for life these days hurries us and leaves no intervals. I have envied people of one and two centuries ago who managed things better, wrote hundreds (even thousands) of marvelous letters, read thousands of pages of fine print, indulged in the now forgotten art of conservation, made long slow journeys, did a life's work, and found time for it all. It would seem that this twentieth century could have saved time for us; but its time-saving gadgets have lost us time itself. So just on the score of interruption and pressure of demands on our time it will be difficult to find the intervals. Facing the facts will be difficult also because we are romanticists and would rather escape. And conviction will be difficult because around every one of the impending problems partizans and zealots will be lining up on both sides with their nasty selfishnesses and prejudices. So, when finally you shall have thought your way through to a firm conviction about the issue and taken a stand, you will perforce associate with partizans and zealots; and unthinking people, partizans and zealots of the other camp, will regard your firm conviction merely as so much more partizanship and illiberality. With problems come dilemmas if one thinks.

WHAT COLLEGES ARE FOR

I am not going to close any Phi Beta Kappa address with a suggestion that members of this fraternity should not think in the face of what is likely to come in the next twenty years, or forty years, or even sixty years—for life expectance increases and all of you may live to be eighty. Like all times, these are times of crisis, no worse than all times, but no better either. The world always needs thought brought to bear on its problems. Perhaps the best thought will be brought to bear by non-college thinkers. Unfortunately the world has not found out how to anticipate them. If they come, so much the better. Meanwhile the world has built colleges by way of providing itself with thinkers in anticipation of problems to come. It has not been the world's idea that colleges would be used for the selfish dilettantism Dante described as being "friendly with wisdom in some direction because of some certain delight." Nor, I am convinced, has it truly been the world's idea that colleges would be used for the equally selfish commercial vocationalism which Dante called being "a friend of wisdom for profit." The world has known that problems will perennially arise which nothing short of creative thinking can solve, so it has been the world's idea that colleges would be used over and above immediate and practical objectives to move educated men and women with "that most excellent delight which suffers no interruption nor defect, to wit the true blessedness which is gained by the contemplation of the truth," as Dante described it.

This sounds very noble; but it may not seem noble three or four years from now at a work bench or at a desk, in a barracks or in a kitchen. Idealism has a hard time in such areas of bread and butter affairs where it is hard to apply "Philosophy the Guide of Life" as a slogan. It will take all the "three o'clock in the morning courage" you can muster to make for yourself an interval of contemplation leading to an utterance of truth in so cramped a form. If under these circumstances this process of creative thinking doesn't seem to matter to you, then truly for you it won't matter, for almost certainly with that attitude you will not achieve better circumstances. But if the problems of the great world do seem to matter in the little world where you work and live, then you will be revealing qualities that the great world wants. I have no belief in "mute, inglorious Miltons." I am Carlylean enough to believe that the world calls forth its spokesmen, and idealist enough to believe that Miltons will not, cannot remain mute because "if these shall hold their peace, the stones will cry out." The World then, and your University, and the Society in whose name all this is said tonight, regardless of your vocations or avocations, your places or prospects, expects you to do creative thinking and has sealed that expectation in your case by the symbol of a Phi Beta Kappa key, hopeful that in years to come there will be intervals of contemplation when you can wear that key proudly.

Politics Of Parity, Idiot Boards, And TV

Gerald Johnson

The House Democrats pulled a rank political deal when they drove through that farm bill restoring rigid parity prices at 90%; but it was not a bit ranker than the one Candidate Eisenhower pulled in 1952 when he told the farmers that 90% is not enough, that he favored 100%; and then, after he was elected, recommended 75%.

The truth is they are all playing politics with farm legislation, and the consumer is the goat. The only sensible idea yet for dealing with farm surpluses was the Brannan Plan, and both parties denounced that. The only time you can count on the Democrats and the Republicans to agree is when somebody offers a plan with some sense in it. They can usually agree to kill it.

BRANNAN'S IDEA

Brannan's idea was to give the farmer his parity prices, but also to give the consumer a break. Let the government buy up the stuff but never put it in storage; throw it on the market for what it will bring and pay the farmer the difference by direct subsidy out of the Treasury. This would run up the deficit, to be sure, but it would pull down the cost of living; and as the cost of living came down, gradually parity would come down. In the end we might get back to a general price level at which we could do business with the rest of the world without artificial aids.

Yet nobody would be badly hurt. When you took out of the consumer's pocket in taxes you would put back in a lower cost of living; and eventually, as parity came down with the reduced cost of living, you could ease off on taxes. Yet the Brannan Plan was denounced by all Republicans and a good many Democrats as the most insane idea of the whole New Deal-Fair Deal era.

MARK HANNA DAYS

The law that the Democrats have just put through is half the Brannan Plan. It gives the farmer his parity price, as Brannan recommended; but it doesn't give the consumer a break to balance the benefit to the farmer. The Republican measure was even more cynical. It simply cut down parity without benefiting either the farmer or the consumer. It was a reversion to the old policy that prevailed in the Mark Hanna days—when things get tight, throw the farmer to the wolves first.

The Democratic variation on that is save the farmer and throw the consumer to the wolves. It may be an improvement, but I can't see it that way; it looks more like a political dodge to avoid the policy of saving them both. Both could be saved, but only by dragging the whole business out into the open, where everybody could see it. If the difference between parity and market price were paid out of the Treasury we should know to a dollar what the farm program costs; but as long as it is paid by keeping up the price of farm products the cost is concealed, at least in part.

FAGIN'S STATESMANSHIP

If this is statecraft, then Fagin was a statesman. His business, you remember, was to teach the boys how to pick your pocket neatly, quickly and without the slightest pain, in fact without your being aware that it had been picked. That was and is the essence of farm legislation from time immemorial, and it doesn't lie in the mouth of either party to howl about the low morals of the other: for they have both played politics to the limit and both are playing politics now, with Eisenhower leading the game.

Senator Neuberger, of Oregon, is a man whose ideas are always interesting and amusing and quite frequently right, but I can't follow him in his recent demand that no politician shall appear on television in make-up, or read his stuff from an "idiot board" that is, copy held up out of sight of the camera, unless the fact is announced. Senator Neuberger says he is opposed to fraud and wants the voting public to see politicians as they are.

ANOTHER SIDE

This sounds fine, but there is another side to it. If there is anything that can improve a politician, mentally or physically, I am all for it. The public is going to suffer enough under any conditions; why put it to avoidable pain? I admit that some cynics might use this as an excuse to rule out television in politics altogether. Isn't it enough, they will argue, to have to listen to the politician without having to look at them too?

But if you carry the argument that far, you play right into Senator Neuberger's hands. It is desirable to make voters face the facts. I remember the comment of a woman of my acquaintance in 1952, right after Eisenhower and Stevenson had both appeared on television. "Well," she said ruefully, "no matter how the election comes out, we are going to have a bald-headed President." Having faced the inevitable, she was thereafter in better shape to listen to the arguments.

I maintain in spite of the scoffers that candidates are human beings, and a little make-up that makes them look human under the Klieg lights is not a deception. Some of them also have something to say, and if the idiot board helps them to get if said quickly and accurately it is a good thing for the viewers as well as the speakers. So I am afraid that Senator Neuberger is just trying to make politics more unpleasant.

Carolina Makes Clean Sweep Of ACC Sports Day Saturday

As Carolina Teams Took All The Prizes Here Yesterday

Above are some random scenes snapped as Carolina won the ACC track meet, walloped Duke 20-2 in baseball and dominated the ACC tennis matches here yesterday. On the left, Tommy Bradford poises for a serve from teammate Don Thompson in their quarter-final match which Bradford won 9-7, 6-1. The second shot shows Roger Morris straining as he gets off his winning discus heave of 153'10⅞" in the ACC outdoor track meet. Moris also took first in the shot put with a record-breaking performance. Things got a little tiresome at Emerson Field as the Tar Heels romped over Duke 20-2 in a Big Four baseball game. Photographer Boyden Henley caught some of the Carolina players in a little dugout by-play in the third shot. The picture on the right shows State's Bobby Jones edging out defending champion Boyd Newnam in the 880 at the ACC track meet. Jones caught Newnam on the last stretch to win first place.

ACC Tennis Finals Are All UNC—Set Monday

The Atlantic Coast Conference tennis tournament turned into an all-Carolina affair yesterday as Tar Heel doubles and singles performers eliminated all other competition and moved into the semi-finals and finals.

The finals will be played Monday (tomorrow) afternoon on the varsity courts, getting underway at two o'clock with the singles championship between Herbe Browne, the tourney's fourth-seeded entry, and Tommy Bradford, who upset Duke's first-seeded Buzzy Hettleman to move into the finals.

A doubles match will be played today between the teams of Browne-Bradford and Handel-Gustafson of Carolina to determine which team will meet Bobby Payne and Pete Green for the doubles title. The bracket in which Browne and Bradford were playing fell behind the other bracket and is in the semi-finals stage, while Payne and Green won their semi-finals match yesterday by dropping Thompson and Kershasha of UNC 6-1, 6-0.

Browne and Bradford, first-seeded doubles team, ran into trouble with Duke's Kope and Schimmel in the quarter finals, but rallied in the second set to win 8-6, 6-3.

In quarter-finals singles matches yesterday, Greene defeated Atherton, second-seeded of Virginia, 6-3, 4-6, 6-1; Browne defeated Schimmel of Duke 7-5, 6-1; Hettleman of Duke defeated Payne 6-1, 6-3; and Bradford defeated Thompson 9-7, 6-1. In the semi - finals, Browne defeated Green 5-7, 6-1, 6-2 and Bradford upset Hettleman 11-9, 6-1.

The Carolina tennis team won the ACC team championship by virtue of an unblemished mark in conference play over the regular season.

Cross Tosses Frosh Over Blue Imps 3-2

DURHAM, May 14 — Charlie Cross, fireballing southpaw, tamed Duke's Blue Imps with a five-hit job here today to help his Carolina freshman club to a 3-2 win.

Cross put the Imps down in order in every inning except the fifth, eighth and ninth in getting the win. He fanned seven and walked one.

Leading 2-1 going into the eighth, the Tar Babies sewed up the game as Delon Lambert singled, took second on a pair of sacrifices and scord on an infield out.

Duke picked up a singleton in the fifth on three consecutive singles and added another in the ninth on a single, a hit batsman and a sacrifice fly.

Gravitte Signs With Yanks

Connie Gravitte (above) has signed a contract with the New York Yankees, it was announced today. The hefty center fielder led the Tar Heels in hitting this year and was the top home run hitter in the Atlantic Coast Conference with seven. He was hitting at around .350 before yesterday's game with Duke. He was also an outstanding halfback for the football Tar Heels and was an all-conference baseball choice last spring.

UNC Batters Duke 20-2 Behind Raugh

A fine five-hit job by Jimmy Raugh and lusty hitting against a shaky Duke team closed out Carolina's baseball season here yesterday as the Tar Heels walloped arch-rival Duke 20-2.

Raugh was in charge all the way in hanging up his fifth win of the season, as he retired the first eight men to face him and scattered five Duke safeties.

The win moved Carolina into third place in the Big Four standings and dropped the Blue Devils into last. Carolina compiled a 12-12 mark on the season to finish at .500 after a rough start. The Tar Heels won eight of their last nine games.

Carolina got Raugh all the runs he needed in the first three innings as Connie Gravitte's triple scored Harry Lloyd and Tom Zachary singled to score Gravitte in the first. Then in the third, Lloyd was nipped by a pitch, took second on an error, stole third, and scored on Al Long's sacrifice fly to give the Tar Heels all they needed.

Carolina picked up four more in the fourth, and two in the sixth. The runs in the sixth came on a home run into deep left-center by left fielder Bob Paller.

The Tar Heels added a singleton in the seventh to make it 10-1 and set the stage for Carolina's most productive inning of the season.

In the last of the eighth, the Tar Heels scored ten runs as fifteen batters went to the plate, banged five hits, drew five walks, and two batters were hit. Duke was guilty of two errors in the inning, with three runs scoring when shortstop Dick Brewer threw wild to first with the bases jammed.

The Blue Devils fell apart in the merry-go-round eighth as they threw twice to the wrong base, and couldn't get the Tar Heels out. Six men came to bat in the inning after two men were out.

While Carolina was producing its offensive fireworks, Raugh was doing a workmanlike job with the Blue Devil hitters. He retired Duke in order in four innings, and allowed only three runners as far as second base.

Duke picked up one run in the fourth on a double, a passed ball and an infield out, and another in the ninth on Andy Cockrell's double into the hedge in deep center field, an infield out, and a single.

Zachary was the big gun for UNC as he pounded four singles in five official trips. Gravitte, Long, and Raugh all had two hits each for Carolina.

Tar Heel Tracksters Edge Maryland For ACC Crown

By RAY LINKER

Carolina's track team was on top of the ACC today after dethroning Maryland, 55¼ - 54, here yesterday. It was the Terps who beat the Tar Heels by less than two points for the crown yast year.

The meet, which was close from start to finish, saw Duke take third with 37 points, mainly on the strenght of Joel Shankle, who took meet high scoring honors with 20½ points.

Other team scores were South Carolina 28¼, Virginia 16½, Clemson 16, State 13, and Wake Forest 5.

Both the Tar Heels and the Terps took three undisputed first places, but the pole vault, in which two North Carolinas and one Marylander tier for first, decided the final outcome of the meet.

The pole, which was the last event, gave the meet to the Tar Heels. With Charlie Yarborough and Richard Waters of North Carolina and Mel Schwarz of Maryland still jumping for the top three spots (Maryand had already picked up a single point in the vault when Jack Duval went out after tying with Joel Shankle of Duke and Frank Metz of Clemson for fourth), the Tar Heels trailed in the team score 50-47¼. All three jumpers failed to go any higer than 13 feet, and Carolina gained eight points and Maryland four from the three-way tie. If Schwarz had been able to go any higher he would have saved the meet for the Terps, and had not at least one of the Tar Heel vaulter tied for first place the Tar Heels would have lost.

Roger Morris was high scorer for the winning Tar Heels, as he successfully defended his discus crown and pushed aside last year's shot put champ by taking that event with a new ACC record of 51 feet, four inches. The old record of 50 feet, 8¾ inches was set by Durham Lawshe of Duke in 1953, who had won the meet for the last two years, but who was forced to take second to Morris yesterday.

The only other record to fall was in the two-mile run, as N. C. State's Mike Shea toured the distance in 9:27.6, just two-tenths of a second better than Sam Magill of Carolina did in 1949.

Tommy Woodlee of South Carolina was another double winner, as he successfully defended his crowns in the 100 and 220-yard dashes.

Defending champ Maryland was, as expected, exceptionally strong in the 440, taking the first three places. Burke Wilson was the winner, and he also took second in the 220 and ran a leg of the winning mile relay team for nine and one-fourth points.

In one of the feature races of the mee, Jim Beatty of Carolina handily defeated Burr Grim of Maryland. The race was expected to be a real battle, but Beatty took the lead from the onset and never relinquished it, coasting in about 15 yards ahead of Grim.

N. C. State's Bobby Jones passed defending champ Boyd Newnam in the strech of the 880 to win that race after Newnam had lead most of the way.

Deacs Clinch Championship

WAKE FOREST, N. C., May 14 (AP)—Sophomore righthander Buck Fitcher pitched Wake Forest to the Atlantic Coast Conference baseball championship today with a 4-2 victory over Virginia.

Fitcher gave up only four hits in chalking his fifth win of the season against one loss. He walked six and was in trouble frequently, but two double plays and nine strikeouts pulled him through.

The Deacons nosed out North Carolina State for the ACC title, finishing the season with an 11-3 conference record compared to the Wolfpack's 10-4 standing. Overall, Wake Forest has won 20 and lost five.

Carolina Golfers Take Second In ACC; Parker Second Place

WINSTON-SALEM, May 14 — (AP)—Pete Arend, a senior from the University of Virginia, shot a par 71 for the second straight day to win the Atlantic Coast Conference individual golf championship over the Old Town Club course today.

Wake Forest took the team championship with an aggregate score, beating out the University of North Carolina by three strokes

Duke, defending team champion, finished in a fourth-place tie with N. C. State. Virginia was third.

Arend, who had led the field by three strokes after Friday's rain-drenched first round, withstood sub-par shooting today by North Carolina's Larry Parker and Willis Henderson, and Wake Forest's John Gerring, to take the crown with a 36-hole total of 142.

He succeeds Arnold Palmer, who won the individual title for Wake Forest here last year.

Close behind were Parker and Henderson, who tied for second place with scores of 144. Melvin Deitch of N. C. State and John Gerring of Wake Forest tied for fourth with 147s.

The winning Wake Forest team was composed of John Gerring, Sandy Burton, Mickey Gallagher and Henry Kerfoot.

The second-place North Carolina team was composed of Larry Bell, Aubrey Rothrock, Larry Parker and Joe Correll. The Tar Heels had an aggregate score of 600. Virginia 608, N. C. State and Duke 609, Clemson 635, Maryland 638, and South Carolina 640.

Henderson and Gerring posted the low cards of the tournament. Both had 69s yesterday.

The Carolina positions and scores:

2-Larry Parker, 74-70—144; 3-Willie Henderson, 75-69—144; tie 8-Larry Bell, 75-75—150; 10-Joe Correll, 76-75—151; 13-Billy Armfield, 79-75—154; 17-Aubrey Rothrock, 80-75—155; 23-Jimmy Sykes, 78-78—156; 28-Bill Ford, 81-76—157; 23-Cal Mitchell, 80-79—159; 34-Robert Sisk 84-76—160; 47-Fred Butters, 85-81—

EDUCATIONAL TV

Educational television was the theme of the luncheon, also at the Carolina Inn ,with Robert Schenkkan, WUNC-TV director, as main speaker. Miss Margaret Underwood, coed from Greensboro and WUNC-TV performer, gave a program of folk songs.

Royster said newspapers' old role of headlines and entertainment had been lost to radio, television, comic books and other media in a revolution that has overtaken journalism in the past 30 years.

Royster, a native of Raleigh and UNC graduate, contended that newspapers which would grow in the future would be those that held their readers with more local news, more thorough reporting of world news and with more editorials and articles that explain clearly to readers why things happen.

Whether the newspaper be a small weekly or a big city daily, he said, it should seek to provide the things the reader wants and can't get any other place.

HOW & WHY

"A man no longer needs a newspaper to tell who won the ball game," Royster said. "He can get that on the radio. What he wantsi n the paper is a well-written story that explained how and why his team won or lost."

That kind of story helps the reader, and interest him, even if he saw the ball game himself in person or on TV, the Carolina editors were told. Royster said the same principles apply to stories on fires, disasters and global peace conferences.

Noting the decline of comic strips and continued stories as circulation builders in areas invaded by TV, Royster pointed out that newspaper readers can now get better entertainment elsewhere. Newspapers can't compete effectively in the amusement business, he said.

"In this new climate," he told the group, "newspapers will go the way of the dinosaur if they don't adapt themselves."

Royster contended this means less reliance on big black headlines on stories the reader has already heard about, less once-over-lightly treatment of news and space devoted to features that are purely entertainment.

ORGANIZATION

He said the change requires more careful organization of news presentation, more reporting, better writing and more emphasis on the thought content of editorials and those features that elaborate on local and world news.

Royster expressed the view that newspapers which meet the change need have no worry about the future. "There is today a hunger for more news about what's happening and why, and the newspaper that satisfies it will satisfy its readers and grow fat doing it," Royster concluded.

Schenkkan described the operation of an educational TV station and went into the various problems that confront the people in this new field of information. He told of ways that such a TV program may be of aid in the field of education, especially in view of the great increase in the enrollment of schools and colleges.

He explained that aside from the aid that educational TV would give school students, it would be of great value in the contributions of cultural and informational programs for adults.

ed the high jump record by one-fourth of an inch when he turned in a leap of six feet two and three-fourths inches.

Jack Ladner won the javelin with an excellent throw of 197 feet, 8¼ inches, over 15½ feet better than the second place throw of UNC's Steve Marcinko.

Shankle collected his points by winning the high and low hurdles and the broad jump, and placing second in the 100, tying with four others, including UNC's Ken Bryant, for fifth in the high jump, and tying with three others in the pole vault for the fourth place medal.

WAA Awards

The Women's Athletic Association will hold its annual Spring Awards Picnic Tuesday behind Woollen Gymnasium.

The outdoor pool will be open from 5 until 6 p.m. for all coeds who wish to use it, according to a WAA spokesman. Food will be served beginning at 6 o'clock. According to the spokesman, the sororities on campus will not serve supper that night in order that the members may attend the picnic.

Tickets for the event are priced at 50 cents and may be purchased from the dormitory and sorority intramural representatives or at the women's gym.

The main part of the program will feature the presentation of monograms to all coeds who have won a total of 200 points by participating in intramural activities, the presentation of awards to the senior girl or girls who have shown outstanding interest, leadership and sportsmanship in WAA activities during the past year and awarding the All-Sports cups to the dormitory and sorority which have totaled the greatest number of points in intramural activities.

Last year's winners of the cups were Carr Dorm and Chi Omega.

The picnic will be open to all coeds.

HOMEMADE, TOO:

Transparent Globe Key To Planetarium's Show

A four-inch miniature "transparency" globe, which projects a 68-foot image of the earth, is the key to the current presentation, "Steering by the Stars," of the Morehead Planetarium.

Mrs. Marjorie Besheres, private art teacher here, prepared the globe, which required very exact proportion and geographical location of countries and and continents.

In preparing the project, which required 17 hours to complete, Mrs. Besheres had to paint the seas and oceans on the outside to produce colors.

Planetarium technicians designed mechanical means to provide daily and latitude motion to simulate the natural phenomenon of earth's rotation at any latitude. The impression created by the effect places the visitor on the inside of the earth, looking out. Consequently continents appear "backwards." Moving against the background of the Planetarium stars, the effect simulates true aspects of natural and apparent earth motions.

This "geocentric earth" provides an easy transition from the method of measuring distance on earth, to the means which enable astronomers and navigators to designate exace positions of stars and other celestial objects.

"Steering by the Stars" will continue to be presented in the Morehead Planetarium every evening at 8:30, on Saturdays at 11 a.m., 3 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. and on Sunday at 3, 4, and 8:30 p.m. through May 23.

VOL. LVII, NO. 162 | Complete (AP) Wire Service | CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, TUESDAY, MAY 17, 1955 | Offices In Graham Memorial | FOUR PAGES TODAY

Report Says Students Not Cooperating

A report issued yesterday by the UNC Buildings and Grounds Committee pointed up recent University construction, work planned for the future, plans for married students' housing—and also made the observation that there has been "an increasing lack of cooperation by the students in our beautification efforts."

"New seeding," said the report, "is trampled on, wires erected as reminders are pushed down, protective borders are sliced through, and despite an ample network of brick walks, lawns are becoming crisscrossed with foot paths."

The committee said it would "welcome help from any quarter" in causing students to become "more cooperative" in keeping the University's grounds "restful and pleasing."

The report covered the year April 1954-April 1955. It was signed by R. J. M. Hobbs, chairman of the Buildings and Grounds Committee.

Hobbs' report said detailed plans are peing considered on the building of the Ackland Building, to be erected here to house an art gallery and home for the Art Dept.

GOVERNMENT

The contract for the new Institute of Government building was let "about the first of the year and construction is proceeding rapidly," said the report. "A bid more favorable than anticipated permits the inclusion of an auditorium which it had been feared would have to be omitted," the report said.

An extension of the Utilities Building on Franklin St., which houses the University Laundry, Chapel Hill Telephone Co., and other utilities, was approved at a recent meeting, the report said. The building is being extended on the back side.

"The past year witnessed the completion of the psychiatric wing of the hospital and of the remodled 'Old Well'," said the report. "Minor improvements include some stone steps leading off the driveway of the (Carolina) Inn, the razing of a metal shed back of Carroll Hall, landscaping around Venable Hall and the Naval Armory, additional brick walks and new steps at the north end of Graham Memorial.

"Another matter which has claimed the attention of the committee has been the selection of possible sites for additional dormitories and housing for married students."

Yack Meeting

An important organizational meeting is slated this afternoon at 5 o'clock in the Yackety Yack office in Graham Memorial. Editor Jack Markham has requested that all members of this year's staff who are interested in working on next year's book be present, plus any other interested persons.

Carnival: From Garters To Golf Balls

Carolina students "flushed" pretty coeds down a sliding board, tried to throw garters on sorority girls' legs, placed bets on a real rat race and saw the "Ugliest Man on Campus" crowned last night.

The occasion was the annual University Club Spring Carnival. Winner of the ugly man competition was Oscar B. Eckhoff, senior from Charlotte.

The carnival featured games of skill, ranging from "throwing" games to "chipping" a golf ball. In most cases the prizes were certificates for beer at a downtown saloon.

Mail Courses Being Offered This Summer

Correspondence courses, with degree and quality point credit, are being offered to students not desiring to attend summer school.

According to Miss Mary E. Henry, head of the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction, the University offers more than 100 correspondence courses for degree and quality point credit. Any student may enroll, providing he is not attending regular university classes. Enrollment should be made at the time the student wishes to begin work on the courses.

The assignments will be sent the student at his convenience providing that there are no more than four during a seven-day period. Students may not complete the work in less than seven weeks nor more than 13 months. "Two courses may be taken at one time," according to Miss Henry.

Students interrupting their education to enter the armed forces may take correspondence courses to acquire college credit. They may earn as many as 30 hours of credit following this program.

For complete information regarding correspondence courses contact the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction in Abernethy Hall. Enrollment for courses this summer will begin on May 23, after classes are completed.

The Library's Friends Elect 3 New Officers

The Friends of the Library elected three new officers at the annual business meeting of the organization held at the Carolina Inn Friday.

Chosen were George M. Stephens, Asheville, chairman; Miss Cornelia S. Love, Chapel Hill, vice-chairman; Dr. Andrew H. Horn, Chapel Hill, secretary.

Stephens replaced Dr. L. R. Wilson, who had asked that he not be reelected. Dr. Wilson, for University Librarian, had been chairman of the group for the past 10 years and had seen the membership grow from 135 to 435.

Miss Love replaced Collier Cobb Jr. of Chapel Hill and Dr. Horn, present University Librarian, replaced Charles E. Rush of Chapel Hill, who was University Librarian until he was succeeded last year by Dr. Horn.

Other vice-chairman of the organizatioin who did not come up for reelection this year are Jonathan Daniels of Raleigh, and Archibald Henderson of Chapel Hill. Officers who were reelected were John Sprunt Hill, Durham, honorary chairman; Mrs. Lyman Cotten, Chapel Hill, honorary secretary; Claude E. Teague, Chapel Hill, treasurer; and C. P. Spruill Jr., Chapel Hill, member of the executive committee.

Life memberships in the Friends of the Library were voted to Collier Cobb Jr., and Lindsay C. Warren, former Comptroller General of the United States for 14 years and now a resident of Washington, D. C. Persons who contribute $1,000 in cash or materials to the library are made life members.

Dr. Horn announced that gifts from members of the Friends totaled during the past year; 13,780 books, 44 prints and pictures, 11 broadsides, 22 single autographed letters and documents, and five large collections of manuscripts.

MET BARITONE McFERRIN
. . . to give final Tuesday concert tonight

Metropolitan Opera's McFerrin Sings At 8

Robert McFerrin, American baritone, will give the final concert of the Tuesday Evening Series in Hill Hall tonight at 8 p.m.

The Graham Memorial Student Entertainment Program will co-sponsor the event, along with the Tuesday concert series, given by the Music Dept. throughout the year.

McFerrin, who made his debut with the Metropolitan Opera in January as the second Negro to appear there during its 70-year history, will present selections from such composers as Handel, Brahms, Verdi, Ravel, J. J. Niles and Purcoll, as well as Negro spirituals.

A native of Marianna, Ark., McFerrin has had a varied career, singing with the New England Opera Co., appearing in Tanglewood operatic productions directed by Boris Goldovsky, with the National Opera Company in Washington.

In St. Louis, where he attended high school, the young baritone was a soloist with the Temple Israel Choir, and later in New York, song in the St. Mark's Methodist Church Choir. In addition to concertizing in this country, he spent over three years singing with the special service section of the Air Force in Manila and Japan.

He studied under scholarships at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., and the Chicago School of Music, and was accepted by the Metropolitan's Kathryn Long School for special training.

Before winning the 1953 Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air, McFerrin had appeared on Broadway in the revival of "The Green Pastures" and in the chorus of Kurt Weill's "Lost in the Stars."

In his Metropolitan debut, McFerrin sang the role of Amonasro in Verdi's Aida.

'55 Graduates Scheduled For Meet Thursday

A meeting of all candidates for degrees in the coming commencement will be held Thursday at 4:14 p.m. in Memorial Hall, according to an announcement made yesterday by Professor J. C. Lyons, faculty commencement marshal.

Professor Lyons said that all phases of the graduation ceremonies will be explained to the candidates, such as how to wear caps and gowns and all details concerning assembling for baccalaureate and commencement services. He added that all questions will be answered.

Professor Lyons said that it is very important that all candidates attend the meeting. He asked that any candidates unable to attend the meeting get the information from someone who attended.

Kuralt Gets Award

Competition for the annual Willie P. Mangum oratorical medal was held last night in Di Hall. Charles Kuralt was the winner with a speech entitled "The Sonic Solution." Rollie Tillman placed second with a speech entitled "The Threatening Trend."

Executive Trustee Board Votes To Raise Tuition For Out-Of-State Students

RALEIGH, May 16. (AP)—The Executive Committee of the University of North Carolina Board of Trustees was told today that applications from five Negroes to enter the University as undergraduates have recently been rejected.

Gordon Gray, president of the Consolidated University, revealed the information in a brief report. He said the applications were rejected in accordance with trustee policy that Negro students are eligible for admission only to graduate and professional schools, and then only when similar facilities are not available in the state for the Negro race.

The applications were from Negroes living in North Carolina, and all were for admission at the University at Chapel Hill.

The Executive Committe voted to recommend to the full Board of Trustes that it raise University tuition for non-resident students in line with recommendations of the General Assembly's Joint Appropriations subcommittee. The Legislature embodied the subcommittee's report in the state budget for the next biennium.

The trustees also went along with the subcommittee action in voting to exempt from the tuition raise all non-resident students whose education is being subsidized by scholarships, financial awards and grants-in-aid.

The full board will meet to act on the recommendation and other matters on May 23. If it is approved, the tuition action will increase non-resident charges from $360 to $500 per year.

The Executive Committee also approved (1) The establishment and charter of a pulp and paper foundation at North Carolina State College, and (2) The consolidation of the Dept. of Chemical Engineering and the Dept. of Diesel and Internal Combustion Engineering at State College.

Hudson Asks For Opinions For Survey On New Dorms

A survey of student opinion concerning new dormitories will be presented to the administration Committee on Student Affairs Thursday.

The new residences will be built if a bill, authorizing the Board of Trustees to issue revenue bonds, is passed by the General Assembly. Action on the bill is expected this week.

Jack Hudson, chairman of the Interdormitory Council's Dorm Improvements Committee and member of the student Legislature, asked yesterday that students inform him of their opinions on the dorms and the facilities which would be built with the money from the bond issue so that he will be able to present the students' opinions to the committee on Thursday. He asked that students contact him in 212 Alexander, at the IDC office or send their ideas to The Daily Tar Heel.

Hudson said J. S. Bennett, director of operations for the University, has listed four possibilities for the dorms which could be built with the money. The first, according to Hudson, would be a men's dorm in the area of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital. Hudson said such a dorm would be for medical, dental and public health students and would drain them from the other dorm districts. He added that it would possibly take the medical students out of Whitehead.

The second possibility mentioned by Bennett, according to Hudson, would be another large men's dorm like Cobb. He said that such a dorm would be located near Cobb. Hudson added that a new dorm of this type possibly would be partitioned off like Old East and Old West.

A women's dorm to be built in the area between McIver and Alderman was the third possibility mentioned by Bennett, according to Hudson.

A women's dorm in Battle Park was the fourth possibility for the new dorm, according to Hudson.

Hudson said if a women's dorm were built, Carr and Smith would probably be turned back to men's dorms.

Hudson also asked that students give him their opinions on the inside facilities which the new dorms would have. Among the possibilities he mentioned were soundproof rooms, floors made of rubber asphalt tile and fluorescent lighting.

He asked that students inform him of their ideas concerning dimensions and facilities in social and study rooms for the dorms. He also asked for student opinion on the possibility of having a faculty apartment included if the dorm were one similar to Cobb. He said that such an apartment would house one faculty couple. Hudson said such a setup exists at State College in Raleigh and added that, according to Dean of Student Affairs there, they have the best government and living conditions on campus.

Among other possibilities mentioned by Hudson were dressers built into the walls of the room and towel racks in the rooms.

He asked that students inform him of their opinions on these suggestions and any ideas which they have so that he may present them to the committee on Thursday.

Credit Courses In TV Slated For Chapel Hill

Credit courses in educational television have been planned for all three branches of the Consolidated University, according to Robert Schenkkan, director of WUNC-TV operations here.

Schenkken's statement yesterday came on the heels of an announcement from Raleigh that State College WUNC-TV will offer college credit courses in solid geometry and home floriculture next month.

Asked whether the new courses had anything to do with a recent wave of resignations at WUNC-TV, Director Schenkkan said "our budget was drastically cut. Someone was bound to get hurt; someone to get sore. It could not be helped. We are doing our best."

State College's two courses will carry two semester hours' credit each for televiewers and will be televised from 7 to 7:30 p.m. Both programs will originate from Raleigh.

Schenkkan said two programs, as yet unnamed, are being planned for Chapel Hill. The shows are scheduled to start about June 6.

Several Chapel Hill educational television staffers have left the operations in recent weeks. The General Assembly's budget cut and unfulfilled promises were mentioned as reasons or quitting.

Schenkkan said he didn't know whether television courses would give Carolina students academic credit.

Church Group Votes For Admitting Negroes

A resolution affirming the "belief that the applications of Negro students for admission to UNC should be considered equally with other applications, and dealt with on the basis of qualification, regardless of race" has been accepted by a majority vote at the meeting of the Westminster Fellowship.

The resolution, which was proposed by the Christian Action Commission of the Fellowship, also stated the group's belief "that every effort should be made to make all students feel accepted in this academic community, and that this Westminster Fellowship is open to all students who through worship, study and action would here seek to come to a deeper faith in Jesus Christ our Lord and would find the relevance of the Christian faith for their lives."

According to a statement made by Miss Martha Cannon, chairman of the Christian Action Commission, the resolution specifically concerned the recent refusal of undergraduate admission to the three Negro high school students to UNC.

According to the group's resolution, the Presbyterian Church went on record as affirming that segregation of the races is not in harmony with Christian principles and ethics in 1954.

Yacks Slated To Be Issued This Week

The 1955 Yackety Yacks will be given out down the stairs in back of Graham Memorial through the window of the Rendezvous Room tomorrow from 1 until 6 p.m. and on Thursday from 1 until 6 p.m. and from 7 to 9 p.m.

Students who have attended only one semester of school this year must pay $2.50 to receive a Yack.

Editors of the book announced yesterday that Yacks will be issued only on the days indicated and have requested that students come early to avoid confusion.

Honorary Presents Its Awards

The Order of the Grail, an organization which was established to help better the relations between fraternity and non-fratrenity men, last night announced winners of its annual awards.

According to Delegata Ed McCurry, these awards are given to the students, faculty or administrative member of the University who has given a service or a contribution to the campus or the welfare of the student body. This is done to recognize the high quality of leadership or scholarship or some kind of individual merit.

The recipients of this years awards are Hoyle L. Robinson, Elerbe, the award for the freshman self-help student with the highest scholastic average; Cecil E. Cowan, Morgantown, the award for the senior self-help student with the highest scholastic average; Charles Yarborough, Louisburg, the senior most active in student government with the highest scholastic average, and Paul Likins, Elkhart, Ind., the senior most active in athletics with the highest scholastic average.

Yarborough was president of his sophomore and senior class. He served in the student Legislature on the High School Honor System Committee. He was also elected to membership in the Order of the Old Well, the Order of the Golden Fleece and Phi Beta Kappa.

Likins, one of the co-captains of this year's basketball team, was also elected to membership in the Order of the Old Well, the Order of the Golden Fleece and Phi Beta Kappa. He served as president of Phi Beta Kappa this year. Likins has also been a member of the Monogram Club for four years. The awards were presented in the Grail Room at 6:30 last night.

The Grail was established as a service organization, and each year they sell senior invitations and class rings. With the proceeds of these sales they award scholorships each year to students in financial need.

A Shibboleth Of The Silent Ones

"In college, you should learn to stand up and be counted."

Southern editor Ralph McGill told Mercer University students this recently, and we cite the same sage advice to reticent student leaders on the Carolina campus.

The current crop of campus leaders, with few notable exceptions, seem to pussy-foot their way around issues. They refuse to take stands on most controversial issues.

When presidential candidates Manning Muntzing, Ed McCurry, and Don Fowler were running, all sidestepped the issue of implementing the Supreme Court's segregation decree. President Fowler is still silent on the subject.

The most popular shibboleth floating from student leader's lips nowadays is something to the effect that the powers in the South Building are out to wreck their government. And even when they babble this charge, no evidence is given to back it up. In short, even when they half-heartedly take a stand, students are cautious about being specific.

No one's ever been booted from the University for speaking his mind, and lately hardly anyone has been speaking his mind—or speaking for that matter.

Mr. Lippman & Public Opinion

We would have to pile Pelion on Ossa and climb on top to face that great pundit, Walter Lippman, without quaking knees. But minus those vast mountains and plus a bad case of the trembles we want to point out what seems an inconsistency in a recent Lippmann "Today And Tomorrow" column.

In The Public Philosophy, an analysis of the "malady in the western democracies" which some accepted as gospel and others denounced as baloney, Mr. Lippmann leveled serious charges at the force of public opinion, the force Thomas Jefferson saw as "the greatest and soundest on the face of the earth." "Public opinion," charged Mr. Lippmann, "has often been tragically wrong at the critical junctures" and has led to a derangement of the governing power in the democracies.

Now, hardly a month after the stir created by his book, Mr. Lippmann, commenting on the proposed meeting at the summit, gives credit for the forthcoming meeting to public opinion, and is not pessimistic himself about possible consequences. He writes:

> The foreign ministers and the diplomats tend by their profesional habits to think of peace as an edifice which has to be built brick by brick, agreement by agreement . . . The popular view, which is now in the ascendant, is that the edifice will never be built at all unless the ground on which it is to stand is cleared by a general agreement which reduces radically the dangers of war.

We disagree with Mr. Lippmann if he thinks public opinion is tragically wrong at this "critical juncture." A better thought on our part is this: Mr. Lippmann knows, as Emerson said, that "a foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little men," has renewed his faith in public opinion and come back to Jefferson where he belongs anyway.

Something To Keep Despite The Bombs

J. A. C. Dunn

A YEARBOOK IS a very difficult publication to put out. We know. We once edited one ourself, and the whole job is more headache than pleasure. the end result is often well worth the efort expended, and the 1955 Yackety Yack, a sneak preview /perusal of which occupied most of last Sunday afternoon for us, falls right at the top of this category. In fact it falls higher. It is more than well worth the effort.

THE FRUSTRATING THING about yearbooks is that whether or not the book is good depends not on the content, since the content of all yearbooks is approximately the same, but on the standard of editing, layout, writing, etc. This puts the editor in the tense position of having to do an excellent, outstanding job with old hat material.

CO-EDITORS Jackie Park and Cornell Wright must have been uncomfortably tense, because their Yackety Yack is one of the best yearbooks we have ever seen anywhere. If Cornel Wright doesn't eventually go to Life magazine and tell them rather sternly that what they need is pictures by Cornell Wright, we are personally going to look Cornell up and kick him. We don't know how many pictures there are in the Yack, and we haven't half the time it would take to count them, but thre is not one single bad photograph in the whole book; in fact, a large percentage of the pictures are truly excellent, and some of them are downright beautiful. That's a pretty good record for a 432-page book. That standard of photography easily measures up to such pinnacles of photography as Life's pictorial yearbook of the nation, or U. S. Camera.

EXCEPT FOR ONE section, the writing in the Yack is good and adequate. It need not be more, since few people read the explanatory paragraphs. Let us say that those who do read the paragraphs will have no cause for complaint.

We said "with the exception of one section." For us, the best part of the whole book was a series of eight "Moods" — Stillness, Joy, Lonelines, Hope, Anxiety, Meditation, Companionship, and Fulfillment. These little pieces, simple short paragraphs written by Jackie Park and accompanied by some of Cornell Wright's most striking photography in a rather arresting layout motif on black pages, characterizes Carolina and Carolina students in a way we have never really seen before.

In addition to being difficult to put out and frustrating, most yearbooks are also rather unemotional. They just get the recording down on paper with a little shmaltz here and there and leave it at that. But in the Moods Jackie Park's writing and Cornell wright's photography put some feeling into the Yack. If all the rest of the book was worthless (which it most certainly is not), we would keep the Yack for those Moods alone. We can see people in later years, looking back through the '55 Yack, chattering over this section, laughing over that one — "He was the boy who..." "I remember that guy ..." "We used to go there and ..." "Oh, yes, and this girl...."

BUT WHEN they come to the Moods, there will be a silence, and the effort to recapturey reconstructing will be abandoned: the Moods will take over and reconstruct of their own accord without any of the noisy, false tongue wagging that goes along with pointing out people in the background of a group photograph.

Sarcastic Sextet On 'Mau Mau State'

Editors:

High congratulations to Louis and Ed, our stout old adversaries and Liberalites, on their being chosen by us as first exchange students to Mau Mau State College, M. M. State exchange scholarships are among the fabulous privileges this, or any, university has to offer its students. We can say that from our own angle, and in praise of the men who worked up the M. M. S. exchange idea and moved into a pioneering role in student exchange program.

The prospect that Mau Mau State may make the keepers of its gates blind to the false and un-Christian criteria of color and race is, in its best sense, the prospect for new optimism.

There is much, we are sure, to be said from the M. M. S. angle. The revival of the idea of Black Superiority spermed by the newly-won Supreme Court decision and its pending part in the Liberal Society is a force to be handled with lace gloves. The Liberal program and ideas which have gained favor (perhaps forced) among our darker brethren will now be in the open market for closer scrutiny.

We need diplomats, student and otherwise, to keep those Liberal ideas purchasable in the eyes of the newly equalized brethren. We hope Louis and Ed will do their parts!

High congratulations again, comrades. You have nothing to lose but your false and un-Christian criteria of color!

Leave Race Issue To Time, Says Student

Editors:

Neither do I class myself with neo-Nazis, who believe in the ethnic superiority of Caucasians, nor with the rabble-rousing radicals who dominated the Reconstruction governments of Johnson and Grant. This is quite an overwhelming statement for a person to make these days because it seems imperative that one who takes issue with the sociological problems of the abolition of Jim Crow must either climb the heights of pure idealism or walk in the trivial pathways of bigotry. I see myself as a member of a University's proletariat who in general has a quasi- "I don't give a damn what The DTH's editorial staff says about idyllic idealism," but who trods the lanes of sublime ignorance as to the protentous problems facing the thinking portion of this student body, who to me, a member of the illiterate masses, should have been surnamed in a "pseudo - everything" manner, as Voltaire, Locke, Bentham, Owen, Wilberforce, etc.

Somewhere, in an infinitesimal moment of erudition when the fogs of ignorance were lifted from my simian brow, I remember reading in one of Shakespeare's plays, possibly Hamlet, although I'll leave that up to the scholars, that nothing is either true or false but thinking makes it so. Now I don't mean to insinuate that there are thinkers in the student body — for this is Ultima Thule of absurdity — but the fact that there are those who try to think is perhaps justification enough for the application of the Prince of Denmark's little piece of wisdom.

Already I see myself being compared to that idiot Grimes. This is not the case. I wish to make a modest proposal (not in Swift's manner: chocolate causes acne), that all our headstrong liberals on The DTH staff leave the entire issue of race, class consciousness, ethnic superiority, and interracial marriages (this last issue will probably be the next editorial campaign undertaken by the Daily Disappointment) to the only panacea there is — Time.

Negroes Should Attend The University; Reader

Editors:

Thursday morning as I cast a glance at the front page of The Daily Tar Heel I noticed that three students from Durham had been refused entrance to Carolina because of their race. Indeed, the Admissions Office had no choice, because the policy of exclusion of Negroes from the undergraduate schools here is one formulated by our Board of Trustees.

Now I, as a Christian student (which I fancy myself to be), am not able to look at this with approval, because I believe that God creates and has created everyone, and that when He made us He made us equal.

Since this policy of discrimination is based ultimately on the belief that Negroes are on a lower level than that of whites. I intend to do all that I can to make it possible for Negroes to attend the same university that I do. Perhaps the efforts of all those of like mind will help make America (and more especially the South) really become a land of freedom and equality.

More Student Sarcasm On A Serious Problem

Editors:

After reading the last few issues of The Daily Tar Heel, we have become thoroughly convinced that the editors are approaching the segregation problem with open minds and sympathetic hearts. We should like to express our whole-hearthed support of the editors and the 99 per cent of the students here at UNC who are in favor of immediate integration. We sincerely feel we have embodied their thoughts on the subject in the five point program below, which if put into practice, should obtain the desired results in no time at all. Here it is:

1. Shut Grimes up. Grimes and his kind are always expressing their own opinions. This hurts. It's too inconsiderate of him not to cease.

2. The Carolina Forum should continue in its ancient liberal traditions by inviting outstanding Negro leaders to speak on campus. For a starter, we suggest Father Divine and his white wife be asked to speak on something like, "How an Interracial Marriage Can Blossom in a Religious Atmosphere," or perhaps, "How to Curse the New Jersey Turnpike." What with all his many converts here at UNC, the Heavenly Father ought to find the visit profitable, and undoubtedly the Forum will appreciate having a full house for a change.

3. As a gesture of goodwill, petitions should be circulated through Victory Village, men's and women's dorms, fraternities, and sororities demanding that all available residences be opened to entering Negro students and that equal space and privileges be assured them. This may entail some doubling up, but the joy of sharing will more than overcome any inconvenience. In view of the unprecedented success of the recent integration petition, these petitions on housing should prove to be most effective.

4. In order that the insignificant little kernel of students, not yet thoroughly indoctrinated as to the benefits of immediate integration, may be enlightened, we suggest that all faculty members of doubtful allegiance to the cause be asked to resign, and Negro professors be substituted in their places.

5. If all else fails, our illustrious thirteen student leaders should organize a march on South Building and demand the immediate end of segregation at UNC.

We are certain that you will recognize the vast amount of sober reflection which this program contains. No little credit is due to your inspiring editorials.

You will also be pleased to know that we are devoting this week to formulating a plan for an interracial date bureau in preparation for the fall festivities. As soon as it materializes, further correspondence will be forthcoming.

From A Cow College To Country Club

WE'LL HEAR no more cracks about that "country club" President Gordon Gray is running over at Chapel Hill.

We'll hear no more of rowdy fraternity parties, gay weekends at the beach and the almost complete lack of book work handled by the "Carolina gentleman."

Actually, it seems that it's those State College fellows who are living high on the hog these days — not the po' boys in white bucks on The Hill.

The index to success these days appears to be the automobile. And from the Visting Committee's report on the Consolidated University, we've culled a few pertinent facts:

There are 1,932 student-owned autos at Raleigh, 1,492 at Chapel Hill. At State College 42.8 per cent of freshmen and sophomores have automobiles; at Chapel Hill only 17.8 per cent.

After all those embarrassing years as "Cow College," the men of N. C. State may yet inherit the "country club" name tag.

After 10 Years

It is 10 years since Franklin D. Roosevelt died.

He had his moments of error. He was sometimes overconfident. Cirsumstances compelled him to look at the future out of the confusion of an armed struggle. He never had to face the full implications of the atomic age. Today's schoolboy could tell Mr. Roosevelt things he did not know.

Nevertheless the influence of this man persists. Let anyone who finds himself within sight of mid-Manhattan's East river skyline lift up his eyes: There, against the light, are bulidings constructed out of the faith for which Mr. Roosevelt in his high moments eloquently spoke. There stands the visible United Nations; imperfect, echoing discords as well as harmonies, providing a forum for the world's disputes, carrying on almost in silence a great struggle against hunger and disease. There it stands, and he helped build it. This is his monument, quite as much as that humble slab at Hyde Park where many pilgrims pause, day in and day out, to do him honor. — N. Y. Times.

Quote Unquote: Theoretical Life

Every teacher soon has forced upon his attention a certain anthropological fact. That afact is that there is a deeply rooted distinction between two sorts of student . . . The one sort of man is born for the theoretic life, and is capable of pressing forward indefinitely into its subtleties and specialties . . . The other class of men may be intelligent, but they are not theoretical, and their interest in most subjects reaches its saturation point when the broader results and the most general laws have been reached.—William James

Little-Four Meeting

Charlie Wolf & Evidence

Editors:

I noticed with mild interest that The Daily Tar Heel has seen fit to make an editorial example of my remark before the Student Party that "student needs are not being met," and that "... the Dean of Student Affairs Office is against student government." The DTH felt that I should not have made the remark without "evidence." It was of less concern to that I had been quoted completely out of context, with a near-total distortion of meaning.

Now, Mr. Editors, if I must prove every remark I make before a private group to the satisfaction of The Daily Tar Heel, things have come to a pretty pass.

It is not surprising that the editors of The DTH are unaware of student needs not being met. Had the remark been made for their benefit, undoubtedly more explanation would have been necessary. On the other hand, the Student Party is a more informed group, one familiar with student problems and conscious of student needs, and it is often not necessary to say everything when you say anything to them.

And while holding forth, I might suggest that as soon as The DTH has exhausted their supply of negative criticisms of sudent government, they might undertake an occasional constructive comment, if the effort is not overly taxing. With privilege comes responsibility.

Charlie Wolf

(Student Partyite Wolf's claim that he was quoted out of context does not stand up factually—because he has not seen fit to give the evidence. In this case, the evidence would be exactly what he did say, and Wolf has told the editors that he does not care to tell them exactly what he did say. Thus, until presented with the evidence, we stand behind our reporter, who has given evidence to back up his story.

(As for the remarks being made before a "private group," as Wolf put it, it is a matter of plain fact that Student Party meetings are public; anyone can attend.

Since Wolf does not back up his serious charge that "the Dean of Student Affairs Office is against student government," we say—to use an old American phrase—put up or shut up.—Editors.)

A Mayor's Race & The GOP

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON—President Eisenhower's political advisors will be staying up late next Tuesday to get the returns from the Republican mayoralty primary in Philadelphia. The reason is that they have stuck their necks out in that contest, and it is important to them to have their man win.

Pennsylvania is one of the few spots in which Eisenhower Republicans have moved to take control of the party with the advice and consent of the National Committee and the White House. It still sounds odd to old-timers to hear that Republicans are worried about Pennsylvania but strange things have been happening in that third largest state of the union, so rich in national convention delegates and electoral votes.

The Democratic upswing began in Philadelphia in 1951 when young reformers Joseph S. Clark Jr. and Richardson Dilworth led a successful assault upon City Hall, long held by a Republican machine scarcely less malodorous than Boss Tweed's Tammany. Clark was elected mayor; Dilworth, district attorney.

When the votes were counted in November, 1952, it was discovered that while Eisenhower was winning in a landslide and carried Pennsylvania, he lost Philadelphia by 155,000 votes. The midterm election surprise was George Leader who became the state's first Democratic governor since the early depression years.

Dilworth now is unopposed in the Democratic mayoralty primary. Mayor Clark hopes to move to Washington by defeating the veteran Senator James Duff next year. Objective observers give both Democrats grounds for optimism about their chances.

Against this backdrop, Eisenhower Republicans decided they must act as if the state were to be saved for Duff and Eisenhower. Control of Philadelphia carries with it the important items of patronage and control of the election machinery. It would also be a happy psychological offset to the recent Democratic trend.

The Republican mayoral candidate is W. Thacher Longstreth, a 34-year old advertising executive who fits a presently popular pattern. That is, he is young, good-looking, and touched but not too deeply with reform and liberalism. And he has a lovely wife and four children. Both Mr. and Mrs. Longstreth were active in Citizens for Eisenhower in 1952.

How Would YOU Answer This Question?

Is It True That One Must "Die To Collect" On Life Insurance?

The correct answer—"No." Life insurance is living insurance. After fulfilling its need for protection of loved ones, the man who has saved through life insurance, may use the accumulated cash values, under the annuity principle, for a life income for himself. Northwestern Mutual policyholders are guaranteed this by contract.

ACC Champs Play In Exhibition Saturday

The finalists in today's ACC tennis championships will play an exhibition match with "Bitsy" Grant, former UNC great, here Saturday afternoon. The singles champ, Tommy Bradford, will meet Grant in a singles match starting at 2:30, followed by Herbe Browne and Grant against Payne and Green, ACC doubles finalists.

Tom Bradford, playing sharp tennis yesterday, became the first ACC singles champion by defeating his teamate, Herb Browne, in the finals of the second annual ACC tournament, the first having been rained out. This afternoon, the two will get together to finish the finals in the doubles against Bobby Payne and Pete Green, also of Carolina.

Although Browne had been seeded number three by the ACC tennis coaches, Coach Kenfield of the Tar Heels had picked Bradford as the man to watch in the tournament. It took him a while to get started, but after he was underway, there was nothing to stop the diminutive lefthander from Washington, D. C.

After being down, 1-5, in the first set, Bradford won two games before Browne could take the set; and then Bradford methodically went to work with his placements and passing shots and won the second set 6-0, and the match, 3-6, 6-0, 7-5, 6 4.

The doubles match for the ACC championship, at 7:25 p.m., with the score at 6-6 in the forth set, was postponed and will be finished this afternoon at 2:30. Green and Payne will be going in with a 2-1 edge in sets, having lost the first to Browne and Bradford, 6-8 and winning the next two, 7-5, 6-3.

This tournament marks the close of conference competition for the Tar Heels.

Dr. Henry Clark of the University Medical School is shown presenting the Atlantic Coast Conference singles trophies to the winner and runner-up, Tommy Bradford and Herbe Browne of Carolina. Bradford defeated Browne for the singles championship yesterday afternoon after winning his way through a tough bracket. On his way to the finals, Bradforddefeate d first-seeded Buzzy Hettleman of Duke.

Krepp, Roth Go For Marks Today

Charlie Krepp and freshman Bill Roth will make an attack on the record books this afternoon in the Indoor Pool.

Krepp, who set new American records in the 500 yard and 500 meter backstroke recently, will be making his second try for new American 400 meter and 440 yard backstroke records. Roth will try to set a new University freshman record for the 100 yard freestyle.

Krepp failed in his first try for the 400 and 440 records, missing the marks by six-tenths and seven-tenths of a second, respectively.

Phil Drake, who teamed with Krepp to set four new American marks earlier this month and who also failed in his attempt at 400 and 440 breaststroke marks, will not swin for the records this afternoon due to an infected ear.

Ranson Calls Tracksters To Meet or Pictures

Coach Dale Ranson requests that all Varsity and freshman track men report, in uniform, to Fetzer Field at 4:00 today for a Yack picture. The picture will be taken at 4:30, but all players are requested to report early.

Raugh, Maultsby Among ACC,s Tops

GREENSBORO, May 16 (AP) — With only three regularly-scheduled games and Wake Forest's NCAA tourney participation remaining before the 1955 Atlantic Coast conference baseball season is completed, Deacon mound ace Lowell (Lefty) Davis is all but crowned as the ACC's pitching champion of the season.

Davis, according to ACC Service Bureau figures through last Saturday's games, has an unblemished 8-0 won-lost record. Only way he can lose the pitching title is to be the loser in a couple of the NCAA play-off games while teammate Buck Fichter, tied with Duke's Harleigh Fatzinger for second, wins a couple or three.

Fichter, who pitched the title-winning Wake Forest victory over Virginia Saturday, and Fatizinger each have 5-1 records to place second behind Davis. Only one other ACC Hurler, N. C. State's Sam Welch, is unbeaten, but his 3-0 mark is short of the minimum of five decisions required to rank among the leaders.

Davis, who has a 3.26 earned run average, also leads the conference in strikeouts with 67 and has the best control record, passing only 20 men in 77 innings of work.

Fatzinger's final earned run average of 1.50 is best in the league, surpassing the 2.57 of Carolina's Tom Mautsby, who has won four and lost five.

Tonight at a banquet at the Monogram Club the Di Senate and the Phi Assembly will present their annual Di-Phi Award to Dr. Thomas Ruffin of Chapel Hill for "outstanding service to the University, state and nation."

Dr. Ruffin will be the seventh recipient of the award, which is given annually to a member of either society who has distinguished himself through service. Previous recipients have been Dr. Frank Graham, John Motley Morehead, Albert Coates, Archibald Henderson, John J. Parker and Lindsay C. Warren.

Dr. Ruffin was born in 1873 in Graham. He was a student at the University from 1891 until 1893. He received his LL.M. from Georgetown University in 1897, and his D.C.L. from Columbia University in 1900. While a student here, he was a member of the Di.

In 1900, when former judge James Cameron MacRae succeeded the Hon. John Manning as the Dean of the Law School, Dr. Ruffin returned to the University as an associate professor of law, in which capacity he served until 1904. At that time he was raised to the status of a full professor. The following year he assumed a private law practice in Charlotte, but returned to the University in 1907 to serve UNC and the state for a number of years.

From 1918 until 1920, Dr. Ruffin was a major in the Judge Advocate-General's department of the army, serving as the chairman of the Board of Contracts and Adjustments with the ramy in Paris.

During his career in the law, he was a member of the North Carolina Bar Asso., the Distict of Columbia Bar Asso., nad the American Bar Asso.

The Di-Phi Award is being presented to Dr. Ruffin "for past excellence of service to the University, state and nation, through a combination of talents.

"Dr. Ruffin served not only before the bar, which in his capacity is outstanding in itself, but he also shared his knoweldge and talents with many of our present leaders in the training of these present leaders by instilling in them a 'love of virtue and science' as well as a deep respect for the law," said Bev Webb, president of the Di. yesterday.

The banquet will be presided over by Frank Warren Jr., Speaker the award will be made by President Webb.

Experimental Plays Set Here

Resolution For Admitting Negroes Said Scheduled For Legislature Tomorrow

From all indications, a resolution calling for admission of Negro undergraduate students to the University will be introduced at tomorrow night's student Legislature meeting.

Details of the resolution, however, were unknown yesterday.

According to one source, the resolution will be introduced by Jim Holmes, Student Party.

Upon being questioned, Holmes did not deny he would introduce the bill. But he said he wasn't "sure" who would bring the bill before student lawmakers.

Holmes refused to identify the resolution's author. He said the author didn't want to reveal himself as of yesterday.

Holmes did say the alleged resolution was the result of "several people's " opinions, and that it was "primarily" the work of Student Party legislators.

Three Negroes, all graduating seniors from a Durham high school, have applied for undergraduate admission to the University. They, like all other Negroes applying as undergraduates, have been turned down by the University Admissions Office. Consolidated University President Gordon Gray this week told the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees the Negroes' applications have been rejected.

Trustee policy says Negroes may be admitted to UNC graduate and/or professional schools only when such courses are not available to state-supported Negro schools.

The three students' attorney, C. O. Pearson of Durham, said he will take his case to the trustees if the students are refused admission by the Admissions Office and by Gray. If the trustees refuse, Pearson said, he will take his case to federal court. Pearson is also legal representative for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

The full Board of Trustees will meet May 23.

Freshman Camp Plans Announced By Hester

Plans have been announced for next fall's Freshman Camp program, and its director said yesterday he hopes for the best camp since the program's beginning nine years ago.

Director Scotty Hester yesterday released the names of the camp's staff. Counselors are Francis Porcher, Bill Zickgraf, Dan Southerland, Jeff Corbin, Gerry Bourdreau, John Kerr,

Snyder Pate, Tom Davis, Bob Leonard, Sandy Moffett, Gus Grant, Stew Colson, Roger Stowe, Bill Tullock, Vic Paderic, Dick Taylor, Bobby Newton, Joe Clapp, Mark Cherry, Graham Rights, Bob Hyatt, Doug Cantrell.

Ashby Carper, Ben Craven, Jim Exum, Tank Goins, Bob Harrington, Gerry Mayo, Larry McElroy, Bill Sessoms, Shep Shepherd and Bill Wible.

A majortiy of the counselors, said Director Hester, have helped in Freshman Camp before.

The schedule for next fall, according to Hester's report, includes a meeting of the counselors Saturday afternoon, Sept. 3, so camp can be set in order for the approximately 165 incoming freshmen. The conclave will be held at Camp New Hope.

Sunday, after worship services, a last-minute briefing on the camp's purposes, counselors' duties, hints on leading cabin discussions and "other basic ideas about the camp" will be held, according to Hester.

"The executive committee is highly optimistic about next year's camp and is pleased with the progress made thus far," said Hester. "A lot remains to be done over the summer but next year's camp promises to be one of the best since the Freshman Camp idea was started in 1947."

Committee chairmen for next fall's Freshman Camp, "who from the core of the executive committee," according to Hester are Bob Leonard, planning; Dan Southerland, worship; Joe Clapp, publicity; Mark Cherry, recreation and leadership; Francis Parker, camp arrangements, and Sandy Moffett, music, student night and combo organization.

YMCA Offers Pictures Of Campus Life

Several hundred 8 by 10 glossy prints of Carolina campus scenes will be put on sale at 2 p.m. today in the YMCA information office, according to an announcement made yesterday by Bob Young and Gerry Mayo, past and present YMCA treasurers respectively.

The photographs ,which would ordinarily sell for $1.50 to $2.50 each, will be sold for 25 and 50 cents, according to Young and Mayo. They said the photographs include pictures of clubs, fraternities, action shots on the football field and basketball court, formal dances and leaders of the bands that have played here.

The photographs, according to Young and Mayo, were made mostly during the past year by Cornell Wright, co-editor of the 1955 Yackety Yack. They said that Wright gave the pictures to the

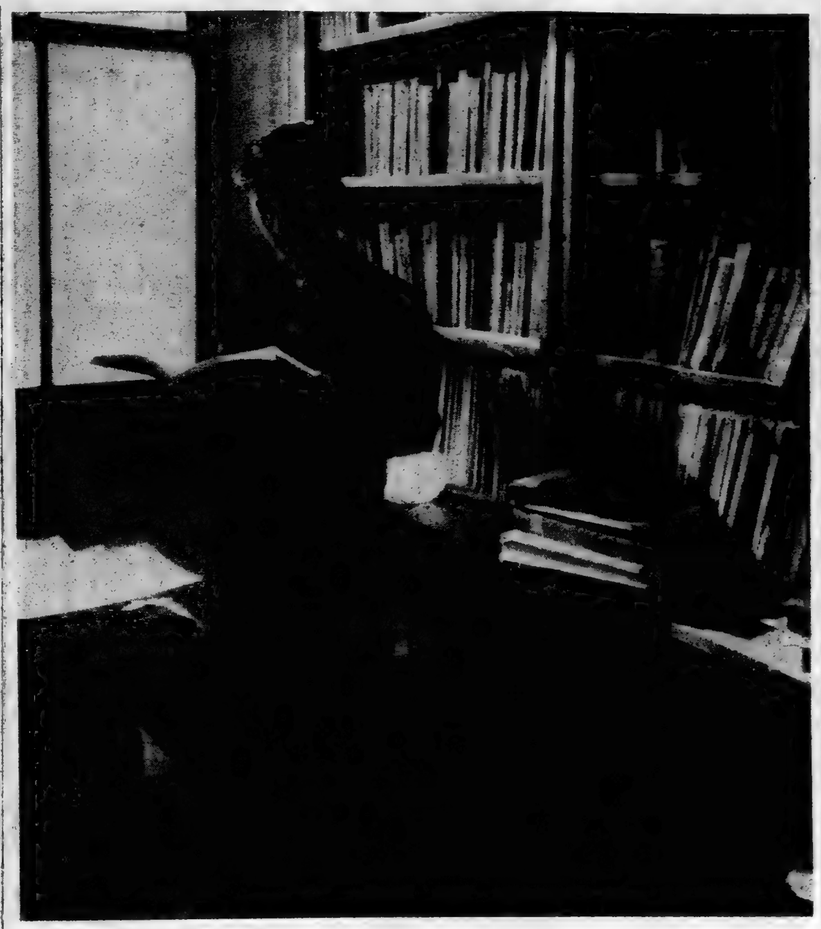
Summer's Activities Planned

All students who will attend summer school this year and who are interested in helping with the planning of extra-curricular activities for the summer sessions have been asked to meet with the Summer Activities Council today at 4 p.m. in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

This council will review the all-campus summer activities of past years, report on activities already underway for this summer and discuss other things which it may be able to plan at today's meeting, according to Bob Young, chairman of Graham Memorial Activities Board. He added the group will also select a temporary chairman to lead in the council's planning between now and the opening of summer school.



Young urged yesterday that all interested students attend the meeting today.

Journalism Society Chartered

Kappa Tau Alpha, national journalism honorary society, has granted a charter to a chapter in the School of Journalism.

Three seniors — Donald E. Bolden, Burlington; Joe C. Doster, Chapel Hill, and Miss Susan Evelyn Dupree, Angier, have been elected to membership, based on an overall B average and inclusion in the academic top 10 percent of the school's enrollment.

Initiation ceremony for the charter members was conducted yesterday by Dean Norval Neil Luxon and Prof. Roy Carter Jr., members of the Ohio State and Minnesota chapters of the group.

ASIAN STUDENT READING BOOKS FROM AMERICA

Book Drive For Asian Students Starts Soon

Books will be gathered next week for a Books for Asian Students drive, which is headed locally by Joel Savell, director of the Wesley Foundation of the University Methodist Church.

The program is sponsored by the Asia Foundation, a private non-profit organization with representatives in 12 Asian countries working with private groups nd organizations in those countries.

Books which are needed fall into the following groups: history, philosophy, psychology, literature, classics,

Art-music, comparative religion, education, anthropology, sociology,

Social welfare, economics, business and law.

Books for the program will go to George Worth, a former Presbyterian student minister here, who is now in Korea. He will distribute them. The books should be ones of current usefulness, according to a spokesman for the program.

Books sent will serve to help Asian professors and students by supplying current books for study and they will make available to Asian people a fairer presentation of Western thought and life than they have received up to now, according to the spokesman.

The Asia Foundation pays the cost of transportation of the books to Asia. It also arranges through its representatives from distribution of the books.

Among the members of the foundation are Raymond B. Allen, chancellor of the University of California; J. B. Atherton, president of the Hawaiian Telephone Co.; Eric A. Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America; Mrs. Maurice T. Moore, chairman of the foreign division of the YWCA National Board, and Henry M. Wriston, president of Brown University.

Luxon Slated To Talk At History Frat Meet

Dr. Norval N. Luxon, dean of the School of Journalism, will speak on "Newspapers and the Historian" at the annual banquet meeting of the Theta Pi Chapter of Phi Alpha Theta history fraternity. The meeting will be held at Lenoir Hall at 7 p.m. Friady.

One-Acters

The Carolina Playmakers will present three student-written and - directed one-act plays tonight and tomorrow at 7:30 in the Playmakers Theatre.

Admission will be free, said a Playmakers spokesman yesterday, and a discussion is scheduled after each play.

The productions will be The Finer Performance, Johnnie Come Lately and Midland Purple. Authors are Christian Moe, George Brenholtz and Harry Coble.

Ford Is Elected CU Prexy

Larry Ford, sophomore from China Grove, has been chosen as the 1955-56 president of the Consolidated University Student Council by delegates from UNC State College and Woman's College.

Bob Garner, sophomore from Raleigh, was elected secretary of the group, and Luther Hodges Jr., sophomore from Leaksville, was elected chairman of the UNC delegation.

A bill was passed at the meeting to amend the Council's by-laws to add six extra members of the group. According to a spokesman for the group, the added members will be the president of the freshman and sophomore classes from State College, UNC and Woman's College.

The spokesman said the bill will come into effect as soon as it is ratified by the student legislatures of each school.

Another bill passed calls for a dance to be held next September at Woman's College for the new freshman from all three campuses.

In taking office, Ford said, "The council will strive this year to better the relations between the three schools." He added there will be three CU days next year, one at each school.

Ford also said that the council hopes to have a talent show between the three schools and to select another CU queen.

Peel New Business Manager

Bill Bob Peel, rising senior from Williamston, was yesterday appointed Business Manager of The Daily Tar Heel, according to an announcement by Editors Ed Yoder and Louis Kraar.

Peel, who is studying pre-law, replaces Tom Shores.

Miss Carolyn Nelson, rising senior from Pinehurst, was named to the post of Assistant Business Manager. An English major, Miss Nelson has served on the staff for the past year.

Both appointments are subject to Publication Board approval, which is usually a matter of formality. Peel will, however, assume his duties immediately and will carry on business for the news paper throughout the summer.

Treasurers Reminded Of Books' Closing

Student organizations which handle their finances through the Student Activities Fund were yesterday reminded that they must close their books for the fiscal year 1954-55.

Student Activities Auditor Harry Kear said organizations' treasurers should:

(1) Deposit all money on hand, bring duplicate deposit slips to the fund office;

(2) Pay all outstanding bills;

(3) Report all accounts receivable;

(4) Advise fund office of arrangements, if any, to carry on any activity during the summer months.

Annual financial statements, said Kear, will be made on the basis of information on hand at the fund office in Graham Memorial, at the end of the school year this spring.

More Mankind & Less Management

Is a man automatically qualified for a position to which his knowledge of his business lifts him?

Although the business-bent makers of curriculum in the University's Business Administration School seem to indicate that knowing business is enough, others say it is not. Among the dissenters with the business-emphasis doctrine is the Bell Telephone Company.

Recently, Bell Telephone's president, Wilfred D. Gillen, decided that business leadership calls for a knowledge of mankind, as well as skill in business techniques. Picking a handful of employees, Bell's chief put them through a year's course in humanities at the University of Pennsylvania.

Leaving their desks and work benches for a year, the Bell Telephone workers listened to lectures on English, philosophy, history, and other subjects in the field of humane letters. They read as much as an undergraduate in literature and had the world's greatest ideas flashed before them by prominent professors.

The results of this experiment in education were so stimulating that the program has been continued for the last few years. It is highly significant that the Bell Company, in the face of some advice to the contrary, excluded all applied business studies from the curriculum. The company took the position that the object of their experimental program was to broaden a man's vision, not give him specialized training.

The employee-students themselves responded with statements such as this:

> I find myself today taking a much broader view and making much more critical analyses of both on and off-the-job problems. Decisions do not come as spontaneously and more of the opposite viewpoint automatically registers.

The company concluded that "each of the men who attended the course came out of it a better, more understanding human being . . . Attempting to hang a dollar sign on these values at this time would be futile."

Perhaps, now that business has rediscovered the liberal arts, schools of Business Administration such as our own will do likewise. The need for more study of mankind and less of management is greater than ever, particularly in the South. We urge the curriculum-makers to reflect on that. If they do, their inevitable conclusion will be that it's time to return to the field of humanities.

A Double Hatchet For 'Than' & 'The'

"It's a Briticism . . . That's what it is."

With that scoring remark, Editor Weimar Jones of The Franklin Press has launched an editorial crusade against the annoying expression "different . . . than."

We gladly lend our voices to the movement. Sir Walter Raleigh and Sir Francis Drake, we've heard it said, would better understand our brand of speech than the Yankees do; but we're sure "different . . . than" would scratch their sensitive eardrums, British or not.

And while we're at it, we have another semantic intrusion we'd like to see hatcheted. It's the use of the preposition "the" before names of literary works, certain operas, and pieces of music to which it doesn't belong. You ask certain people to read for Classics and they say, "Oh, you read the Oedipus Rex or the Caesar;" or for French and they say, "the Cyrano de Bergerac." Please note what a great difference there is between saying "The Divine Comedy and the Cyrano.

We have an incident which perfectly illustrates the absurdity to which this business can be carried. The Classics Club at Woman's College gave Aeschylus' Agamemnon the other day. Apparently, someone who's addicted to this rasping use of "the" called up the local newspaper. "Hello," she probably said, "we're giving the Agamemnon tomorrow afternoon."

Only it didn't print that way. Here's what readers saw as they scanned: "The Agamemnon Set At W. C. Today." Now Aggie, we'll have you know, was a woman, not an inanimate object. But when you say "the Agamemnon" you're inviting trouble, because it sounds to one unfamiliar with the Greek play titles too much like "The Coliseum" or "The Market Place."

It's an academicism . . . That's what it is.

Mr. Hulot: Buttsprung & Fancy Free

J. A. C. Dunn

"MR. HULOT'S (pronounced 'Ooloh') HOLIDAY," which starts at the Varsity today, is the sort of movie that impresses one in such a way that one can review it three months after having seen it. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Hulot is a French gentleman of modest demeanor, tall, lean person, and unbelievably vague personality. He is fairly wealthy, so he takes his holidays at a seaside resort. He is, at the same time, rather frugal in his tastes, and so he drives what we hope is a car, but which actually looks more like a toy express wagon reinforced with tin cans and driven by a pair of articulated steam-eating egg beaters. He is a self effacing sort of man, and wears clean, but rather worn clothes - baggy at the knees, buttsprung in the seat, frayed at the edges. He also wears sneakers and a floppy cloth sunhat. He looks absolutely ridculous. We laughed at him until we hurt.

IF WE REMEMBER correctly, Mr. Hulot is interested in butterflies and picnics. Butterflies outwit him quite easily, and what to anyone else would be a simple lunch outing, to Mr. Hulot is a living hell somewhat akin to crossing Tibet on foot. He is also attracted to small boats, but while afloat he manages to fold himself up in a collapsible kayak.

To Mr. Hulot, a horse is something akin to a three - headed dragon which pretends to be quite docile and tractable, but which bites back when one isn't looking. The embarrassing thing about horses is that the lady one is trying to impress is perfectly capable of managing such animals, while oneself is able to do nothing but put the halter on the wrong way and get the wrong foot in the wrong stirrip.

MR. HULOT RARELY speaks. In fact, with a few exceptions, he acts the 'entire movie in pantomime. This makes him twice as funny, since he gives the appearance not only of being unable to do anything right, but of being unable to speak as well. The times when Mr. Hulot is tongue-tied with perplexity or embarassment are funnier than the few lines he speaks.

The other people at the seaside resort upon which the vague Hulot plague descends are nonplussed, outraged, terrified, incredulous, bewildered - we could go on quoting Roget all afternoon. While Mr. Hulot is in the throes of being gracious and charming to the elderly couple who never swim and spend most of their time playing cards, he inadvertanly steals the old lady's parasol; and as we recall, that parasol gets mixed up with the horse later on. There is some sort of painfully, impossibly funny business about a parasol and a horse and a long length of rope.

Mr. Hulot bites off more than he can chew even in offering to do such a basically uncomplicated thing as carry a lady's suitcases for her. We think he turns up on the other side of the house, just how we are not sure but we remember that at the end of suitcase sequence we had to go out and get a drink of water to stop laughing — and we spluttered a good deal of water all over the theater lobby, too.

"Mr. Hulot's Holiday" is just the sort of movie to put one in a gay, carefree mood for exams — not to mention a condition of helpless, agonizing laughter. Go and see it. Don't say you haven't got the time: take the time.

'Yeah, It's Really Sad, Isn't It?'

A CLASH OF OPINION:

Incident On A Southern Campus

Harry Golden

(The following article appeared in Congressional Weekly. Mr. Golden is editor of The Carolina Israelite out of Charlotte, one of North Carolina's greatest contributions to personal journalism.—Editors)

There's an old story about the meshullach from New York with long beard and black caftan who was doing a bit of fund-raising in a small town of the deep South. A few of the local kids seemed to be greatly interested and they were following the old gent. Suddenly the meshullach turned on them and said good-naturedly: "What's the matter, you never saw a Yenkee before?"

I though of this story as I read the petition (to uphold racial segregation) that was being distributed on the campus of the University of North Carolina by a Jewish boy from the Bronx, Bennett Michael Bobrow. Bobrows' petition protests against the Supreme Court's decision to eliminate racial segregation in the public schools as an "unconscionable violation of the fundamental American principles of states' rights as guaranteed in the . . . Constitution." The petition adds:

This intolerable and unworkable decision, we believe, is all the more dangerous since it is the first example in our judicial history of completely onesided sociological and psychological theories being substitued for constitutional law hitherto consistently upheld by the very same Supreme Court.

Finally, we trust that you will fulfill the wishes of the overwhelming majority of the people of this state by using every means at your command to preserve, by legal methods, segregation in the grammar and high schools as well as in the undergraduate departments of the state institutions of higher learning in North Carolina.

In a letter to the Daily Tar Heel, official student paper, March 3rd, Bobrow explains his decision to out-Southern the Southerner, as follows: "I don't see why my being from the North should make any difference. Just as there are Southerners who are for and against segregation there are likewise folks up North who favor it and other Yankees who are opposed."

OPPOSITION

As opposed to this "pro-segregation" petition, another Jewish student, Ron Frank Levin, has been active in securing signatures to uphold and implement the Supreme Court decision. What makes it particularly interesting is that Levin is not only a Southern boy but comes from a rural section of the state where Negroes represent a numerical majority and where we invariably find the highly emotional opposition to desegregation. Levin's petition, which he hopes will reach the General Assembly, read in part:

Inasmuch as the recent student petition supporting racial segregation in the public school system has presented a false and incomplete picture of the opinion of the entire student body, and further ,that if this country is to serve as a lesson in freedom and the democratic way of life to the rest of the world, then the University of North Carolina must serve as a similar example to all Americans in supporting the decision of the United States Supreme Court regarding racial segregation therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, students of the University of North Carolina, do hereby petition the Legislature of the State of North Carolina to implement a reasonable plan that will uphold this decision by appropriate legislative action.

INTERESTING DEVELOPMENT

Thus an interesting sociological development in race relations of our country offers a sociological study of attitudes with respect to two Jewish student leaders on a Southern campus. Bobrow attended Bronx High School of Science in New York City, was a member of the Spanish Club and Debating Society there. Levin comes from Williamston, N. C., a rural community in the heart of North Carolina's sweet potato country. A Phi Beta Kappa student, Levin plans to do public relations work after he receives his degree next June. The Bobrow pro-segregation petition has 1050 signatures while the Levin petition now has 850 names. The Williamston youth says he "had hoped to get twice as many names." He claims that his biggest problem is "the unwavering disinterest that keeps many students from signing."

A BROODING FIGURE

Hovering over the efforts of students Bobrow and Levin is the brooding figure of the industrialist John W. Clark of Franklinton, N. C. Mr. Clark is a long-time trustee of the University of North Carolina, and known far and wide as North Carolina's most outspoken critic of what he terms "liberal." Mr. Clark sent a letter to several members of the General Assembly which, according to the Southern School News of March 3, said that Chancellor Carey H. Bostian of the N. C. State College had asked the executive committee of trustees to permit about 30 Negroes to attend a three-week extension course this summer on the State Campus. Said the Clark letter:

This movement to take Negroes in the summer courses at State College is part and parcel of the integration program and is just the opening wedge. Once they get this crowd hanging around the college they expect to bring in the younger generation to the various courses at the college, then call for the admittance of every Negro who wishes to come to the Farm and Home Week . . .

At first they will be put in separate dormitories and then under protest made by subsidized workers will ask to be mixed in the various dormitories with the white farmers. In this way, they hope to bring about complete integration . . .

POSTSCRIPT

A postscript to the letter said, among other things:

Last Sunday Harold Hipp, assistant pastor of the Market Street Methodist Church in Greensboro, had charge of the morning service and put on quite an act. Practically everything he said, word for word, had been stated by the Rosenwald crowd before. Among other things he said that it was anarchy to oppose the Supreme Court's decision, in other words anyone in the legislature not falling in line with old Frankfurter and his gang is an anarchist . . .

It is interesting to note that Mr. Clark's wrath is not directed against Dwight Eisenhower, Earl Warren, Herbert Brownell or the thousands of Southern (Christian) editors, college professors, clergymen, and women's groups who have endorsed the Supreme Court decision to outlaw racial segregation in the tax-supported public schools. Nor does Mr. Clark mention the fact that only one week before he wrote his letter the North Carolina Council of Churches adopted a resolution urging churches "in the spirit of Christ, to realize an integrated school system."

Neither does Mr. Clark mention the Roman Catholic Bishop Waters of the N. C. Diocese, who was the first to eliminate segregation in his churches and schools in the state over two years ago. Mr. Clark mentioned only "Rosenwald" and "Frankfurter." The late Julius Rosenwald gave 11 million dollars for the education of Negroes in rural sections of the South before the several states took over the job. Justice Frankfurter was one of nine Supreme Court Justices who voted to eliminate segregation in the public schools.

I'll give Mr. Bobrow three guesses why Mr. Clark mentioned only "Rosenwald" and "Frankfurter."

Teachers: You Released A Monster

John Steinbeck

(John Steinbeck, novelist, has entered this plea via The Saturday Review to the "sweet teachers of grammar and high schools." We found it delightful and highly reprintable—and secretly hope it wil twang a sympathetic cord in certain others.—Editors)

Sweet teachers of grammer and high schools, you have with the best and highest intentions released a monster. I am sure that you know not what you do, but I am equally sure that I speak for many writers in begging you to lay off.

When I was in school I dreaded term papers. Now I dread them even more. The whole thing began a number of years ago and slowly grew lathered with an irresistible flattery.

"Dear sir": (the first letters started) "Our class is studying novels and I have picked you. I can't find anything about you so our teacher said I should write you. Please tell me how old you are and where you were born."

There was something kind of winning about it. I was pleased that someone was interested in how old I was and where I was born. I answered that letter and then another and another. Apparently the idea occurred to lots of teachers. More and more letters arrived until it became necessary to make a form letter saying where I was born and how I was married and had two children and liked my eggs straight up.

This went on for some time and then an ominous change crept in. The letters began to be like this: "I am writing a paper about you. Write and tell me what is your philosophy of life. How did you get started writing? What do you mean in your book 'The Eagle's Nest'? Write me at once or my term paper will be late."

As the peremptory tone entered the number of letters increased. "My teacher told me to write for the story of your life, so sit down and send it and please hurry."

A little anger began to seep into the letters from my pen pals. I was obviously the cause of their having to write a term paper and the hell with me. Also the number of letters increased — ten-twenty-thirty letters a week. The attitude became — "O.K., Max, so you write a lousy book and I get saddled with a term - paper. It's your fault so you write the paper."

And as the number grew the demands grew. Now they wanted essays, short stories, biography — originals — not old stuff. I was rapidly becoming responsible for their grades. "I need 100 points and if you don't answer I won't get them."

More and more teachers took up this charming game and they could always find me through the publishers. To have answered one-tenth of the letters would have taken every waking hour.

Now, apparently, the competition is getting rough, because a new tone has entered. The letters begin with outrageous flattery which even I can't believe and they end—"My teacher says if you don't answer I won't pass."

That tears it. I had a hard enough time getting through school myself and I'll be damned if I'm going to go in for coaching now. And I'm not alone. A whole slew of writers are getting these letters.

The trouble is that you want to answer. Every earnest letter writer thinks he is the only one who has ever done it. And if the student dislikes you for making him write a term paper, the dislike turns to hatred if you don't answer or answer inadequately. One correspondent, an old hand, ended his recent hustle thus: "And I don't want none of them form letters. I want the real stuff."

Dear Teachers—Sweet Teachers, I beg you to call them off. Every month the letters and the demands increase. You may be promoting animosities in your little charge that will last the rest of their lives. You are giving me a jumpiness that makes me go out of my way to bypass a school building.

Has Soviet Policy Really Changed?

Stewart Alsop

WASHINGTON—Is it possible that the Russians really do want a general European settlement, on terms which the West could accept? For the first time in many years, American diplomats and policy-makers are seriously debating this question with each other.

The heart and soul of any general settlement must be, of course, a German settlement. Agreement on Germany, on terms acceptable to the West, would require a drastic change of policy in the Kremlin. As previously reported here, the majority official view is that any such basic change is highly unlikely.

Yet some officials have been having second thoughts on this score. There have been intriguing hints that the Russans might arrive at the forthcoming meeting at the summit prepared to negotiate seriously about Germany. Some of these hints have been public, like Soviet Foreign Minister V. M. Molotov's criptic remarks on the occasion of the signing of the Austrian treaty. But there have also been private hints, and these have been a lot more specific than anything the Soviets have said in public.

Soviet diplomats and officials, whether in Russia or Western Europe or the United States, have been talking to Westerners with far more freedom than at any time in at least a decade. These unofficial chats have resulted in some surprises. Here, for example, is the formula for a German settlement outlined by a Soviet diplomat in one such informal conversation:

First, staged withdrawal from Germany of all foreign troops. The Soviet troops, it was said, would be withdrawn behind the borders of the Soviet Union. But, the Soviet official remarked, if the United States insisted, American troops could be stationed elsewhere on the continent, rather than withdrawn across the Atlantic.

Second, supervised free elections throughout Germany—though just how the elections would be supervised, or how free they would really be, was left very much up in the air.

Third, an advance agreement by Germany and the Western powers to regard the Oder-Neisse Line as "settled." Much emphasis was laid on this point.

Fourth, in every other respect, full soverignty for the new all-German government resulting from the the elections. Specifically, the Germans would have the right to join NATO, although the confident belief was expressed that the Germans would be "more sensible," and that they would form a "third force." This, of course, was the most surprising item on the list.

Finally, there would be some rather vaguely defined all-European security arrangement, of the sort already proposed by Molotov, to guarantee this arrangement. Both the United States and the Soviet Union would be included.

If this sort of Soviet proposal were formally made at the meeting at the summit, it would certainly require some serious negotiation despite its ambiguities.

No German government could afford to reject such proposals outright. And although informal chats commit no one, it is at least interesting that Soviet officials should be talking in this vein. It could even mean that the Kremlin has been making its own agonizing reappraisal.

The Western alliance, after, all, is no longer a house of cards which threatens to collapse at every Soviet puff. The Soviets are having real economic difficulties at home. The Kremlin might thus logically conclude that the time had come for a limited disengagement from Central Europe.

Even supposing this country retained the right to keep forces on the continent, the disengagement would be by no means unilateral. If they were denied German bases, probably five-sixths of the American forces would have to go home, simply because there is nowhere else for them to go. And four British divisions would also go back across the Channel.

For the rest, it might seem to the Soviets that there was not a great deal to lose, and much to be gained. Most of Germany that matters, above all the industrial Ruhr, is already in NATO and preparing to rearm. A new all-German government, with the neutralist Socialists strengthened by East German votes, might indeed be "sensible" and stay out of NATO, however anti-Communist the government might be. At least German rearmament would be indefinitely delayed.

For such certain or possible gains, restless East Germany might well be deemed expendable. Even the loss of the East German uranium mines, and the disastrous and embarrasing defeat of the East German Communists at the polls, might not seem an impossibly high price.

Again and again in recent years, there has been half-nervous, half-hopeful speculation that the Soviets were at last ready to negotiate seriously for a German settlement, and to withdraw from the heart of Europe. Always in the end the speculation has proved wrong, and most informed officials believe that the Russians are not yet really ready to take the great risks involved.

Yet some wise officials now think it possible that the Soviets at last may be willing to pay a high price for a settlement—a price so high that we ought to be thinking seriously about accepting it. Otherwise, they believe, the Europeans, especially the Germans, may accept it whether we like it or not.

Bradford-Browne Comeback To Win

Buzzin' SPORTS

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Whatcha gonna do when there are too many athletes of the Week and Bob & Monk can only give away two shirts at the most?

We sat at our desk in the offices of The Daily Tar Heel, high above Graham Memorial and Silent Sam, and pondered this week's choice while fighting hot weather, cold feet, and the advertising department. The choice is too tough, so instead, this being the final week of publication and all that, we decided not to pick one, but to honor all the spring Tar Heel athletes.

When a school wins the track and tennis conference championships and is second in golf and has a good baseball season, and they all end in a "blaze of glory" on the same weekend, there are too many Athletes of the Week.

Reviewing the possible choices is in itself a day's work. Let's see . . . Tommy Bradford, won the ACC singles championship, then teamed with Herb Browne to take the doubles . . . Larry Parker, second in the ACC golf tournament and outstanding football player last fall . . . Connie Gravitte, led baseball Tar Heels in hitting and signed a Yankee contract over the weekend . . . Jimmy Raugh, second in ACC in strikeouts and hurled a 5-hit win over Duke here Saturday to move Carolina into third in the Big Four . . . Roger Morris, won discus and shot put in ACC track meet, set new record in the shot, and was Carolina's leading scorer in the meet . . . Jimmy Beatty, won mile run in ACC meet by running Maryland's Burr Grimm into the ground in the stretch . . . and this could go on indefinitely, with each man having points in his favor.

Just a look at the spring sports results as a group will indicate that each sport had its outstanding individuals. Tennis team, won 21 matches while losing only one, won regular season ACC team championship and made all-Carolina finals in the tournament; track team, undefeated in seven matches, second in the Florida Relays and added ACC outdoor title to indoor crown won this winter; baseball team, won 12 and lost nine games, including eight of last nine tries to finish third in the Big Four and well up in the ACC standings; golf team, undefeated and tied once in eight matches, second in ACC tournament; frosh baseball, won nine, lost four, and tied one; frosh track, won three, lost two. The grand total for the spring for those six sports, 60 wins, 16 losses and two ties for a .782 percentage.

That speaks for itself.

AND A LITTLE TOE-TREADING

Somebody said (or somebody should have), "Walk softly when you step on big feet." That's good advice, and destroying the icon of the fighting newspaperman of the Clark Kent tradition, we'll just drop a few hints here and there.

1) There's something wrong with the intramural set-up here. It is probably a tradition, but the fraternities dominated the mural program. We don't mean dominated from a winning standpoint, that's not the important thing. They dominated from the entrance stand point. The dorms aren't organized well enough. With more dorm organization, and therefore more dorm participation in the mural program, it will be a well-rounded set-up.

2) The gym gravely needs a face-lifting and new bleachers. (More about this later.)

3) Lacrosse should be recognized by the Athletic Association, as there are boys who want to play the game. (More about this later, too.)

AND SOME NOTES

Notre Dame only had 103 men on its spring football roster! . . . Phil Drake and his swimming records were the subject of a letter in last week's Sports Illustrated . . . Only event left on the Carolina sports card is the NCAA tennis tournament here June 20-25.

Top Payne-Green For ACC Crown

Rested after falling behind at the end of five gruelling hours of tennis Monday, Herbe Browne and Tommy Bradford came back here yesterday to win the Atlantic Coast Conference doubles championship 8-6, 5-7, 3-6, 10-8, 6-1 over Bobby Payne and Pete Green.

Coming at the end of the rain-prolonged tourney, the doubles finals themselves were stretched out over a two-day period, with the finals being called Monday because of darkness with Payne and Green leading two sets to one and the score tied 6-6 in the fourth set. Browne and Bradford, weary from their four-set singles championship match early Monday afternoon, could not cope with Payne and Green's long lobs and fast net game later that day. But yesterday the singles finalists broke through Payne's service in the eighteenth game of the fourth set to win it 10-8.

In the fifth set, Browne won his service and the pair broke through Green's to take a 2-0 lead. Payne and Green won the fourth game, but that was all they could get as Browne and Bradford pressed hard to finish the set and the match 6-1. In the final two games, Payne and Green could manage only one point, as the score was tied at 15-all in the sixth game. Browne and Bradford picked up the next seven points and the championship.

Campus Tennis Finals Slated At 4:00 Today

Kappa Sig edged ATO 3-2 yesterday to win the fraternity tennis championship and move into the campus finals against the Grad School this afternoon.

This is Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant twenty years ago when he was winning Southern tennis championships and high national ranking after playing under John Kenfield at UNC. Grant will meet the ACC singles champion of 1955 — Tommy Bradford of UNC — in an exhibition match here Saturday.

Krepp Gets 2 Marks

Charlie Krepp, sophomore swimming sensation, set two more American records in an AAU sanctioned time trial in Bowman-Gray Indoor Pool yesterday.

In the 440 meters, Krepp cracked the record of former Tar Heel Jimmy Thomas. Thomas' record of 5:02.7 set in 1950, was lowered to 4:57.9. Thomas' 440 yard record of 5:04.7 also fell as Krepp came through with one of the outstanding backstroke performances ever seen. His time was 4:59.5.

Krepp thus becomes the first backstroker to ever swim these distances under five minutes, regardless of pool size or location.

Mahaffy, from Jacksonville, Fla., broke teammate Tom Mauery's record of 1:12.7 in the 100 orthodox. His time, which sets a new frosh and University record, was 1:09.7. Roth just missed breaking the frosh-University record of 53.0 held by Walt Rose, going the distance in 53.5. Roth will try again next Monday.

Dormitory Bond Measure Seems Likely To Pass

RALEIGH, May 17 —(AP)— The House passed on second reading today a bill to authorize six state-supported colleges to issue revenue bonds with which to build eight million dollars worth of new dormitories.

The bonds would be paid off with money received from room rents in the new dormitories and from increases in room rents in present dormitories.

The schools affected are East Carolina College, West Carolina College, Appalachian State Teachers College and the three branches of the Consolidated University.

Make Suggestions, Says Hudson, For Dormitories

"Suggestions withheld today will be the gripes of tomorrow," said Jack Hudson yesterday concerning his call for student suggestions, opinions and ideas on new dormitories.

The new residences will be built if a bill, authorizing the Board of Trustees to issue revenue bonds, is passed by the General Assembly.

Hudson, who is to appear before the Committee on Student Affairs tomorrow to present student opinion on the new dorms, said yesterday "very few" expressions of student opinion have been given to him. He asked that students contact him in 212 Alexander, at the Interdormitory Council's office, or send their suggestions to The Daily Tar Heel.

Hudson said he has received a few suggestions, among which are the ideas of a women's dorm built in the yard between McIver and Cameron Ave., permanent quarters for married students behind Victory Village, four-man rooms in the men's dorm with adjoining study rooms for each, small social rooms for each floor of the men's dorm, closet with sliding doors and desks built into the walls of the rooms.

Hudson, chairman of the Interdormitory Council's Dorm Improvements Committee, said complaints about the present dorms should be made now so they may be remedied in the new dorms.

A Poem

In this the Leuveepian year, I hear
A laugh, the inchoate grunt of lactic lice,
The A's, the B's, the C's the D's, the Hell.
The rain comes down in long and greying lines
Amid the startled, disconcerted leaves.
Beyond this sudden star, the greater pain;
Behind that bush were beetles bound to bleed.
Moles star erat tanta Leruveep.

House Passes Bill Giving Trustees Power To Float Bonds For Building Dorms

Bonds Would Be Paid In Increased Rentals

RALEIGH, May 18—The House of Representatives today passed and sent to the Senate a bill allowing six state-supported colleges to finance construction of new dormitories through revenue bonds.

The bonds would be paid off through increases in dormitory rentals.

Schools which would be allowed to float bond issues include the three branches of the Consolidated University, East Carolina College, West Carolina College and Appalachian State Teachers College.

The revenue bill would allow University trustees "at one time or from time to time" to issue "revenue bonds of the board for the purpose of acquiring or constructing any project or projects."

"Projects" refers to one or more dormitories, with or without dining facilities, and "enlargements or improvements thereof or additions thereto . . . together with the necessary land and equipment."

Bonds for the University at Chapel Hill, according to the bill, may not exceed two million dollars.

If the bill is passed, it will allow the Board of Trustees to "increase the rentals for the facilities furnished by any existing dormitories . . . to provide, to the extent necessary, additional funds to liquidate in full any revenue bonds issued under this act."

A University official said yesterday he felt the bill would cause a small raise in dormitory rents. Dorm rent raise recommended by the Advisory Budget Commission, however would amount to much more than these under the present bill.

Ideas To Be Given On Dorms

Jack Hudson, chairman of the Interdormitory Council's Dorm Improvements Committee and member of the student Legislature, will go before the Council on Student Affairs today to present student ideas and suggestions concerning new dormitories.

Hudson has been gathering students' ideas and opinions on the possible type and facilities of the dorms which would be built if the North Carolina General Assembly passes the bill now before it authorizing the Board of Trustees to issue bonds to raise money for new dorms.

Among the possibilities which Hudson has mentioned concerning the new dorms are a men's dorm in the area of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital, another large men's dorm like Cobb, a women's dorm built in the area between McIver and Alderman, a women's dorm in Battle Park and a permanent residence for married students built behind Victory Village.

Soundproof rooms, floors made of rubber or asphalt tile, fluorescent lighting, built-in desks and social rooms for the individual floors of a new men's dorm were among the suggestions Hudson has mentioned concerning the facilities of the new dorms.

Members of the Council on Student Affairs are Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver; Roy Armstrong, dean of admissions; Miss Katherine Carmichael, dean of women, Joe Galloway, director of the Placement Service; Dr. E. Hedgepeth, University physician; Roy Holsten, director of student activities; Edwin S. Lanier, director of the Central Office of Records; Dr. William D. Perry, director of the Testing Service, and James Wadesworth, director of Housing.

Mangum Award Winner

Charles Kuralt, winner of the Mangum Award in oratory in annual contest here, is shown above, both cameras swinging. Kuralt, immediate past editor of The Daily Tar Heel, spoke at Mangum Award competition on "The Sonic Solution." Kuralt, who was a national winner in the "I Speak for Democracy" contest while he was in high school, started broadcasting long before. While at UNC he has been a member of the Golden Fleece, Order of the Grail, and Order of the Old Well. The Mangum Award, a gold medal, is awarded to the member of the senior class judged best orator. It is the University's oldest award, founded in 1878 by Misses Martha Person and Mary Mangum in memory of their father, Willie P. Mangum, member of the class of 1815. The contest is annually sponsored by the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Assembly—Powledge Photo.

Rhodes Grants Applications Available Here

Elections to Rhodes Scholarships will be held in December of this year, and scholars-elect will enter the University of Oxford in October of 1956, according to Dean C. P. Spruill.

Dean Spruill said yesterday all students interested in applying for a Rhodes Scholarships should see him in 303 South Building.

The requirements for elegibility are the following: applicant must be a male citizen of the United States, with at least five years' domicile, and unmarried; applicant must be between the ages of 19 and 25 on October 1, 1956; applicant must have at least junior standing by the time of application at some recognized degree-granting college or university in the United States.

A candidate may apply either in the state in which he resides or in the state in which he may have received at least two years of his college education. Applications must be in the hands of the secretary of the state committee by November 1, 1955.

The value of a Rhodes Scholarship is 600 pounds. Scholars who qualify under the GI Bill of Rights or other military educational funds will recieve the same benefits at Oxford as at an American university. Appointment to a Rhodes Scholarship is made for two years in the first instance with a possible third year if the scholar's record at Oxford and plan of study warrant such. No restriction is placed upon a Rhodes Scholar's choice of studies.

Copies of the Memorandum of Regulations and application blanks may be obtained from Dean Spruill.

Legislature May Get Negro Bill

Will the student Legislature get a resolution tonight calling for the admittance of Negroes as undergraduates?

This is a question for which there was no answer yesterday. Various rumors have been associated with the resolution, but there have been no concrete details given.

According to Jim Holmes, Student Party member who was reported to be the introducer, the measure will "probably" be put on the floor. But Holmes would not pinpoint his answer to a yes or a no.

He did say the resolution had the support of "several people," and that those people were members of the SP.

After the hint from Holmes that the proposal would have the backing of most of the SP members, another source high in the party was consulted.

This member, who requested that he remain unidentified, but that his statement be attributed to a "highly informed source," said he was completely "opposed" to the measure.

"The SP support will not be altogether united on this matter," he went on to add in loud tones.

Another member, Bob Harrington, was just as outspoken in his opposition to the proposed introduction.

"I feel this resolution, although it has great worth, would in the long run prove to be detremental to the best interests of UNC," said Harrington, because it "might have bad affect on this University's dealings with the state Legislature . . . in relation to financial matters."

According to Harrington, he is going to do all in his "power" to keep the resolution from being put up to a vote.

If the measure does hit the legislative agenda, the question of passage will lie in the hands of the University Party.

Phi Kap Combo Jazzes Up Carnival

A combo from Phi Kappa Sigma social fraternity, above, livened up the University Club's annual Spring Carnival, held this week, with its music. They played at the bingo booth sponsored by the Phi Kaps and Chi Omega. The booth entered by Chi Phi and Pi Beta Phi won the award for the best display for the Carnival. The display, entitled "Flush-Flush," consisted of participants "flushing" a coed down a slide by ringing a "plumber's friend" with cardboard toilet seats. The winner of the Theta Chi "Ugliest Man on Campus" contest was announced at the Carnival as Oscar Eckhoff, senior from Charlotte.—Henley Photo.

Reading Day Unlikely Before Spring Exams

It appeared unlikely yesterday that the student Legislature's resolution calling for a reading day before examinations will be considered by the University administration before next September.

Charles Bernard, assistant director of admissions and chairman of the University Calendar Committee, said yesterday that the committee, to which the Legislature's resolution would be referred, will have no more regular meetings before the end of school. He added that if a special committee meeting were to be called to discuss certain matters pertaining to the calendar the group would certainly consider the resolution.

Bernard said a special committee meeting is unlikely due to the fact that the members, the deans of all University schools, are very busy at this time.

Jack Stevens, vice-president of the student body and speaker of the Legislature, yesterday said he has discussed the matter with Bernard and would present the resolution to the Calendar Committee if a special meeting is held.

According to Bernard, the Calendar Committee considered the idea of a reading day last year. He said the members decided at that time that an additional day for examinations would be more profitable than a reading day.

Bierck, Long, Mason Get Ford Foundation Grants

Three University faculty members have received Ford Foundation Fellowship Grants for the coming school year. They are Harold A. Bierck Jr., associate professor of Latin American history; Eugene R. Long, associate professor of psychology, and Wilton Mason, associate professor of music.

Prof. Bierck has been granted a faculty fellowship by the Fund for the Advancement of Education of the Foundation and will begin his year's leave next September. For the first three months he will remain here to examine through reading and consultation the validity of applying the methodologies of the social sciences to the teaching of Latin-American history.

In January he and Mrs. Bierck and their two sons will go to the University of Texas in Austin where he will pursue a further course of study to prepare a draft outline for an analytical-narrative course in Latin-American history.

Naval ROTC Unit Awards Sixteen Medals, Trohpies

Sixteen medals and trophies have been awarded by the Naval ROTC unit here for excellence in the various fields of military study, drill and leadership for this academic year.

The awards were presented by Colonel R. C. Burns, USMC, commanding officer of the UNC unit.

Awards were presend to the following midship men: Professor of Naval Science Award was given to Stephen A. Trimble, Washington, D. C., for contributing most to the welfare of the unit.

Karl L. Barkley, Raleigh, received the Best Drilled Company Award for company leadership in inter-company drill competition.

Samuel H. Helms, Charlotte, was given the Best Drilled Platoon Award for platoon leadership in inter-platoon competition.

James R. Turner, Winston-Salem, received the Cutter Award for contributions toward the printing of the unit newspaper, The Carolina Cutter.

Stephen A. Trimble, Washington, D. C., was given the Drill Team Medal for outstanding service and leadership as commander of the unit's Crack Drill Team.

Loren A. Brandt, Charleston, S. C., received the Rifle Marksmanship for the highest average score with the rifle in competition.

The John Bishop Marksmanship Medal was awarded to Gordon B. Hall Jr., Syracuse, N. Y., for the highest average score with the rifle in competition as a third classman.

Philip I. Goodman, New Orleans, La., received the Pistol Marksmanship Medal for the highest average score with the pistol in competition.

The Navigation Medal was awarded Freeman A. Grant Jr., Bethesda, Md., for the highest academic average in the navigation course.

The Supply Corps Medal was awarded to Gerald R. Daughtridge, Rocky Mount, for the highest academic average in the supply corps course.

Loren A. Brandt, Charleston, S. C. received the Marine Science Medal for the highest academic average in the marine science course.

The Ordnance and Gunnery Medal was awarded to Gordon B. Hall Jr., Syracuse, N. Y., for the highest academic average in the ordnance and gunnery course.

The Best All-Round Freshman Medal was awarded to Henry J. Sommer Jr., Aberdeen, Md., for outstanding academic, leadership and service qualities demonstrated as a freshman.

Alfred L. Purrington II, Raleigh, received the Regular U. S. Naval Institute Award for having demonstrated exceptional interest in professional, literary and scientific knowledge in the Navy.

The Associate U. S. Naval Institute Award was awarded to Edwin O. Ayscue Jr., Monroe, for having demonstrated exceptional interest in professional, literary and scientific knowledge in the Navy.

McLendon G. Morris, Oxford, was awarded Marine Corps Assn. Award for having demonstrated outstanding leadership and scholastic achievement in marine science.

Facilities Lacking At Howell Hall

GREENSBORO, May 18 (AP) — Due to the lack of physical facilities, only two out of every five students applying to enter the School of Pharmacy at the University of North Carolina can be admitted, according to school Dean E. A. Brecht.

"This is true despite the fact that an acute shortage of Pharmacists continues throughout the state," he told the 75th annual convention of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Assn. here.

"It was a keen disappointment that the General Assembly again found it impossible to appropriate funds for a larger building for the school," he said.

The association ended its Diamond Jubilee Convention last night with a floor show and dance. New officers were elected and installed during the final business session yesterday.

Last One Saturday

Saturday morning's issue of The Daily Tar Heel will be the last for this academic year.

Deadline for the Saturday edition, like all other days, will be at 2:30 p.m. Thursday afternoon.

Harris Wins Key In B.A.

Harvey Max Harris, senior in the School of Business Administration from Garysburg, was awarded the annual scholarship key presented by the Alpha Lamdba chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, professional business fraternity, at its awards night dinner held last night.

Harris has made the highest scholastic average in the School of Business Administration during his four years of undergraduate study. An accounting major, he is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and will receive his BS degree in June.

Dr. Claude S. George of the Business Administration faculty, advisor to Delta Sigma Pi, made the scholarship presentation.

Fraternity awards were also presented to Louie Bonardi, Durham, for being the most active member; Earl Haynes, Salisbury, for showing the most improvement during the past year, and Charles Hyatt, Waynesville, for excellence as professional committee chairman.

A Handicap In The Home Stretch

As students round the semester turn and head for the home stretch (seemingly now more like the homework stretch), ideas for improving the mechanics of getting an education are as plentiful as spring picnics.

The most-needed improvement is a student reading day—a day between the last day of classes and the opening of exams to prepare for finals.

The student Legislature, overlooking the fact that the University's Calendar Committee makes up the exam schedule over a year in advance, gave students a reading day before exams. Actually, students won't get the day this spring, or any other term, unless the calendar makers agree with the student law makers.

We trust the arbiters of calendar and events will give the students a break next year and grant a reading day. Students, even bright ones, need more than one evening to review an entire term's work.

Beware Socialistic Jabberwocks, My Sons

What is good for the Tories is good for the country: and since the Hoover Commission, the heart and soul of all good Toryism in the U. S., has recently come out for a drastic reduction in public enterprises we will have to go along like good little Tories.

The Hoover Commission has now dispatched to the Congress 22 recommendations for removal of assorted thorns in the side of Free Enterprise. Among them: abolishment of the postal savings system; transference to private industry of 988 industrial plants built at Federal expense during World War II; abolishment of all chemical research by the Tennessee Valley Authority at Muscle Shoals. We have heard of rumblings within the Commission to axe TVA entirely.

The public enterprises pay no taxes and deprive the government of revenue it could get from private funds. Their "unjustified continuance," in the words of those great Tories of the Hoover Commission, "is a definite injury to the vitality of the whole private enterprise system."

Yes, these enterprises are gross and evil. What is more, they represent creeping socialism. As John Cogley tells us in The Commonweal, socialistic may be used > to describe the intervention of government in private business. There are some exceptions—when the Government subsidizes the building of factories, private housing, overseas trade and in general cost-plus contracts, for instance.

> Price supports to the independent farmer do not qualify as socialistic, except in some benighted Utah circles. Government intervention in these cases is known as stimulating free enterprise.

What It Is, Is Originality

In the new Yackety-Yack, one would expect to find chronicled the story of a campus year. But such is not the case.

Actually, Editors Cornell Wright and Jackie Park have given the University something more than just a pictorial chronicle of the year. The new Yack abounds in poetry, pictures, and life. The yearbook is as casual as a Y-Court stroll in some places and as solemn as Commencement in others. In short, this year's Yackety-Yack is the best Carolina has seen in many years.

We congratulate the Yack editors — and their staff—for putting originality into the yearbook, for breaking away from the stereotype to present something new.

The Decline And Fall Of Pari-Mutuel

J. A. C. Dunn

LAST MONDAY NIGHT we were in the midst of an Irish poem that seemed, for all we could tell, to be talking about a girl who was raped by a goose, when we were lifted from the fastnesses of Winston Dorm by a call from the editoral powers that be. "Dunn, go cover the rat races at the Sigma Chi derby," said the voice. We started to point out that we were reading a poem, and that it was Irish and all about a girl who . . . "Go cover the rat races. Navy field." We staggered down to the rat races.

FAITHFUL TO THE very end, we forsook the Bingo table, the miniature golf course, the "Hit The Whatnot With A Thingummy" game, and the Flush the Coed routine, and panted up to the Smith Dorm Rat Race Track.

There were no lavishly dressed crowds standing anxiously in grandstands, there were no parimutuel windows, no one had any binoculars or racing seats. But it was post time, and there was a horde of people bending over the table and yelling and jumping up and down. At the end of the race we managed to squeeze our way in and have a look.

The Smith Rat Track was comprised of four long runways in a cardboard box, each runway walled in by cardboard strips, each runway containing one rat. There were three white rats and a brown one — the dark horse, presumably. We placed a dime on number four (Hatrack's Glory, by Registered Post out of Beerstein). The crowd swelled, swayed, placed its dimes; we examined Hatrack's Glory as it waited in its stall. It seemed restive, eager to run. Looked like a good thing.

The rats came up to the wire. Number 2 (Lucky Strike, by Taj Mahal out of Socialism II) had evidently lost interest in racing and had given his attention to a piece of dog biscuit. Number 1 (Chaos, by Cobb Dorm out of Alderman) was running in tight little circles. Number 1 was the dark horse. Number 3 (Feetlebomb, by Swinburne out of Mercomatci) was frantically trying to leave the track. Last minute bets were placed. The crowd tensed. The cardboard barrier flew up. They're off!

THE CROWD ROARED. It cheered. It swore. It screamed. Several coeds were trampled in the rush. The boy beside us buried his face in his hands and wept. Not one of the rats moved. Hands were waved at them, distraught bettors beat the cardboard box and wailed. Hatrack's Glory took four steps forward, sat down, smiled up at the yelling mass of faces, and brushed its whiskers.

At this crucial point one Feetlebomb backer leaned down and murmured "Hey, rat, I'm a cat!" Feetlebomb took off as if he was going to the moon and won the race by eighteen necks and a nose. We relinquished our dime and the Feetlebomb backer collected a certificate entitling him to 20c worth of Goody Shop.

THE NEXT FOUR races relieved us of four more dimes. We gave up on Hatrack's Glory and put our money on Chaos. Chaos ran halfway to the finish line at top speed and then discovered he'd left his umbrella or something at the gate and ran back again. We had a go at Lucky Strike, but Lucky Strike hadn't finished his dog biscuit yet and wasn't going to give it up for any silly old race, be the stakes in the thousands though they may. We tried Feetlebomb. Feetlebomb lost simply because he didn't bother to run fast enough. We put our last dime on Chaos again. He ran quite well until the three quarter mark, and then developed colic. We left the track a ruined man.

Socrates, DTH, & Yes-Yes

Editors:

You quote Professor Hutchins as having asserted that a university "is a kind of continuing Socratic conversation on the highest level for the very best people . . ." Since you appear to endorse this definition, you will perhaps be pleased to grant me the privilege of expressing certain of my own opinions which your monologic parrotings have inspired.

I never did care much for Socratic dialogue. And I'll tell you why. It's a one-sided deal. Socrates' opponent always turns out to be a sort of brainwashed yes-man who in his confusion is incapable of doing his own reasoning and lets Socrates do it for him.

I open my Plato—quite at random, mind you—and find myself somewhere in the Phaedo. Here, from two pages, are some of the yes-man's answers: "Very true." "True." "Very true." "True." "Quite so.' 'It may be." "Very true. ". . . yes, and swear to it, with all the confidence in life." "To be sure." I turn the page and find, on the next two pages: "That is certain." "Very true." "Yes." "Very true." "Yes, in a very great measure too." "Certainly." "Precisely." "Very true." "Yes." "Certainly." "Yes." "True."

Now there, for our enlightenment, is one side of a Socratic dialogue. Ironically enough, Professor Hutchins' definition is a good one. A university education today is, is indeed, a sort of Socratic dialogue. What teacher does not like to play the part of Socrates? What student does not play the yes-man?

I would not cast reflections on the honesty of the student by insinuating that he consciously plays his ignominious yes-man part in the great farce of present-day education. I am not talking about the few who put advancement above integrity to the extent of yessing themselves into the favor of the teacher. I am talking about the average student, who is, unconsciously, a yes-man. He is the victim of an attitude into which he has been trained by years of classroom attendance. He has been conditioned to believe what the teacher says, and more often than not he does. He will even defy what he thinks to be—and what may well be—the ignorance of his own parents with what he has been taught in school. When he graduates, he is a product, the product of a system. He believes exactly what the system taught him. To say this is to say no more than that he was taught what he was taught. And I would take him as an astonishing exception as a product of our schools today if he had been taught to question what he had been taught.

Now, of course you may say, "Oh, but that is exactly what the Socratic method teaches: to examine and consider and reason upon and if need be, in the light of truth, reject." Well, that is true. That is what the Socratic method has come to mean, and that is undoubtedly what Professor Hutchins meant to convey. But the point is, this attitude unfortunaely does not characterize the present-day student. Ironically, and somewhat paradoxically, he is too much like the yes-man of the Socratic dialogue to participate in the true spirit of the Socratic method. (In the dialogues it is really Socrates who does the examining and considering and reasoning. His part of the dialogue represents, actually, the totality of the method. His "opponent" merely stands there to affirm what Plato thinks is the soundness of Socrates' musings.)

Irony piles upon irony. In your editorial of last Sunday you yes-yes the Hutchins statement which you had quoted a day or so before, by modestly putting yourselves forward as carriers-on of "the great Socratic tradition"; and then you proceed to yes-yes the Phi Beta Kappa address of Professor Adams.

I don't say that you shouldn't have yes-yessed the Adams speech, but your doing so illustrated what is in your case not only a prevailing tendency but, apparently, a hard and fast rule: that is, your presumption that the educator is always right. Well, Professor Adams is right, partly. He is right when he says "even college students join the general public in the avoidance of thinking" and that "Many (students) have concluded that it won't do to think too much" and that "in a modern university, especially in a modern state university, very little creative thinking is done by the faculty."

But he goes on to illustrate the thesis of his own un-thinkingness (even deans, he says, can't find time to think) by yes-yessing the liberal-educator propaganda that the sincere concern over the teaching of un-American doctrines in our schools arise from some sort of "small-minded" delight in a "cloak-and-dagger game." Poor Adams! Poor sincere but misguided Adams! I sincerely doubt that even if he had time to think, he would wake up to the fact that he had unwittingly revealed earlier in his own speech the real cause of present-day concern over the exposing of students to anti-American teachings. Students, even college students, he had said, don't think; and "Many have concluded that it won't do to think too much . . ." Here is the real danger to academic freedom and, though he in his Adamitic blindness cannot see it, the real cause for the concern over what is taught.

As long as the Socrates-"yes-man" relationship exists in our schools, there can be no true academic freedom. The point that has been overlooked is that academic freedom involves more than the teacher's right to teach what he pleases. Academic freedom involves—and this is even more important—the student's position as a person taught. As long as he has an unvarying and unwavering "yes" attitude toward what seems to him an all-wise teacher, he is not free. A product as he is, from his early years, of a system which has taught him a cowering acquiescence in intellectual authority, he is not even free to "yes" or not to "yes." So fashioned, he never gives a thought to the alternatives and does not even see that he is not free.

Out of consideration of all this has come the increasing concern over the teaching of Communism and of Communist-tinged doctrines in our schools. The problem is not so simply defined, nor so easily explained away, as some would have us believe. The absolutistic "reasoning" now in vogue assumes that the student is a detached nucleus of autonomy and therefore perfectly free to accept or reject what is taught him. But he is not, and the very word "taught" belies the contention that he is.

Here, and not in impositions from outside the schools, is the real problem of "thought-control," here is the real problem of academic freedom. The solution will come when students are educated to a healthy suspicion of intellectual authority, indeed almost a contempt for it. The solution will come when students are taught to think for themselves. There is no place in American education for the yes-man of the Socratic dialogues.

China Lobby Loses Ike & Support

Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — It has been apparent here for some time that President Eisenhower is moving toward some form of disengagement in the Far East and that advocates of a hard policy in Asia and all out support of Chiang Kai-shek have lost.

Chiang's friends including Senators Bridges and McCarthy are now speaking up in the Senate to show that they realize what is happening. They are saying more or less directly that they, at least, are not deceived by any pretensions that the administration has not materially altered its course since the President "unleashed" Chiang in his first State of the Union message.

It is perhaps too much to declare that these speeches are funeral orations over a policy to which a powerful Republican faction has long been dedicated and which it has pressed to the hilt against Democratic Administrations. But barring an unexpected turn of events, that is what they will prove to be.

For the President is going to get his way. Congress is behind him, thinking that the American people are. Few Senators bothered to listen to the speeches which so well described, from one point of view, the present turning point in history.

The Senators are indifferent because the cause is lost. The mere fact that it was left to the discredited Senator from Wisconsin to mount the principal attack speaks for itself.

The McCarthy text was cogently and closely reasoned. It charted more lucidly than any Democrat has managed to do the White House changes of direction. These the speech carried directly to the President with many pungent and quotable observations such as: "the masters never had a better pupil."

Had Chiang's friends here, now so bitter against Eisenhower, been able to persuade an influential Senator to make such a speech, obviously they would have done so.

Senator Bridges proceeded much more cautiously, wrapping up many go-slow warnings to the President in the Yalta text which he quoted copiously. Bridges, the senior Republican of the Senate, knows that the party has to have Eisenhower to win next year. He has also seen a New Hampshire poll taken by Rep. Perkins Bass which shows their home state is solidly for the President's policy.

The objective observer must admit some truth in the McCarthy charge that the Administration is pursuing an equivocal course with respect to the Chinese Nationalists. Chiang's hopes, of course, have risen and fallen with the changes in U. S. policy.

It would be possible to feel much more apologetic about this were it not that his friends have subjected this Capital for years to ceaseless and unwearied lobbying which attempted to exploit every domestic political quarrey. All foreign countires, of course, seek friends here. Few others, if any, have had the nerve to try openly to turn domestic politics to their advantage.

The China Lobby put all its chips on one GOP faction and it has lost.

CONTRAST IN STATE PARKS

North Carolina's two most-visited State parks, Mount Mitchell and Fort Macon, illustrate the dramatic geographical contrasts of Variety Vacationland. Like all other North Carolina State parks, they are open free to visitors.

Mount Mitchell State Park is atop 6,684 foot Mount Mitchell, highest peak in eastern America. No point in the park is less than a mile above sea level. It is open from April through late October and is reached by a five-mile section of paved highway (N.C. 128) connecting with the Blue Ridge Parkway 33 miles north of Asheville. A large new building of native stone houses a resturant; other park facilities include a refreshment stand, paved 250-car parking lot, picnic and camping areas, and hiking trails. The park covers 1,224 acres purchased by the State in 1915.

IN THE three previous springs that I have spent in Chapel Hill each was characterized by the turning of young men's fancies to thoughts of crusading. This spring is no exception. It seems that once again the majority of the student body has boarded that good ship "Crusade."

The boys in the lower quad are advocating "free love," the seniors are preaching "live fast, die young, and be a pretty corpse," and The Daily Tar Heel is endeavoring to carry the "White Man's Burden."

The thought of The Daily Tar Heel editors and their willingness to be martyrs for the segregation issue reminds me of the time that I lived deeper in the South than at present. In fact, the South seemed further south than it does now.

INCIDENTALLY, MY name is Culpepper, Caleb D. Culpepper the third—that is. I am a hundred and sixteen-year-old idiot. I come from a long line of Culpeppers, and we are all just one great big happy degenerate Southern family.

Anyway, we used to live on an old plantation named Tara. The Mississippi River used to flow within a stone's throw of our house. I know, because I used to throw stones into the river. That Mississippi was an odd sort of river; it was as clear as crystal until it reached the Mason-Dixon Line, and then it became muddy and stayed that way until it reached where ever it was that it was going.

EVERY TIME I think of Tara, I think of the Civil War. My brother, Rhett Butler Culpepper—age 73, and my mother, Scarlet O'Hara Culpepper—age 98, and myself were the only ones living on the plantation during the war. We had 1,700 slaves to help us with the chores, but we were still shorthanded because most of our slaves had deserted us for office jobs up North.

My brother Rhett and I had to keep our mother in her room. She would drink all the canned heat if we let her out. Sterno certainly was hard to get during the war.

AS I have already mentioned, everyone had left the plantation to fight the war. By the way, we Culpeppers are all heroes. My great-grandfather, Carlton "Stone Wall" Culpepper was the first Confederate soldier killed in the Civil War. He was called "Stone Wall" because when he was fighting the Yankees he gave out of cannon balls so he started firing granite blocks taken from the jailhouse wall. They left the hole in the wall as a monument to him.

But alas, his military career came to an abrupt halt when one of his men mistook him for a Second-Lieutenant and shot him in the back.

I'M NOT exactly certain as to the cause of "The War of Northern Aggression," but I have heard it said that some fellow by the name of Lincoln started it. They say in the South that he was a sort of king up North, and he was awfully jealous of all the big white houses in the South. I suppose he wanted to be the only man living in a big white house.

Anyway, he sent a whole host of Yankee soldiers down South with orders to burn all the houses, women, and children. He also instructed his men, I have heard, to capture the slaves and bring them up North to work in the mills and to help build a golf course on the White House lawn.

This Lincoln fellow was very fond of moving pictures so he would go to the theater and sit for days at a time watching the new 3-D movies. One day he sat down beside another man's wife and the man shot him.

BUT BACK to Tara and my family. One day our maid Lisa prepared one of the most delicious dinners we had ever tasted—southern fried chicken and chittlings (Lisa really knew how to fix southern-fried chicken—she would take the chicken out into the backyard, pick all the feathers out, and then kill it).

Our meal was interrupted by a knock on the door. I very casually opened the door and to my amazement saw 100,000 Yankee soldiers in the front yard.

The spokesman for the group was standing on the porch leading his men in a cheer or yell or something. They were yelling, "War is Hell, War is Hell, War is Hell." The spokesman turned around, told me his name was Sherman, and said that he had orders to burn a path 60 miles wide through the South and our house was in that path. I knew that he meant what he said because he was tough. In fact, that's the next thing he said to me. "I'm tough."

SHERMAN AND his men set fire to the house. Rhett and myself sneaked out a back window but we didn't let mother come with us. We knew that she would want the few remaining cans of heat that we had.

We sat comfortably in one of the hogpens as the old homeplace went up in flames. I will never forget the sound of my mother's screams as the fire closed in on her. It was a rather eerie situation.

WHEN WE awoke the next morning, we noticed that only the chimney remained standing. The remainder of Tara had gone up in smoke. We decided to leave the chimney standing in memory of our dear mother.

The only items we were able to save from the fire were two old scraps of paper. One was entitled "New York Express Timetable" and the other "Fire Insurance Policy." Since Rhett had graduated from college with a B. S. in Business Administration, he told me that we could collect a good deal of money on the policy and go up north to live. I had never been out of the South so I agreed to go with him.

WE ARRIVED in New York one week after the fire had destroyed Tara. New York was about the size of our old homestead so we felt right at home. We didn't have a Mississippi River near our new home, but we could go down to East River and stir it with a stick and make it muddy.

There was a little store down the street from where we lived that sold a Northern drink called martini. We didn't know much about martinis but Rhett showed them how to mix martinis and drained heat so we got along all right.

YES SIR, those were the good old days. We didn't have crusaders running about all over the country abolishing this or manumitting that, but we were happy.

Rosenbluth, Vayda, Radovich Are Honored At Cage Banquet

Buzzin' SPORTS

SOME LACROSSE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS . . .

Lacrosse, that much abused and confused old Indian game, may gain recognition by the Carolina Athletic Council, according to reports from the CAC meeting Tuesday night.

Art Greenbaum, who coached the team this year, has been campaigning to get the sport recognized—and thereby backed—by the CAA, and appears to be on the verge of winning his point, as some vital questions concerning the sport were answered at the meeting.

This year, a group of athletes played under the label of the Carolina Lacrosse Club and did a creditable job against tough, experienced competition. They were handicapped by not being recognized by the CAA in that they did not have proper equipment and were not able to be excused from classes in order to play away games.

The main points reviewed at the meeting, according to reports, were:

Question: Finances—A budget was presented to the Athletic Council for consideration by the Student Lacrosse Committee. Council noted that budget was low enough whereby finances would be no problem.

Question: Eligibility—This year, the Lacrosse Club was composed of players who would be ineligible under University and conference rules, such as freshmen and non-students. Greenbaum pointed out that he could expect about a 40-45 man squad next year, with all eligible under the rules.

Question: Schedule—Greenbaum pointed out that a representative schedule could be arranged, and that tentative games have already been scheduled with Duke, Washington College, UVA, Delaware, and others.

Question: Coach—Greenbaum said that he would be here as long as a lacrosse team functioned at the University. The Athletic Council did not commit itself on this question.

So the picture for lacrosse looks bright at this time, although nothing definite has been decided by the Athletic Council.

From here it seems that if a fairly large group of boys wish to play a so-called "minor" sport, and that minor sport does not require a large outlay of athletic funds, they should be given the opportunity.

So "hail fellow, good job" it is to the Athletic Council and Art Greenbaum.

AND A BANQUET. . . .

Off-season basketball banquets are sad things from a fan's standpoint.

It's nice to be with the players, hear their wisecracks, and see the presentation of awards, but there's something missing, nevertheless, for the guy who's been sitting watching them play all through a season.

Seeing the players in ties and cord coats, great bundles of energy tied to a seat at a long white table, is too much of a change from seeing them on the court. Then too, the flavor is gone with the passing brisk weather. Without sweaters and cold hands, it just doesn't seem like basketball time. It was hard to sit in the warm room at the Pines and think about the alternately cold and hot air stirring in Woollen Gym. It's hard to pin down, but there's something sad just the same.

Prepsters Run Here Friday

The annual North Carolina high school track meet will be held here Friday at Fetzer Field.

The field lists 120 boys from 22 schools, survivors of three regional meets last week. The top four in each event last week qualified for the finals. Last week's regional meets drew 350 boys.

Qualifying heats in the sprints and hurdles events will be held at 11 a.m. Friday. Finals will start at 2:30 p.m. with field events, the track events starting at 3 o'clock.

Rosie Named As 'Most Valuable'

Lennie Rosenbluth, Jerry Vayda and Tony Radovich were presented awards last night at the annual basketball banquet at the Pines Restaurant.

The banquet, attended by Varsity and freshmen basketball players, coaches, and other men who contributed to the team's success this winter, was highlighted by the presentation of the Most Valuable Player award to Rosenbluth and the Dr. Foy Robinson sportsmanship award to Vayda. Both awardees were chosen by vote of their teammates.

LENNIE ROSENBLUTH

JERRY VAYDA

E. Carrington Smith, Chapel Hill theatre owner, made the presentation of the award to Rosenbluth, a rising junior who was one of the top basketball players in the South. Rosenbluth literally rewrote the Carolina scoring records in his first year of Varsity ball after setting a host of frosh records his first year.

Dr. Robinson presented the trophy he originated to Vayda. The award is given to the player who, by vote of his teammates, has contributed the most to team morale and play, and who has exhibited the highest standard of sportsmanship throughout the season.

Radovich, a rising senior, was presented the foul shooting cup for 1954-55 season. He hit on sixty of eighty tries for a .750 percentage, highest on the team.

O. K. Cornwell, who presided as master of ceremonies at the fete, presented Rosenbluth with the Helms Foundation certificate for being named to the collegiate All-American team this winter.

Major Briefs: Minoso Beaned; Cubs Win 2

NEW YORK, May 18 (AP)—Chicago outfielder Minnie Minoso barely escaped serious injury today when he was hit on the head by a pitched ball in a wild home run duel won by the New York Yankees over the White Sox 11-6.

CHICAGO, May 18 (AP)—The Chicago Cubs blasted three homers and capped their scoring with a four-run fifth to whip the skidding Philadelphia Phillies 7-5 today, after taking the opener of the double-header 3-2 behind Sam Jones.

BOSTON, May 18. (AP)—Herb Score, Cleveland's whip-arm rookie lefthander, shut out Boston on three hits today while the vaunted power of the American League leaders broke loose for an 11-run fifth inning and a 19-0 victory.

CINCINNATI, May 18. (AP)—Cincinnati rookie Rudy Minarcin today sent the tail-spinning Pittsburgh Pirates to their seventh straight setback 5-1 on neat six-hit pitching. Minarcin, in his first major league start, retired in order 16 batters from the third inning to the ninth.

THE MAIL BAG

If the spirit should ever move you to write me a letter—and it's always a pleasure to hear from you—take pen and paper and address me c/o Philip Morris, 100 Park Ave., New York 17, N. Y. Or if you don't have any paper, snap open your Snap-Open pack of Philip Morris, remove the fine vintage cigarettes, turn the neat brown wrapper inside out and use it for stationery. The regular size Philip Morris pack is perfect for short notes. For longer letters use the king size pack. For chain letters and petitions, glue several packs together.

This week's column is devoted to a few of the many interesting letters that have been coming in:

SIR:

Maybe you can help me. I came up to college eight years ago. On my very first day I got into a bridge game at the Students Union. I am still in the same bridge game. I have never gone to a class, cracked a book, or paid any tuition. All I do is play bridge.

To explain my long absence and keep the money coming from home, I told a harmless little lie. I said I was in medical school. This made Dad (my father) very proud. It also enabled me to keep playing bridge. We were both terribly happy.

But all good things must come to an end. Mine ended last week when I was home for spring vacation. I arrived to find that Sister (my sister) was in the hospital with an ingrown spleen. Dr. Norbert Sigafoos, the eminent ingrown spleen surgeon, was scheduled to operate, but unfortunately he was run over by a hot-food cart on the way to the scrubbing room.

"Oh, never mind," chuckled Dad (my father). "Harlow (me) will fix Sister (my sister)."

Well sir, what could I do? If I told the truth I would make a laughingstock out of Dad (my father) who had been bragging about me all over town. Also I would get yanked out of school which would be a dirty shame just when I am getting to understand the weak club bid.

There was nothing for it but to brazen it out. I got Sister (my sister) apart all right, but I must confess myself completely at a loss as to how to put her back together again. Can you suggest anything? They're getting pretty surly around here.

Harlow Protein

Dear Harlow,

Indeed I do have a solution for you—the solution that has never failed me whenever things close in: Light up a Philip Morris! Knots untie as you puff that rich vintage tobacco. Shade becomes light as you taste that mild fragrant flavor . . . And as you watch the pure white smoke drift lazily upward, you will know that nothing is as bad as it seems, that it is always darkest before the dawn, and that the man worthwhile is the man who can smile!

SIR:

Do you think a girl should kiss a fellow on their first date?

Blanche Carbohydrate

Dear Blanche,

Not unless he is her escort.

SIR:

Here is a rather amusing coincidence that may amuse your readers.

Just off the campus where I go to school there is a lake called Lake Widgiwagan where students from time immemorial have gone fishing. Thirty years ago when my father was an undergraduate here he went fishing one day at Widgiwagan and dropped his Deke pin into the water. Though he dived for it for many weeks, he never recovered it.

Just yesterday—thirty years later, mind you—I went fishing at Widgiwagan. I caught a four pound bass. When I got the fish home and opened it up, what do you think I found inside of it? You guessed it! Two tickets to the Dempsey-Firpo fight.

Fleance Fat

Dear Fleance,

It certainly is a small world.

No Vote On Negro Question In Legislature; Charges Of 'Lie' Fly In Last Meet

By NEIL BASS

A resolution urging the administration to admit Negro students was in the hands of a student legislator last night, but an exodus of representatives prevented its introduction.

Also, student government Atty. General Daivd Reid said he would take Legislator Joel Fleishman to the Men's Honor Council because, Reid said, Fleishman told a lie about him.

EXODUS

The legislators, encouraged by Studdent Party floorleader Larry McElroy, left in sufficient numbers so as to cause adjournment for lack of a quorum.

Joel Fleishman stood at the rostrum while all but 20 of the legislators flooded through the doors. (There must be 26 legislators present before the body can transact business.)

According to McElroy, he and University Party Floorleader Jim Exum made an agreement at the UP caucus that they would "walk out" of the meeting to stop a vote on Fleishman's resolution.

Exum said he and McElroy agreed to defeat any action to suspend the rules, and thus allow the body to vote on the measure; but that he didn't agree beforehand to leave the meeting if it was introduced.

"We just went along with McElroy" after he and the others decided to "leave, however," Exum said.

McElroy and Ed Lipman (UP) had previously tried to move adjournment before Fleishman got a chance at the rostrum, but Fleishman leaped to his feet and got the floor over the protests of the SP floorleader.

Before the resolution incident, the solons had seen some controversial action over some "suggestion." Delegates that President Don Fowler had made to attend the National Students Assn. convention

Fleishman, in the thick of things all night, questioned the right of the student body president to recommend delegates.

He went on to say that Jim Turner, first vice chairman of the Carolinas-Virginia Region of the NSA, was left off Fowler's list of suggestions because of "political spite."

Atty-General David Reid, Fleishman said, admitted to him that Turner wasn't considered because of his opposition to Fowler during the campaign.

Reid said this was a "lie," and that he planned to take Fleishman before the Honor Council.

"I hope he will," Fleishman answered.

Whhn the time came for approval of Fowler's "official" appointments, the UP howled protests at the naming of Jim Holmes (SP) as Carolina Forum representitive for the president of the student body.

Exum, who is a member of the committee that recommended Holmes in the first place, explained his party's thumbing down Holmes by saying his party want-

N.C. School Art Exhibition Promotes Teaching, Production

By DON STAYHORN

The 18th Annual North Carolina School Exhibition, on display in Person Hall Art Gallery, will end Sunday.

Sponsored by the Dept. of Art and the Extension Division at UNC and the Departments of Art and Public Relations at Women's College in Greensboro, the exhibit alternates between UNC and WC. It will be held in Greensboro next year.

Statewide in representation, the show consists of the works of elementary schoolers from the first to the sixth grades.

Mrs. James Cooper Bland, instructor in the Dept. of Education at the Museum of Modern Art in New York City and judge of this year's exhibition, this week said, "I have tried to pick out paintings that were representative of children in North Carolina. The best from each school, if at all acceptable, was chosen . . ."

From 1,556 entries, 384 were chosen by Mrs. Bland to be in the show. Of these, 267 are paintings, 37 are textiles and 80 are ceramics.

In all, 117 schools over the state are represented in the show.

"The purpose of the exhibition," states a pamphlet, "is to promote the teaching of art and to encourage art production in the elementary schools of North Carolina."

In looking over the paintings, Mrs. Bland said, "We must remember that ideas are the important thing to children — not proportion.

"Teachers and parents often make the mistake of trying to diagnose a child's personality from his paintings . . . that is impossible."

As to the helpfulness of old paint sets and numbering sets for children, Mrs. Bland said, "I don't see what they have to do with art . . . These and coloring books prevent children from figuring out things for themselves . . . It confines them . . ."

Doors will be open from 9 to 12 a.m. and from 2 to 4:30 p.m. today, and from 2 to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Next year, it was announced, the exhibit will travel.

Amphoterothen Club Chooses & Initiates

The Amphoterothen Society, second oldest honorary society on the UNC campus, in secret ceremonies last night tapped eight new members.

Frank Warfen, junior from Snow Hill, past speaker of the Phi Assembly and student legislator; John Curtis, junior from Bessemer City, speaker-elect of the Phi; Charles Katzenstein, junior from New York City, clerk of the Honor Council and Phi member, and Jim Turner, junior from Winston-Salem, Di member and campus politican, were tapped into the honorary society near midnight last night.

Sophomores tapped into the society were Tom Lambeth, Winston-Salem, current chairman of the Carolina Forum and Publications Board and Di member; Stanley Shaw, member of the Di; Jim Exum, University Party floorleader in the Legislature, and Bob Harrington, Chairman of the Student Party and Di member.

The Amphoterothen Society, in which Thomas Wolf was a brother during his undergraduate years at UNC, was founded by Dr. J. G. DeRoulac Hamilton in 1912 in order to recognize the leading speakers of the campus.

The society meets each Wednesday afternoon at 4:44 p.m. and its 13 members discuss a topic named by the chairman at the start fo the meeting. The chairmanship rotates from week to week with the chairman keeping the topic of discussion secret until the meeting.

The only permanent position in the society is that of secretary. Lewis Brumfield has been secretary for this past year.

Last year's members were: Larry Addington, Tom Bennett, Lewis Brumfield, Norwood Bryan, Tom Creasy, Joel Fleishman, Gordon Forester, Don Geiger, Martin Jordan, Larry McElroy, Bev Webb, Dave Reid and Rollie Tillman.

Scholarships For Austrian Study Offered

Four scholarships for graduate study in Austria during 1955-56 are offered to American students by the Austrian government, according to an announcement by Kenneth Holland, president of the Institute of International Education, New York City.

May 31, 1955, is the closing date for the competition, which is open to unmarried American citizens.

The scholarships include eight monthly stipends of 2,600 Austrian schillings (approximately $100), enough to cover room and board as well as tuition and incidental expenses. One travel payment of 1.400 Austrian schillings (approximately $55) will be offered to each of four award winners. Grantees will be responsible for all other expenses including round-trip travel.

The awards may be used for study at an Austrian university or institution of higher learning in all fields, including history, social sciences, language, literature and other liberal arts subjects.

Eligibility requirements include:

(1) U. S. citizenship; (2) Bachelor's degree by date of departure (3) Demonstrated academic ability and capacity for independent study; (4) Good moral character personality and adaptability; (5 Proficiency in the German language, and (6) Good health.

Applications may be secured from the U. S. Student Department of the Institute of International Education, 1 East 67th Street, New York 21, New York.

Putnam Prize Deadline Is Coming Closer

The third annual Putnam Prize, a $2,000 award offered by Putnam's Sons publishing house, will be offered to all UNC undergraduates and graduate students for fiction or non-fiction work, accord to Miss Jessie Rehder of the English Dept.

Deadline for the competition will be July 1.

Judges for 1955 will be Paul Green, Pulitzer Prize winner and Chapel Hill author who has long been associated with the University; Prof. William Blackburn, who heads the creative writing program at Duke University, and Norman Mailer, author of the best selling The Naked and The Dead and other fiction.

Inquiries about the prize should be addressed to Miss Rehder at Box 350, Chapel Hill, to whom manuscripts may also be sent at any time.

Tillman Is Parker Prize '55 Winner

Rollie Tillman Jr., senior from Lake Wales, Fla., has been named receipient of this year's John J. Parker Jr. Award.

The award is annually presented to the member of the graduating class "who has demonstrated most clearly the highest qualities of leadership in perpetuating the spirit of honor and the process of student self-government," according to Roy Holsten, dean of student activities and chairman of the selection committee.

Holsten said Tillman's "work with the orientation program and the high school honor system program were particularly noteworthy."

The Parker award is given annually by Judge and Mrs. John J. Parker in memory of their son, John Parker Jr., class of 1937.

Kuralt Gets Abernethy Prize; Yack Praised

Charles Kuralt, past editor of The Daily Tar Heel, yesterday received word he is winner of the Ernest H. Abernethy Prize for distinctive work in student publications.

Kuralt, senior from Charlotte, was notified by Dean of Student Activities Roy Holsten. A committee, chaired by Holsten and appointed by Chancellor Robert House, made the award.

Abernethy, member of the class of 1922, established his award "to be presented to the student who is adjudged by a committee to have done the most distinctive work during the current year in the field of student publications," according to the University Record.

The award consists of a plaque and $50 in cash.

Last year's Abernethy winners were Rolfe Neill, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, and Miss Lib Moore, editor of the Yackety Yack.

Editors Cornell Wright and Miss Jackie Park of this year's Yackety Yack were notified they received special commendation for their work on the annual. Yackety Yacks were offered to students this week, and drew praise from many quarters.

Editor Kuralt is a member of the Order of the Grail, Order of the Golden Fleece and the Order of the Old Well.

Six Students Receive Other Various Awards

Six University students have received various awards, according to Dean of Awards E. L. Mackie.

Miss Marilyn Zager, senior from Greensboro, and Herb Browne, senior from Columbia, S. C., have been awarded the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Awards, given annually to one man and one woman who have best demonstrated an attitude of unselfish interest in the welfare of their fellowmen.

James Monteith, sophomore from Sylva, has been named to receive the Phi Beta Kappa Award, which is given by the local chapter of Phi Beta Kappa to the member of the rising junior class with the highest scholastic average during freshman and sophomore years.

The Archibald Henderson prize in Mathematics has been awarded to John Gwynn Jr., senior from Chapel Hill. The award is given annually to the undergraduate student judged by the Dept. of Mathematics as having demonstrated a high order of mathematical ability and shown the greatest promise of originality in the field.

Robert Pullman, junior from Durham, and Raymond Snipes, junior from Reidsville, have been awarded the Jessie Mai Petty Award. This award is given annually to the junior who, at the time of his election to Phi Beta Kappa, has the highest scholastic average in his class.

Two Dorms, Men's & Coed, May Rise If Bill Passes

A men's dormitory in the area of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital and a women's dorm are the new dorms which will probably be built if the bill authorizing the issuance of bonds for buildings dorms is passed by the North Carolina General Assembly, according to Jack Hudson, chairman of the Interdormitory Council's Dorm Improvements Committee.

Hudson said yesterday the Council on Student Affairs, before which he appeared yesterday to present student opinion on the new dorms, discussed the various possibilities for dorms and decided a men's dorm for medical, dental, pharmacy and public health students and a dorm for women are the ones most likely to be built.

Hudson said Claude Teague, University business manager, told the group the University Administration had told the state Legislature that from 700 to 800 spaces would be provided with the two million dollars which the bond issue would raise if the bill is passed.

According to Hudson, Teague also ruled out the possibility of building quarters for married students with the money. Hudson said that according to Teague the state Legislature has prohibited the building of any quarters for married students with the money. He said only domrs will be built if the bill passes.

Educational TV Goes Educational

After an acute budget cut and the release of several employees, the University television station seems ready at last to train its cameras and ideas on education.

WUNC-TV's operation up until this point has been characterized by a lack of emphasis on education and the huddling of many video minds before the station gained firm financial backing. Entertainment and information have been the touchstones of the educational station. And TV experts, rather than educators, have dominated operations.

According to a spring survey by the Joint Committee on Educational Television, the University station has broadcast 12.2 percent entertainment-information programs and only 10 percent cultural-religious. The greater portion of programs (66 percent) have been purely informational, with sports and public relations rounding out the schedule. Obviously, this type program schedule does little to educate.

Now WUNC-TV, still rocking in its financial boots, has announced plans for credit courses over television. Courses in solid geometry and floriculture are scheduled to begin next month from Raleigh, and two more will emanate from Chapel Hill about June 6.

Apparently, it took a budget cut to put WUNC-TV back on the truly educational path. And this is unfortunate. Those employees who resigned in the face of the budget cut have had to move their households; doubtlessly, they left with a bad view of Chapel Hill. Bringing in these people, most of whom were experts in television rather than education, was a mistake in the first place. Having them leave under such terms is even worse.

Now that education seems the genuine purpose of WUNC-TV, the University station can go beyond merely informing viewers. The gap between informing and educating is a wide one, and the station that spends most of its time informing is not performing its educational duties.

Professor Frank Baxter of the University of Southern California, who has gained TV network fame reading Shakespeare, recently warned the nation of expecting too much from informative television:

"Your television set is not a vending machine for higher learning. It can, at best, be an invitation to knowledge. That in itself is very much . . . But the coaxial cable alone will not pump culture into anyone's veins—child or adult. Despite what any educational theorist may say, one can't possibly grow up to be educated without wide reading . . ."

Such are the facts of educational television's life, and near fall, at the University. WUNC-TV now seems ready to educate, to stimulate reading and thinking. Its directors appear ready to quit being content with merely informing or entertaining. The Daily Tar Heel wishes them well in their venture in education—a venture that has for over 150 years occupied the entire University.

Poor, Poor Agamemnon

We hadn't meant to make our editorial, "A Double Hatchet For 'The' and 'Than,'" read like a certain well known Mickey Spillane novel with one of those wicked sex-reversals.

But you are right, dear readers. Whether we meant to or not, we Christine Jorgensoned Agamemnon. Our muse apologizes and informs us that as late as last semester (mortal time) she read The Oresteia and should have known better. Her noteworthy slip (as a result of which we have been digesting a big morsel of crow) resulted from a father-and-daughter confusion between Iphigenia and Agamemnon.

She is forgiven, but is under investigation as a security risk.

Dead Days On The Old, Old Chisholm Trail

J. A. C. Dunn

UNTIL NEXT FALL, Saturday afternoon was the last one we will spend sitting in the DTH office and whanging out editorial columns. We thought that perhaps, on that jolly day, the old jolly crew would gather in GM and make the four walls bulge with executive extracurricularity, or extracurricular executivity, or whatnot, and that we could join the madding throng and have a jolly old time. No so.

GM, last Saturday, was about as busy as the inside of a sarcophogus. No one was in the DTH offices except ourself and a blonde coed in the business office. We went and drooled lustfully at her, but she was busy with scissors and paper and disinclined for conversation. We couldn't find anyone else except the godhead in the Carolina Forum office, and he was engrossed in a combination of Kiss Me Kate and the Fleishman Papers.

THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT office looked as if it was in mourning. The furniture looked grave and grief-stricken, the blinds were down, the dust was falling; also no one was there. The Publications Office was closed as tight as the Publications Office can be closed, which is pretty tight. GMAB had gone out to lunch and wouldn't be back until September. The Carolina Quarterly office looked dark and introspective.

We discovered another blonde in the GM kitchen, but she lives there anyway, though she is charming to talk to. The TV room was resting on its 21-inch laurels and contained only a strange man reading a road map. The lounge was occupied by six widely-scattered people reading bedraggled newspapers, and the information office was notable only for the man behind the counter, who was leaning gloomily on a stack of Tarnations and contemplating his thumbnail. Even the Travel Agency, which is usually the vortex of a whirlwind of flying suitcases, people waving plane tickets, lost children, groggy voyagers who have slept a hundred miles beyond their stop, time tables and porter's steps, had retired gracefully behind chastely drawn shades.

THE ONLY SIGN of activity in the building came from the fleshpots in the basement, the manifestations thereof being the Tock of ping pong balls and the Click . . . thud . . . click . . . thud/thud . . . fcump of billiard balls.

We returned to the DTH office and found that in our absence 18 people had come in and started the afternoon's mad rush over, through, around and in the typwriters and teletype machines. Here we go again, we thought, and seriously considered just going out and drinking ourself quietly insensible.

THERE IS YET some security. In spite of General Motors and the AEC, God His wonder still doth perform. We heard the other day of a cat on the very brink of motherhood who, at the eleventh hour, experienced difficulties. Her owner rushed her to Dr. Vine, the local vet, who gave the cat a caesarian, penicillin, cortizone, and an oxygen tent, saved her, but had to inform her distraught owner that the kittens were dead. However, Puss insisted on having a go at the corpses anyway, and Dr. Vine happily reported that the next morning, after having been licked and batted and cared for all night by Puss, three of the four supposedly dead kittens were alive.

Dangerous Trends In U.S. Sanity, Security, Fair Play Principles

John Lord O'Brian

(John Lord O'Brian, distinguished constitutional lawyer, gave his views on security problems in two Godkin Lectures at Harvard. Here are excerpts from his second lecture.—Editors)

That the effectiveness of Communist propaganda has been grossly exaggerated and there is, as of today, much less danger than is commonly supposed appears now to have been definitely confirmed by recent investigations . . . In the Stouffer survey ("Communism, Conformity and Civil Liberties," Samuel A. Stouffer) less than one per cent of those of the general public interviewed volunteered any concern either about the internal Communist threat or the threat to civil liberties. Of the community leaders interviewed only 5 per cent volunteered concern about either of these issues. This does not mean that Americans are indifferent to the issues of communism or civil liberties. It does mean that the Communist danger is no longer directly felt as a personal tareat by Americans and that relatively few citizens have experienced any sense of threat to their freedom from that source. Only 3 per cent had ever known an admitted Communist and these were disposed to be tolerant. In short and contrary to widespread belief, the country is not now in the grip of hysteria or of emotional fear of Communism.

RED THREAT?

Assuming that these results are typical of the American people generily, as of today they certainly indicate that the general public are far les disturbed than are the politicians, so many of whom exploit these issues sensationally and for selfish purposes. And these results also indicate that our people are not in the least worried about communistic activities that would constitute any real threat to the maintenance of our institutions.

Inaccuracy in the current use of the label "Communist" goes far to explain why some Americans have exaggerated the susceptibility of their fellow citizens to Communist ideals. If we adopt the popular use of the term "Communist" for those whose views we dislike, there are no doubt a great many loyal American citizens who must be included within that infamous category and doubtless many more will be added in the future. But if all the American people could know and discuss all the implications of Communist idealogy it seems reasonable to expect that they would revise their estimate of the present Communist threat and conclude that in 1955 there is little danger that the ideology will spread further in the United States. Taking into consideration the hostil and shattering publicity which has been directed at Communist theory and technique in recent years, surely there cannot be more than a maladjusted handful who will actually surrender their souls to the Russian cause in the future. In the opinion of the American people, at least, the danger of possible espionage and sabotage certainly should not be the cause of any particular alarm. To some of us there is not only little danger of further contagion; there are also marked indications thin the tide of communism in this country is steadily sinking and that this has been true for some time.

REASONS OF STATE

It is a historical fact of special significance that the guarantees embodied in the Bill of Rights did not have their origin at one time or in some code Most of those relating to due process of law and aimed especially to insure fair trials originated one by one in rulings made by common law judges It is a fact of even greater significance that these and other guarantees were created to protect the individual against just such pressures as confront us today Some of them were created for the special purpose of protecting him against the same "Reasons of State" which are being asserted today to justify secret evidence, anonymous accusers, secret hearings etc.

PREFERRED POSITION

It is a fact of utmost significance that the Supreme Court has established the First Amendment in a preferred position above all other provisions of the Bill of Rights Historically it is definitely established that the guarantees protecting the liberties of the citizen which they embodied were in essence originally the result of religious conviction. As Dean Pound and many other commentators have emphasized, there was in the seventeenth century a natural affinity between the Puritan principles of morality and the common law. Many of these pringious orgin and were taken over and embodied in the common law.

Upon reviewing all the policies and procedures affecting the mental attitudes of citizens, it cannot well be denied that our government officials have embarked on a fatuous policy which in effect is aiming to guide and constrain citizens as well as aliens in the exercise of liberties guaranteed to them by the First Amendment and the other provisions of the iBll of Rights.

Another important development showing how far we have departed from fundamental constitutional principles is shown by the neglect of the presumption of innocence which for so long has been the distinctive characteristic in the administration of justice among English-speaking peoples. Few persons seem to realize that in security cases the accused person does not have the protection of this age-old presumption of innocence. On the contrary, he is confronted with accusations and the burden is upon him to clear himself by refuting these accusations.—oftentimes, of course, in ignorance of secret evidence furnished by anonymous informers. In fact, if there is any presumption recognized in this field, it would seem to be presumption of gailt. As I have said, the present executive order requires an affirmative finding that employment shall be clearly consistent with national security. And this qualification is generally interpreted to mean that every doubt must be resolved in favor of the government.

Too Much Emotion

Editors:

For the past few days, the editorial page of the Tar Heel has been concerned largely with a discussion, pro and con, about the segregation issue. There has been little reason employed by either side in this discussion. One should think that in a great University ALL discussion would be reasoned, unemotional. Not so, however, in connection with segregation. One side writes of "the Mau Mau State" and "Black Superiority." The other, considering itself to be influenced by Divine Guidance, writes about Christian ethics and freedom and equality. The fact is that this nation is not headed toward "Black Superiority." Nor is it true that the Bible provides an answer to this problem; because, as in any document of its kind, one can prove any argument one wishes, simply by referring to the Bible.

I am a liberal. I believe that segregation is wrong; I do NOT however, believe that the NAACP is all right. (In my opinion it is merely a Negro Klan, containing too many rabble-rousers). I believe that segregation is wrong because it denies equal protection UNDER THE LAW to every citizen of this country.

We are now faced with the problem of whether or not to end segregation; rather we are faced with the problem of WHEN to end it. The law has been decided — whether by Yankees or not makes no difference — and we must obey the law. (The University Administration has evidently decided that it does not need to abide by the law . . . at least, not right now.)

Is equal protection of the law extended to a Negro who is found guilty of rape — in a court of law — because he "leered" at a white woman, who was standing on the opposite side of a field, obviously not a safe distance from this man?

Is equal protection of the law extended to a group of suburban Chicago Negroes who have stones thrown at them and their homes, who have crosses burned on their front yards?

Is a Negro given a public education equal to that of a white person, when it is doubtful that the master's degree of the Negro teacher is equal to a bachelor's degree of the white teacher?

So you say, (heir schools are as good as ours. Well, what good is the physical plant of a school, if that school doesn't turn out educated people? We might just as well have never built the school in the first place.

No, The Negro is not given equal protection under the law. That's all I want to give him.

Now, let us ALL (including you, Mr. Kraar and Mr. Yoder) be a whole lot less emotional in this. No one will deny that it's a tough problem. But emotion never successfully settled anything.

Which Side Of Mason and Dixon?

Editors:

. . . I read the Tar Heel. I am getting sick of people saying that Ron Levin is a Southerner. He is originally from New Jersey. If you don't believe this just do a little investigating. He is not fooling anybody. The truth of the matter is he carries a right big chip on his shoulder and has a very bad inferior complex if you ask me. And plenty of people feel the same way about this big mouth little Yankee Southerner.

Keep 'Em Out

Editors:

I wish to congratulate our Board of Advisors on their ability to keep the negro out of our university in spite of the recent Supreme Court decision. If we find that we are successful in keeping them out, I think that our next step should be to keep all Jewish boys out of the University. Think what a boom to our Democratic school system this would be. On the long range plan I think we should decide next on limiting Italians, then Greeks, and from there — Heaven only knows what minority groups we shall be able to keep out. After we finish with minority groups, there are several majority groups that I should like to recomend we keep out of our wonderful college. I graduate in one year, so I don't think I will be in any danger of being asked to resign because of my German ancestry, but I may have trouble getting my children into Chapel Hill. By then it will be restricted to sons and daughters of the Board of Advisors.

Russia: Glad U.S. Claws Clipped?

Gerald Johnson
WAAM, Baltimore

It seems to me that in recent propaganda from Moscow there is a note of quiet triumph that I do not like. Russia has suddenly become reasonable, perhaps too reasonable. She has signed a peace treaty with Austria. She professes to be ready for a conference at the highest level. She hints at terminating East Germany, and revives again the proposition of general disarmament.

Yet on the surface nothing has occurred to change the situation from what it was two years ago, when Russia was raving like a madman against the United States. Are we to assume that sweet reasonableness has suddenly imbued the Russian spirit and caused her to renounce her ambition to dominate the world?

Well, I suppose it could be; but if that is it then we are seeing a miracle by comparison with which the dividing of the waters of the Red Sea was a commonplace occurrence. I am not willing to risk a bet on the miracle theory, especially as there is another explanation, less comfortable, but more plausible.

RUSSIA RELIEVED

It seems to me that Russia gives every indication of being greatly relieved because she is persuaded that the United States' claws are clipped. We are isolated, not by Russian diplomatic skill, but by our own fumbling and blundering. We have created such suspicion and uncertainty among our allies that if Russia should attack, not across Europe but across the Arctic, it is far from certain that we could count on concerted action against her. Even our airbases around the Communist perimeter might be denied us, not by government action but by revolt of the people against the Americans.

In the last two or three years we have rarely missed an opportunity to create distrust and dislike of us among our former friends. It is not so much our evil acts as our insensate acts that have reduced our prestige to the vantage point. As far as moral effect is concerned, Colin and Senate were worth a division apiece to the Russians and McLeod was worth an army corps. The McCarran Act was a repudiation of all our high-sounding professions, and the Southeast Asia Pact, not unreasonable in itself, was formed in a way that alienates most of Southeast Asia.

From the standpoint of our allies we seem to have intrusted foreign affairs to inexperienced and tactless men whose ruling passion is a paralyzing fear of McCarthy. People will not willingly follow such leadership when their very existence is at stake, or even when the stakes are less tremendous.

INDONESIA—THE ANSWER

In 1950, when the Korean war broke out, Truman and Acheson could command the instant support of every member of the United Nations except the Soviet bloc; and nineteen of them actually sent military assistance. If the Chinese attacked Formosa tomorrow, does any rational man believe that Eisenhower and Dulles could rally any such support? Indonesia is the answer.

Yet we have not changed our foreign policy in any important particular. The principles we proclaim are still the principles proclaimed by Roosevelt and Vandenburg many years ago, which then obtained the enthusiastic approbation of the free nations. The only change is a change of [illegible] but it seems to have been enough to persuade the Russians that the solidarity of the democracies has been cracked, so they can relax and take it easier.

As between the President and General Ridgway, no prudent civilian will take sides on the merits of the case. The proper size of the army is a technical problem on which none but specialists have a right to speak. But General Ridgway was right to resign. For there is more involved than merely the strategic decision: there is also the disciplinary article.

HE QUIT

Ridgway did resign, and it is to his credit, even if he was right on the original point, for in the army instant, whole-hearted obedience to orders is more important than making sure that the orders are ideal. As it is, Eisenhower now exercises command, and even if he should be proved wrong in this instance, that is not as dangerous as it would be to permit the slightest doubt as to where the final authority rests. It is a pity that the President can't see the value of that in political as well as in military affairs.

In the last Congress Senator Johnson, of Texas, gained a reputation as a smooth operator, but he never did anything smoother than his speech Friday in which he pointed out that the political "cold war" that the President predicted in the last campaign has in fact developed: but it is not between the Democrats and the President, it is between the President and the Knowland wing of the Republican party.

GOP VIOLENCE

Johnson, although he is the Democratic leader, has never assailed Eisenhower as vigorously as has Knowland, the Republican leader; and no Democrat has said anything against the President that is as violent as some of Senator McCarthy's remarks. In the pinches time and again the Democrats have delivered the votes that saved the President's program from defeat; in a Senate dominated by Knowland, Jenner and McCarthy, Eisenhower would have had no chance whatever.

Yet the President has made not the slightest effort to eliminate Knowland from a political position analogous to Ridgway's military position. It is true that he cannot command the Senate as he can command the army, but it is not true that he has no power whatever. At one time or another practically every President has faced a similar situation, and the strong ones, by applying political pressure discreetly, have restored party discipline, at least on the surface.

The weak ones have let the situation get out of hand, and the result, in the long run, has proved ruinous to the party. If Eisenhower doesn't pull his own team together before next year, he will go into the campaign like Braddock marching on Ford Duquesne, and the chances are that the Democratic redskins will get him.

GRANT . . . UNC Great Returns

ACC Champs, Grant Play Here Saturday

Tennis enthusiasts will be in for a treat here Saturday afternoon when Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant tangles with the top Atlantic Coast Conference tennis players on the Varsity courts.

Grant, former U. S. Davis Cup star, eleven-time winner of Southern championships, one of the top ranking U. S. players for several years, and the greatest collegiate player in UNC history, will meet ACC champ Tommy Bradford at 2:30, and following that will team with ACC runner-up Herbe Browne against Pete Green and Bobby Payne, ACC doubles runner-up team. Browne and Bradford won the ACC doubles title.

Grant, now 45, is still continuing his tennis feats. Only three years ago at Memphis he copped his eleventh Southern title, amazing the tennis world by whipping players twently years his junior in 100-plus degree heat.

He came to UNC with the amazing "tennis class" of 1929, and played under present coach John Kenfield. Kenfield, in picking an all-time Carolina tennis team, ranked Grant ahead of now-famous Vic Seixas as a collegiate player.

The exhibition here is being sponsored by the North Carolina State Tennis Assn.

The SP objected to Holmes' refusal because, it insisted, a bad "precedent" was being set; and the UP was interfering with presidental powers.

Gravitte, Zachary Top UNC Hitting

Connie Gravitte, now a New York Yankee farm hand, won the official battling title for Carolina Tar Heels this season with a .356 average, according to final statistics released today.

Gravitte, senior centerfielder, banged 31 hits in 87 times at bat, and led the team in home runs with seven and doubles with six. Afield, he handled 72 chances with only one error, a bobble of a ground single in the final game against Duke.

Tom Zachary, whose late season hitting splurge sparked the Tar Heels to eight wins in their last nine starts, ended the season with a .380 medial, but was only at bat fifty times, twelve short of the number required to win the official batting title. Zachary broke into the starting line-up with four hits in five trips midway in the season and continued his hefty hitting the rest of the way. He played in the outfield in his first few games, then was switched to first base. At the season's end he was hitting in clean-up spot for the Tar Heels.

Chevrolet "Turbo-Fire V8"!

This is the engine that's writing a whole new chapter in the book of automobile performance records. This is the engine that has stock car timers doing a "double take" at their stopwatches wherever experts gather to compare the abilities of the 1955 cars.

For example, in the recent NASCAR* stock car competition at Daytona Beach, Florida, Chevrolet literally ran away from every other car in its class—and a raft of others besides. In the one-mile straightaway run for low-priced cars, the first two places—and six of the first ten—went to Chevrolets. And in acceleration runs from a standing start against all comers, the Motoramic Chevrolet beat all other low-priced cars—and every high-priced car except one!

What's behind this blazing performance? A compact honey of a V8 that only the world's leading producer of valve-in-head engines can build. Chevrolet's new "Turbo-Fire V8".

It puts a new kind of fun in your driving life. You're in charge of 162 high-spirited horsepower—or if you're looking for even more excitement, the new "Super Turbo-Fire V8" (optional at extra cost) puts 180 h.p. under your toe!

Pick the one you'd rather have fun with, then come in and get behind the wheel. You'll see why the Motoramic Chevrolet is showing its heels to everyone else on the road!

Four Public Health Educators Return From Conferences Throughout Nation

Four public health educators from UNC have recently returned from attending conferences in distant parts of the nation and conducting special professional study sessions.

Dr. Rosemary M. Kent, associate professor of public health education, attended the New Orleans conference of the Southern Section of the American Public Health Assn., where she was installed as a member of the Governing Council for 1955-56.

A frequent participant in regional health conferences, she also spoke before the Durham Woman's Club at its meeting this week.

Dr. Eunice N. Tyler, professor of public health education, was a consultant at a gathering of state directors of health education, who met in Spring Mill, Ind., for a four-day conference. She also served as consultant for the last meeting of the South Carolina Health Education Division, held in Columbia.

The head of the Health Education Dept., Dr. Lucy S. Morgan, was in Miami, Fla., recently for the Southeastern Adult Education Assn. meeting, of which she was elected vice-president. She has in the past served on the Executive Board and program committee.

COBB DORMITORY PARTY SCHEDULED FOR TOMORROW NIGHT; WC GIRLS COMING

The Cobb dormitory party which was originally scheduled for May 13 will be held Saturday night, according to a Cobb spokesman yesterday.

The spokesman said that the Cobbites have invited 100 girls from Woman's College to attend the party.

The party will begin at 8:30 and will end at 11:30, said the spokesman, adding that it will be held in the social room of Cobb.

Full Trustee Meet Set For Monday

The full Board of Trustees will meet Monday evening to discuss the controversial tuition raise recommendation.

There is also a strong possibility that the question of admitting Negro students to UNC next fall will be brought up at the meeting.

At its last meeting, the Executive Committee of the UNC Board of Trustees voted to recommend to the full board that it raise the tuition for non-residents.

The Joint Appropriations Committee of the General Assembly decided on May 6 to increase the tuition for out-of-staters by $140. This would mean that residents of North Carolina would have to pay $500 per year tuition.

Scholarship holders, it was decided, would be exempted from the increased tuition.

The Legislature did not approve the raise in fees. However, appropriations to the University were figured on the basis of increased tuition. Ths makes the increase a certainty.

Monday the full board, composed of over 100 members, will have to decide one way or another. They must either approve of the increase or try another way to raise the $88,245 asked by the state Legislature.

Chancellor House, in a January Administration policy report, stated any increase in student fees would make the University "more restricted to the privilege class.

"If at Chapel Hill we ever cease to be University for all the people," he said, "we will have forfeited one of the fundamental ideals of the University."

GM DIRECTOR JIM WALLACE
. . . why not retain the present staff?

Just who will direct Graham Memorial next fall will depend on results of a Sunday meeting of the student union's Board of Directors.

Current GM Director Jim Wallace, whose term ends in September, told the group yesterday he is "not a candidate for the permanent directorship," although he would accept the post on a temporary basis.

A personnel committee, appointed to recommend a temporary director, reported it could not make a decision until it interviewed "one other person." Bob Young, chairman of the committee, said four alternatives lay before the board: Hire a new, temporary director from outside the University, retain Wallace and staff, promote Asst. Director Jim McIntyre to temporary director or hire a student or some other person presently affiliated with the University.

Young said an extra meeting would be required to decide on the temporary director. After some objections by Joel Fleishman and Ed Yoder, the group agreed to meet Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

In making his bid for the post of temporary director, Wallace declared:

"Of all the persons considered for the temporary directorship, I am the only one who is not a candidate for the permanent directorship . . . Therefore I think it would be the best choice to retain the present staff. This would ensure continuity. I believe that Mr. McIntyre and I could make more progress than ever before.

"I don't think Mr. McIntyre should be temporary director. This would mean GM would be operating on half staff and that a candidate for permanent director would be on the inside . . . I resigned effective this fall because I felt that a new permanent director would be here . . . I predicate my case on my past 22 months service."

A budget, totaling $46,290, for the coming year was approved—the only change being an additional $100 "to replace ping pong balls."

NAACP Official's Letter Asks Gray For Assistance

By FRED POWLEDGE

An official of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has asked University President Gordon Gray to "take a strong forthright stand and reverse the act and deed" of the University's refusal to admit three Negro students as undergraduates.

The official, C. O. Pearson of Durham, is chairman of the Legal Redress Committee of the North Carolina NAACP, and is legal representative for the three students, all graduating seniors at a Durham high school.

Pearson's letter, three pages long, was mailed to Consolidated University President Gray this week. A copy of the letter was made available to The Daily Tar Heel yesterday.

The three students, according to Pearson, are Ralph and Leroy Frasier and John L. Brandon. Pearson has said he will take his case to federal court if the University and the Board of Trustees refuses to admit the Negroes.

Pearson quoted a letter he said he received from Director of Admissions Roy Armstrong in which Armstrong was alleged to have told the three students "the trustees of the University have not changed the policy of admission of Negro students to the University. Negroes are eligible to make application to come to the University for graduate and professional study not offered at a Negro college in North Carolina. Negroes are not eligible to make application for admission to the undrgraduate divisions of the University."

The letter from Armstrong, said Attorney Pearson, "seems to be a studied attempt to be discourteous in referring to the applicants by their first names. I am certain that business correspondence emanating from your institution does not usually follow this form." Armstrong's letter, said Pearson, addressed the three Negroes as "Dear Leroy and Ralph (andJohn):"

Pearson said he felt Armstrong's "poaition is not only contrary to the law as revealed by the recent cases decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, but also it is not in keeping with the type of leadership which a great University should provide for the guidance of its state and community in the development of justice and human relations."

The NAACP official said he felt the University's position, as expressed in Armstrong's letter, "is untenable either upon legal, moral or spiritual grounds. Surely a great University such as yours will not use its tremendous prestige and influence to spearhead a fight against citizens of North Carolina who are attempting merely to secure rights and opportunities granted to them by the Constitution of the United States."

Pearson said he believed "the great majority of the students are quite willing to accept qualified Negroes as fellow studnets. It is interesting to note in this respect that the thinking of the student body, the members which are directly affected, is far ahead of that of the policymakers of the University, assuming that Mr. Armstrong's statement does reflect the true policy of the Board of Trustees."

Consolidated University President Gray said yesterday he had received the letter. Gray said he had not replied. Otherwise, he had no comment.

Dorm Building Bill Is Expected To Pass

The bill authorizing the Boards of Trustees of six state schools to issue bonds for the purpose of building new dormitories was approved on its second reading in the state Senate yesterday.

The bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives on May 18, is scheduled to have its third and final Senate reading Monday night, at which time it is expected to be enacted into law.

The bill authorizes the Board of Trustees of the University of North Carolina, of East Carolina College, of Appalachian State Teachers College and of West Carolina College to issue bonds for " the purpose of acquiring or constructing" dormitories. The maximum worth of the bonds for dorms here may not exceed $2,000,000, according to the bill.

The bill, if passed, will allow the Board of Trustees to "increase the rentals for the facilities furnished by any existing dormitories . . . to provide, to the extent necessary, additional funds to liquidate in full any revenue bonds issued under this Act."

The bill also calls for an increase in the appropriations of three of the institutions so that "such increases in dormitory rentals above present levels . . . which were anticipated for the purpose of decreasing appropriations made for the next biennium may, as may be necessary, be applied or the interest and principal of revenue bonds" which would be issued under the bill. The increase for UNC under the bill would be $81,000 for each year of the next biennium.

According to Jack Hudson chairman of the Interdormitory Council's Dorm Improvements Council, who apeared before the Council on Student Affairs on Friday to discuss the new dorms there are two types of dorms which will probably be built if the bill is passed. A men's dorm in the area of the North Carolina Memorial Hospital and women's dorm are the two dorms which the Council decided would probably be built with the money. Hudson said the Legislature has prohibited the building of any quarters for married students with the money. According to Hudson, the men's dorm in the hospital area would house medical, dental pharmacy or public health students.

WUNC Picks New Staffers

WUNC, the University's FM radio station, has announced staff appointments for the coming year. Seven students have been named to top jobs, according to Carl Venters, outgoing assistant manager.

The new appointments include, Miss Anne Ryan Thomas, program manager; Arnold Culbreth, operations manager; Don Patterson, chief announcer;

Phil Goodman, chief radio engineer Tom Spain, news director; David Stezer continuity director, and Miss Donna Aschcraft, music director.

The staffers will take over their positions next fall when the station resumes broadcasting.

University Art Department's Archie Daniels Dies At 72

Archie P. Daniels, 72, well-known and loved campus personality, was found dead yesterday afternoon.

Daniels, for the past 16 years assistant to the curator of Pearson Hall Art Gallery, went into retirement last summer. At the time of his retirement Chancellor Robert B. House conferred upon him the degree of "Honorary Curator Emeritus of Person Hall Art Gallery" in recognition of his 15 years of devoted service to the Dept. of Art.

Daniels had been painting 40 years had never had an art lesson John Allcott, head of the University Art Dept., said "Archie Daniels is one of the very few people in the Art Department who can sell his paintings."

Daniels, often termed a "primitive painter," was born in Person County, one of seven children. He is survived by one sister. Funeral arrangements were not complete last night. Cause of death was not known last night.

Time For That Last Minute Cramming

Danny Gryder, senior from Biltmore, above, is doing what most UNC students will be engaged in during the next two weeks—cramming. For Gryder it is the last time; for many others, there are more sets of exams ahead to cram for.

Reid, Fleishman Find Agreement About 'Lie'

David Reid, student body attny. general, and student Legislator Joel Fleishman settled their case outside of the Honor Council yesterday.

Both made statements yesterday concerning Fleishman's statement in Legislature Thursday night that Reid had previously told him Jim Turner, first vice-chairman of the Carolinas-Virginia Region of the NSA, was left off the student body president's list of NSA convention delegation suggestions because of his opposition to Don Fowler during the presidential campaign.

Reid said Thursday night Fleishman's statement was a "lie," and that he planned to take him before the Honor Council.

Yesterday, however, both parties made statements to the effect that Fleishman's statement had been made due to a misunderstanding between the two, and that the matter would be dropped outside of the Honor Council.

Reid's statement said, "I believe Joel when he says the matter resulted from a misunderstanding. I also know how easy it is to exaggerate statements when debate becomes heated."

"Dave and I have discussed our conversation, and there is now no doubt that the disagreement resulted from both of us misinterpreting what was said," said Fleishman's statement.

After Meet, Letters

Following the tempestuous final Student Legislature meeting Thursday night five campus politicians rushed down to the Tar Heel office and composed letters to the editors.

Jim Holmes, recently rejected appointee to the Carolina Forum, wrote:

"The University Party, with the exception of Larry Walker, shocked me and hurt me more deeply than any of them realize. I have worked with the Forum, even though not a member. I am scheduled, as publicity director, to go with the chairman this summer on his speaker-procuring trips.

"I am sure that the individual members of the University Party would not have voted the way they did had they not been forced by Jim Exum, floorleader of the University Party."

SP Chairman Bob Harrington commented in his letter:

"I am very upset and disturbed by the noxious and arbitrary actions that were committed by the University Party majority in the Student Legislature last night. We feel that the UP acted in very bad faith and used very bad judgment in their selfish actions in that body."

Referring to what he calls a "very serious partisan attack upon the structure of the Forum," Carolina Forum Chairman Tom Lambeth wrote:

"It is true that all the members of the Forum are members of the SP. We did not realize this until Thursday night. It would have made no difference however . . . The Forum has always demanded that partisan politics never enter

Handbook Staff Is Selected

The staff of the 1955 Carolina Handbook was announced yesterday by Editor-in-Chief Curtiss Daughtry.

Assisting Daughtry in administrative posts will be Wally Satterfield, managing editor; Graham Ramsey, business manager; Lenore Ebeling, executive secretary; Bill Kane, photography editor, and Eddie Crutchfield, advertising manager.

Section editors are Charles Mack Johnson, "Student Government;" Wally Satterfield, "Hi There;" Gene Maloney, "Studies;" Ed Crutchfield, "Sports;" Faye Abell, "Carolina Coeds;" Charles Daniels, "Publications;"

Jack Lewis, "Home at Carolina;" Everett Kendrick, "Your University;" Bill Oakley, "Your YMCA;" Ron Oldenburg, "Student Union;" Clyde Alexander, "Chapel Hill;" David Mundy, "Extras at Carolina."

Higher Education Board To Coordinate Schools

The State Board of Higher Education, which was legislated into existence by the North Carolina General Assembly Thursday, is the result of a report made and the legislation recommended earlier in the year by the Commission on Higher Education.

The board will "coordinate functions and financing of all state-supported institutions of higher education," according to the act, "with powers to determine general functions and activities of each institution, to determine types of degrees to be awarded by each, to inspect each institution biennially . . . to prescribe uniform practices and policies to be followed by each institution" and "to make over-all plan for development of a system of higher education."

According to the act, the board must prepare biennial reports for the Governor, the General Assembly and the institutions.

Du Pler, Creasy Named Miss & Mr. Alumni

Miss Carol Du Pler, from Davidson, and Tom Creasy, of Gretna, Va., both seniors, have been named by a special student-faculty committee as "Miss Alumna" and "Mr. Alumnus" of the about-to-graduate class of 1955.

Certificates are awarded annually by the General Alumni Assn. to the two members of the graduating class who in the course of their campus careers best represented "those qualities which symbolize loyalties of the 'good alumna' and the 'good alumnus.'"

The two seniors will be honored at the annual Alumni Luncheon to be held on Monday, June 6 in Lenoir Hall and to which all seniors and their parents are invited.

Committee members making the selections are: Dean Ernest L. Mackie, Roy Holsten, Miss Lila Ponder, Betty Goodwin, Bill Calvert, Jackie McCarthy and Raymond Taylor.

They Only Serve Who Stay & Vote

Gather round, younger statesmen, and you shall hear the tale of how students govern themselves when they have a government.

The rules are simple. If a legislator opposes a measure, he speaks and votes against it; if he supports it, he does the opposite. Such are the ground rules.

But Thursday night the majority of student legislators decided, since they opposed a resolution urging the University to admit Negro students, the best thing to do was walk out.

Thus, cheered on by Student Party Floor-leader Larry McElroy and University Party [illegible] Jim Exum, all but 20 legislators exited.

No one denies the Legislature's right to disagree with any measure presented to it, but walking out on its obligation to govern is inexcusable. The students who walked out—instead of standing up for what they believed right—betrayed those who elected them. They walked out on their duty, and it's disgraceful.

Regardless of the merits of this particular resolution, the two leaders of this mass legislative exodus—McElroy and Exum—have no right to hold office. Since they walked out on their obligation, why should they be allowed to hold a position of honor and responsibility?

Even the ranks of younger statesmen have no room for cowards.

Time For Light In The GM Situation

Members of the GM Board of Directors went to yesterday's meeting expecting to hear a recommendation for someone to fill the temporary directorship of the student union.

Instead, the personnel committee, appointed ten days ago by President Fowler, asked the committee for a one-day extension. The committee said it wished to interview another applicant for the position. The committee offered, in The Daily Tar Heel's opinion, very shaky grounds for not having made a choice. The extension means another meeting of the Board at a time when student members will be pressed with preparation for exams.

At the same time, present Director Jim Wallace made clear his candidacy to continue in the position until the permanent director can be appointed. He is not, he said, a candidate for the permanent directorship.

The Daily Tar Heel is on record for Mr. Wallace's retention as temporary director. We still are. He has served excellently in the position over the past two years, and we see no logical reason why he should not be kept until the to-be-chosen permanent director takes office.

Does the Board's personnel committee object to the retention of Mr. Wallace? If so, it should draw up a bill of particulars why he should not stay on.

Graham Memorial is a student union. The students on the personnel committee are charged with recommending on the basis of experience of the applicants, their capability, and practicality. The selection of the temporary and permanent directors—whoever they may be—is a matter of concern to all students who pay fees to finance GM. By no means should such selection be made in shadowy circumstances by a select group. All are involved; all should have a voice; and the decision should be up to the Board.

The matter so far has been shrouded in darkness. It is time for light.

IF SOMERSET MAUGHAM hadn't been so greedy as to use "The Summing Up" as a title, we would grab it ourself (greedily) and shoot it into the heading in boldface type. However, Mr. Maugham having already taken the liberty, the best we can do now is admit that we are using his title as a base for this, the last column, which we intend as a sort of September-May summing up.

AS FAR AS student government is concerned, we have spent the majority of the year scoffing politely at what the reporters so grandly call "the solons," and wondering when those titled dignitaries would see the light and stop piddling around trying to convince everyone including themselves that the tasks they were engaged in were horribly important. But we changed our mind a few weeks ago as a result of a conversation we had during the entirety of which we remained on the listening end, and as a result of which we saw student government in a new light.

Student legislators often look rather juvenile—like little children pretending to put out a three-alarm fire with a garden hose. But this is not actually the case. The "solons" are trying to do something worthwhile, something they really believe in, something that will make their mark on campus in a beneficial way. We feel inclined to laugh at them from time to time; but simultaneously we admire them.

OUR RECOLLECTION OF dorm life this year is a series of confused images involving blessed sleep, grisly study, freshmen with a buzz on, broken glass in the corridors, snowballs (one or two with stones in them), untold quantities of noise (most of it unwelcome), a few pleasant parties, and a complete absence of any feeling of being able to make a home out of one's room. We are sorry if this dashes cold water in the face of higher powers who envision dorm life as being something more sublime than the above, but let us bite the bullet. Not all cake has icing, in fact some of it is downright stale.

THE CAROLINA PLAYMAKERS, WUNC, ditto TV, The Daily Tar Heel, the Carolina Quarterly, Tarnation, the Yackety-Yack, the UNC Symphony Orchestra, and all the other purveyors of the arts, have led as far as we can tell, fairly normal lives during the past nine months. Sometimes up, sometimes down, always the criticism and the praise coming from completely different quarters, always the questions of money and staff, always—well, need we go on? Need we say that these activities are usually competent but not dynamic, occasionally brilliant and outstanding, and that the difference between mere competence and brilliance is, most of the time, a difference of opinion?

THE ADMINISTRATION BAFFLES us. We have nothing to say about them because, like women's, their inner workings are a province into which our understanding has not yet penetrated.

THIS is by no means a complete summary. Let us just say that it has been a good year: that for some reasons we are glad it is not the last, and that for other reasons we wish it were. Unless the Army suddenly develops an insatiable craving for 97-pound weaklings, we shall return in the fall. If anyone discovers gold during the summer, we wish they would let us know first. Dr. Howell's Fine Grapes

By Sen. Sam J. Ervin Jr.

When I was a student at Chapel Hill, Dr. G. Vernon Howell, a football hero of an earlier era, was Dean of the School of Pharmacy. Like so many of the members of the faculty of that day, Dr. Howell was an institution in himself.

It was customary at that time for all the students to congregate at the Post Office about noon to get their mail, which was brought into Chapel Hill by Captain Smith's little train. On a date near the end of a summer session, a fellow student, whom I shall call Bill Blank, met me at the Post Office and moaned what he assumed to be his impending fate in this wise.

"I stayed at the summer school for the purpose of passing off a course and qualifying for my degree. I'm afraid I'm going to be shipped before getting my degree because of an event which occurred last night. I visited Dr. Howell's grape arbor just behind his house for the purpose of stealing some grapes. As I was engaged in this act, Dr. Howell came out his back door. I forthwith fled the premises. After I arrieved at my room, I discovered that several letters addressed to me had fallen from my pocket. I am satisfied that I dropped those letters under Dr. Howell's grape arbor, that they will be found there, and that I will be shipped for stealing Dr. Howell's grapes."

Just as Bill made this confession to me, I observed Dr. Howell coming directly toward us. When he reached us, Dr. Howell stopped and made this statement to Bill: "Mr. Blank, somebody came to my premises last night to steal some of my grapes. I discovered this morning that before he attempted to perpetrate the theft on me, he had stolen some correspondence from you."

Thereupon, Dr. Howell reached into his pocket and pulled out several letters addressed to Bill with a statement to the effect that he had found them that morning under his grape arbor.

Dr. Howell thereupon delivered the letters to Bill, who was too dumbfounded even to thank him for so doing. Dr. Howell then turned away and walked off about five steps. He suddenly turned around, looked at Bill, and said: "By the way, Mr. Blank, if you like grapes, come down to my place and get some. I have some mighty fine grapes."

This was not the only occasion on which Dr. Vernon Howell disclosed that he possessed the thing which Solomon craved above all else—an understanding heart.

Unswing In Foreign Affairs

By Doris Fleeson

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower is going to get a chance to do all that he thinks best to push that upswing in foreign affairs about which he spoke last week.

There is very definitely a feeling in Washington that a decisive moment has been reached in the struggle against Communist imperialism which has been the dominant factor in foreign policy since World War II ended. It is true that not everybody shares President Eisenhower's optimism that the Reds have reached a high water mark from which they are bound to recede.

The President's good fortune is that the pessimists are largely included in his own party. They are led by Senate Leader Knowland, who inherited the Taft mantle by motion of the late Senator himself. But Senator Knowland is Minority, not Majority, Leader and he is not wholly sympathetic to the minority within the minority that he commands.

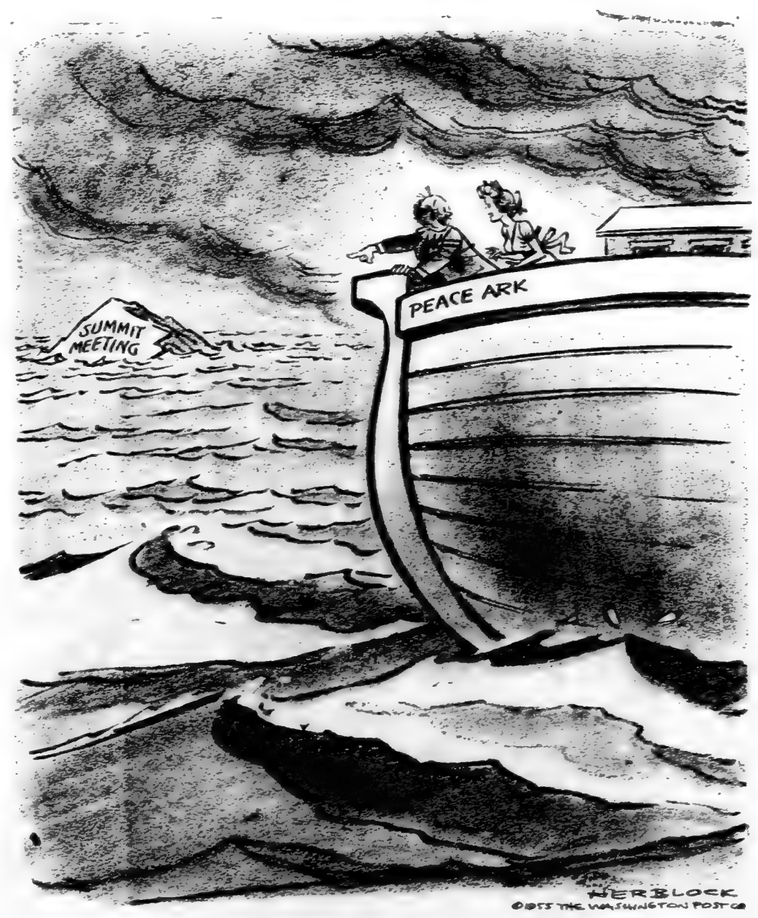
WEAK WING

The result is that the GOP vided. In contrast, the Demright wing is weakened and diocratic majority of the Senate and House is unified and sympathetic to the President's efforts to return to normal diplomatic negotiations in the Far East.

Politically the President could not be in a better position. He commands a majority on foreign policy so long as he sticks to the anti-war thesis. Even the Republicans who view his present optimism with alarm realize that he is their party's principle asset and wish him to run again next year. They cannot possibly wage an all-out fight against him; it is too risky a proposition.

The Democrats are scarcely less unhappy about the situation in which they find themselves. They have won almost every election since 1952 and they boast of a collection of vigorous, young articulate leaders.

TRUTH



They say with truth that had President Truman and his Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, proposed cease-fire negotiations with Red China and made a pen pal of Soviet Marshal Zhukov, the Republicans would have talked of impeachment. Nevertheless, Democrats have never favored a so-called hard policy in Asia nor been ready to risk another world war in order to put Chiang Kai-shek back on the Chinese mainland. President Eisenhower is doing what they would have wanted a Democratic President to do and so they are supporting him.

The Democratic leadership of Congress is preparing to end the session in mid-July, earlier if possible. This means that the President will be in almost undisputed control of American policy during the last half of this year. His political critics can speak up, of course, but it will not be the same thing as having the floor of the Senate or House with the press galleries hanging on every word.

It is of course a great challenge to the President. He can hardly influence the course of events unless he is on hand, watching for opportunities and quick to exploit openings.

In other years he has seized upon the Congressional adjournment as a vacation period. He has remained out of Washington for weeks at a time and his Cabinet has emulated him. But the diplomatic campaign indicated by his own comments requires as much and as concentrated a leadership as the military offensive by which he achieved the reputation which put him in the White House.

HAPPY (?) ENDING: The end of the semester is almost here. First thing you know, we'll all be snowed under with exams, then when they are over the shouting begins, and the dream of summer's vacation becomes a reality. Some will take off for the beach and the sunburned, others will head for home or distant places to settle down to a summertime job, and a lot will be right back up here digging into the books again during the hot summer days that are bound to come, (and sipping cool beer on the hot summer nights). But this semester will be a bygone; something to look back on with mixed emotions and wonderings of if there will ever be another one like it.

LENIOR HALL: Three fellows were sitting at a table. One got the wild idea that he would like to get married. He looked around, saw a table with three pretty coeds sitting around it, and strolled over to occupy the vacant chair. The modern-day Casanova asked one of the coeds to marry him, she replied that she was awful busy "with exams and all," but agreed to try and find time for the wedding the following afternoon.

But they couldn't agree on the time. The coed called the whole thing off, until the boy told her about the big two-carat ring he had back at the room. Her interest was aroused again, but fell flat when she found the "carat" he was talking about was of the vegetable variety.

But this story must have a happy ending, so Casanova appeared stumped for a moment, but quickly sized up the situation, proposed to another one of the girls at the table, and starting walking her home to talk over arrangements.

LENOIR ENCORE: Coed commenting on tough piece of ham: "They must have made this pig do push-ups." Another student (this one male) adding: "The only reason they put so much gravy on this piece of meat is to cover up the gristle."

TRITE BUT TRUE: A coed held her friends spellbound while she told them of this fellow who had taken a bottle in one hand, her in the other and headed straight for the bed. A moment later the spell was broken when she slipped up and let it be known that the fellow was only a baby, she was the baby's sitter, and the bottled contained only milk.

VIA DUKE: Carolina gentleman bragging about how true little Duke coed is to him on way to Durham, finds his girl "studying" with a tall, dark friend from West Campus . . . Another Dukester, who earlier had talked of what a dull semester this had been from the social standpoint, swapping experiences that she had at the Louis Armstrong concert and the Les Brown dance . . . Fellow thinking very bright spotlight was a full moon.

C'EST FINI: This column brings to end "Over the Hill" for this semester. It has been a lot of fun. Here's wishing everybody a very pleasant summer vacation.

Santa Claus Popular Now

Stewart Alsop

(NOTE: Joseph Alsop has just returned from months in the Far East. What follows is excerpted from an informal memorandum by his partner, Stewart Alsop, bringing him up to date on the Washington scene).

WASHINGTON—Since you left, domestic life has been sounding more and more like a cracked phonograph record. Over and over again the oracles ask the same three questions: Will Ike run? Will Adlai run? Will Ike beat Adlai? And then over again, the oracles answer themselves: Yes. Yes. Yes. This performance tends to a certain monotony.

So does the performance on Capitol Hill. Majority Leader Lyndon Johnson is no doubt the most thoroughly professional Congressional leader of our times. But that's just the trouble. He runs legislation through so quickly and quietly that even the body notices, or even cares very much.

There has not been a single good loud row since this session began. Sometimes one can't help feeling a certain nostalgia for the late Joseph R. McCarthy. McCarthy, incidentally, is so sunk without trace that its hard to believe that he was dominating the headlines when you left for abroad.

But the dizzying chopping and changing on the foreign front have more than made up for the dullness at home, that is if you prefer variety to tedium. If you had come straight back from Formosa about five or six weeks ago, you would have found the country in the grips of a tremendous war scare. It was only about that long ago that Admiral Carney was talking about "war by April 15"—and he was merely voicing the most widely held official view, and had the bad luck to be unfairly [illegible] by our profession.

Now the Far Eastern crisis, which you cover ably, has suddenly disappeared from view in the way McCarthy has. Presumably it is still there, as presumably McCarthy is. But as in his case it is considered tactless to mention its existence. When Chou En-lai rather condescendingly remarked that he was willing to talk to us, and the President and Secretary Dulles (after some preliminary confusion) replied that we were willing to talk to him, everybody sighed with relief and said, "Well, that's over."

It isn't really over at all, of course, as I suspect you may point out, in your tactless way. But all concerned seemed to have agreed that the best policy for dealing with the Asia crisis is simply to pretend that it isn't there any more. If there is any other policy, I have been unable to find out what it is.

Now the talk is all of peace in our time. The almost instantaneous transition from war scare to peace talk has been a really amazing phenomenon. At first, after the Russians signed the Austrian treaty and agreed to the meeting at the summit, all concerned were very cautious. From the President and Mr. Dulles on down, there were many warnings against expecting miracles. But now all irrepressible, hopeful noises have begun emanating from the warners themselves, as from children at Christmas time who pretend to be too grown-up to believe in Santa Claus, but really do all the time.

Of course there may actually be a Santa Claus or a reasonable facsimile thereof. You will find men whose opinions you respect speculating seriously that the Soviets may be genuinely anxious to make a European settlement which the Western powers could accept.

The Russians have certainly been acting in a surprising way. The surprises range from the pleasant surprise of the Austrian treaty to the very unpleasant surprise of a Russian visa for myself, only a few weeks after we had been denounced as warmongers in "Pravda."

But the Russians also sprang another surprise with the overflying of Moscow before and after May Day. This could well be the most significant single event that has occurred since you left. As usual these days, the Pentagon tried hard to muffle and play down the meaning of the event (remember Operation Candor?). But the essential facts have come out, and their meaning is plain. The Soviets have a fully mature and remarkably well equipped all-weather air defense system. And they have a rapidly maturing strategic jet air force, with tankers for air refuelling, so that Soviet jets can now unquestionably bomb targets in this country and return to base.

The Moscow overlights knocked into a cocked hat all our defense plans—Secretary of Defense Wilson himself, you remember, was saying only a year ago that Soviet war preparations were wholly defensive. But again, it is considered somehow unsporting to mention such things.

I was in the Senate gallery the other day when Symington of Missouri made a short but cogent speech pointing out that we "may have lost control of the air," and calling for a report by the President on the meaning of the Moscow overflights. He might just as well have been baying at the moon, or extolling the virtues of North Dakota, like old Sen. Langer, who got the floor after him amid a babble of general indifference. It is much more popular, these days, to believe in Santa Claus. Cheaper too, of course. Anyway, welcome home.

One Of Many: Virgil's Hash

Ralph McGill

The Latin words, "E Pluribus Unum," fittingly inscribed on the great seal of the United States and its coins, were lifted from a poem by Virgil, contemporary of the great Horace himself. (Virgil lived from 70 to 19 B.C.).

Dr. Clarence Mendell, professor emeritus of Latin language and English literature at Yale University, feels very sure about it. He has so answered in reply to research in the matter.

The poem is "Moretum." It describes the life, cooking and eating habits of the average dirt-farmer of Virgil's time. A hash, prepared for cold winter mornings, consisted of left-overs, bits of cheese, strips of old bacon, parsley, garlic and any edible scrap at hand, was described in the poem. Virgil, in his poetic enumeration of the contents of the hash which was to fortify the Roman farmer for a long day's work, called it "E pluribus unum." The words mean "one out of many."

The United States was so formed, one nation out of many states. Dr. Mendell said he was convinced Benjamin Franklin and others who played a role in the selection of the motto for the new nation were aware of its orgin. Latin, he noted wistfully, was more widely read in Colonial days than now. Many devout and searching Christians believed Virgil had prophesied the coming of The Christ. This added to the avidity with which he was read.

READING

Dr. Mendell is quite right in noting a retreat from both Latin and Greek. The big argument today revolves around why so many boys and girls aren't able to read at all!

Statistics show that, on the whole, children today read better than they did in grandfather's time. But populations are greater. And the shocking number of otherwise normal boys and girls who have to be sent to remedial reading classes is one of the major problems of modern education.

New York has had a board of inquiry go into juvenile delinquency. Their findings, without doubt applicable in other metropolitan centers, are specific:

". . . Reading retardation is associated with juvenile delinquency . . . Failure in reading accounts more than any other single factor for behavior problems, truancy and general school failure. Reading difficulties were reported for 75 per cent of delinquent children in the non-school part of children's court. Eighty-five per cent of boys sent to New York's Youth House are handicapped by reading difficulties . . ."

As a result the New York City Board has announced pupils who fail in reading will not be promoted.

From a recent educational conference comes still another finding: "High school and college professors complain (many) students reaching their classes are unable to do advanced work because of their inability to read."

INDIVIDUAL

The problem is the individual child. In general, children read better today than in the past. It is not reassuring to know that the average employee in business—and the average businessman—can read no faster today than the average sixth grader.

One problem is the home.

The night clubs, the bridge and canasta tables, the chairs in front of the TV sets nightly are crowded with parents who don't know how to entertain or amuse themselves. Children of parents who can't read are not likely to find much encouragement at home.

A generation ago reading was not as important as now.

Today the boy or girl who can't read isn't going to be able to compete—at a job or in a profession. — The Atlanta Constitution.

An Appraisal Of Politics On Campus

Dave Mundy

Advice costs nothing to the one offering it, and frequently is worth as little to the one receiving it. Not desiring to depreciate my forthcoming advice too greatly, philosophical remarks may as well cease, to make way for the words of wisdom, this time those words being subtitled "O Hear Ye, Campus Wheels." (They are of course termed wheels because they continuously revolve about each other. Few are at the hub of things, no one wants to be on the rim, and anyone is willing to be a spokesman.)

I am hesitant to offer advice to, or make observations about, the University Party. They just don't particularly need any. The Legislature is theirs for the first time in years, and they missed retaining the presidency of the student body by not-too-many votes in a runoff.

Why the success of their party? I suspect that it really results from the nature of their candidates. Assuming that a SP and a UP candidate both have the requisite experience and capabilities, the UP candidate is likely to give less the appearance of being a "POLITICIAN," and I can imply little falsity. The "typical" SP member is stigmatized, either correctly or incorrectly, as being part of a machine bent on gaining personal power or prominence over the students. The UP man, on the other hand, would be considered a "Good Joe," perhaps the only "bad" point being membership in a fraternity. The UP's success will continue if these "presentable - electable" candidates prove themselves able, responsible administrators and legislators.

"Smilin' Tom, the fair-haired boy with the million dollar smile," (to use a well-worn SP scriptual reference to President Creasy), proved himself an exceedingly able administrator and president. Treasurer Jim Martin and probably Vice President Jack Stevens are beginning to travel the same road.

The UP prospects for next year are even as promising. While it has a good supply of possible candidates, they aren't stumbling over each other in behind-the-scenes dealmaking, as has happened in the past year's experience of the other campus party.

But now to the Student Party, or the conglomeration of personal and party ambitions now "dwelling together in brotherhood and amity."

They give the appearance — with some individuals I suspect more than just an appearance — of "playing politics for the sake of playing politics and the students be damned as long as they let us raise their fees."

This appearance is the one they must either shed or gloss over before success is again theirs. The failure of the party in the spring elections accentuated their failings: Since his first days at Freshman Camp years ago, it was a matter of common knowledge in some political circles that Manning Muntzing was a candidate for President of the student body.

And the results of that election will be long remembered as the greatest fiasco in all the party's existence.

There is afoot a movement for the dissident elements of the SP to again unite, this time around the proposed presidential candidacy of Bob Young. They have no better opportunity to ruin an otherwise "electable" and what might even be an able president. That the nomination is just waiting to settle on Young is a safe prediction. But like Muntzing's halo, it can push the candidate down just a little too far.

But where does all this leave the multitude "independents" on campus? Their votes were the ones electing Fowler, but he is no longer in a position to openly engage the parties in any feuds. So what should those persons either disinterested or disgusted by campus political parties do? First, they should just keep plugging along for whatever they consider advisable, taking stands of various issues and working for what they consider best for the student body. And next fall, in Legislature and class elections, they should enter the races as independents.

It would at least be a warning to the campus parties that they and their cliques have no inherent right to govern the student body.

Reader's Retort

Editors:

The "University Party-dominated Legislature," contrary to what was implied in last Thursday's Daily Tar Heel (in the article entitled "Legislature Will Dip In Moneybag Tonight") has no intention of dipping wildly into the depleted bag of student funds and coming up with free monetary handouts for all.

Appropriating student funds, however, is probably the Legislature's most improtant function, and the body remains ready and willing to give to those student groups who are serving the campus and who have a legitimate need for extra appropriations.

The University Party, having been entrusted by the students with a legislative majority, wants to assure those same students that we will be a careful and wise guardian of their student fees. We will handle the funds conservatively and with forethought. We will "think before we spend." The University Party favors progress for this University, but we would like to see it come about through concrete, carefully considered action by our student leaders, rather than haphazard, inthinking, "anything-for-a-vote" legislation that has sometimes been prevalent in the past.

Department Of Shoe Shines That Count

RALIEGH—As a sign unto us that the University of North Carolina had not done with its legislative program, a delegation of Billy Carmichael and Claude Teague lay in wait for Sir Joe Hunt on the steps of the Sir Walter lobby . . . Carmichael reached for Hunt's bag, and a grinning Teague offered a shoe shine.

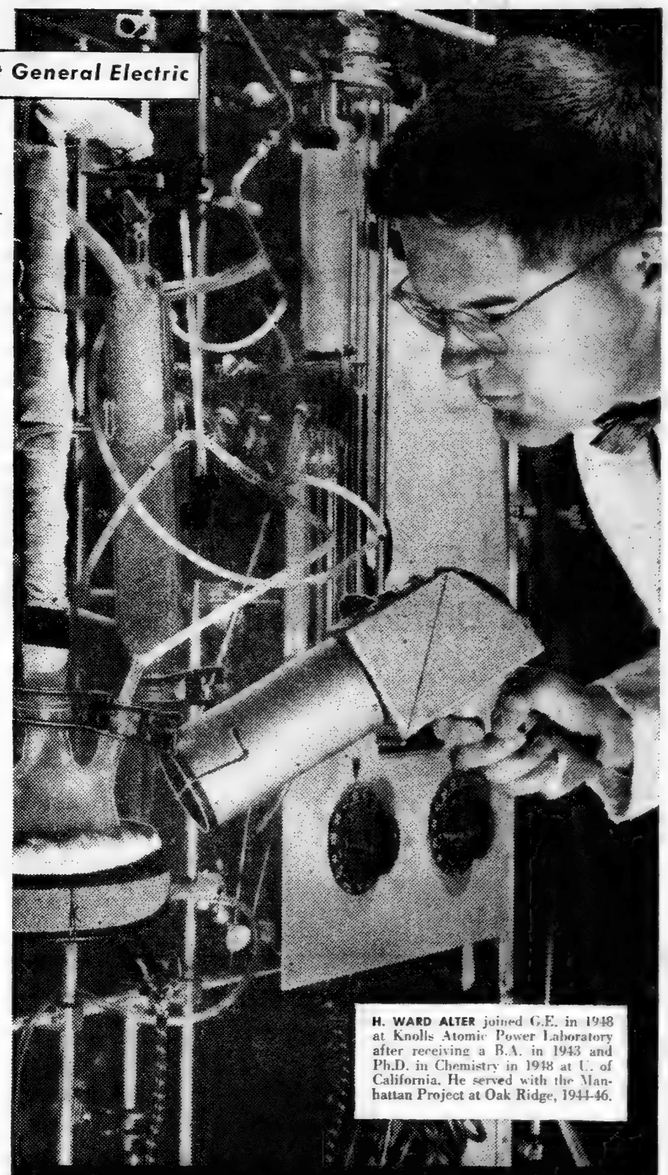
What young people are doing at General Electric

Young scientist works on new ways to handle "hot" radioactive fuel

Whenever uranium is "burned" in an atomic reactor, certain valuable elements such as plutonium are left behind in the "ash."

These products are highly radioactive, but they must be recovered because of their great value to the atomic energy program.

This is the job of 31-year-old H. Ward Alter, Supervisor of the Separations Chemistry Unit at the AEC's Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory, which General Electric operates in Schenectady, N. Y.

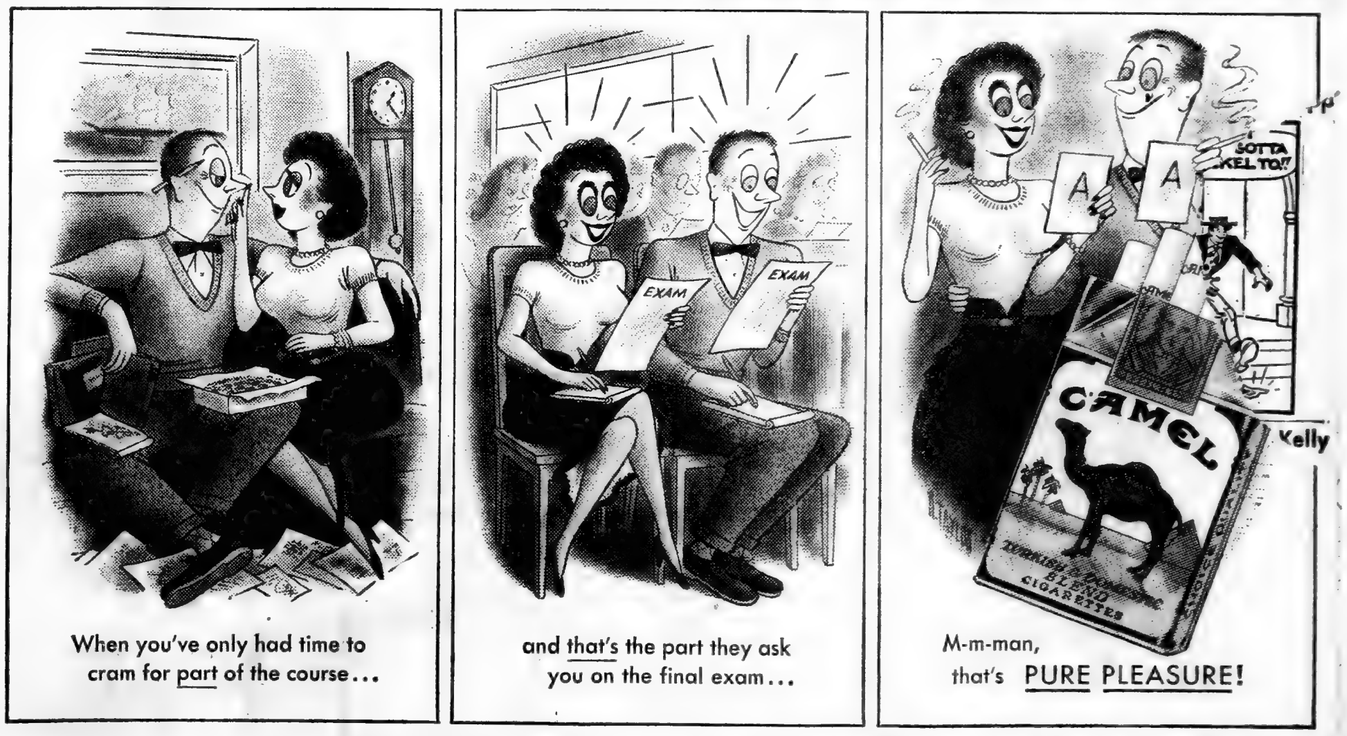


Alter's Work Is Vital, Important

Alter is doing his job well. He has already received the Coffin Award. General Electric's highest honor, for developing an apparatus that makes possible faster, safer, and more efficient recovery of the valuable elements in the "ash."

The work done by Alter and his group helps lower costs, increase efficiency and expand our knowledge of the chemical processing of spent radioactive fuels.

25,000 College Graduates at General Electric



When Alter came to General Electric in 1948, he already knew the work he wanted to do. Like each of the 25,000 college-graduate employees, he was given his chance to grow and realize his full potential. For General Electric has long believed this: When fresh young minds are given freedom to make progress, everybody benefits—the individual, the company, and the country.

H. WARD ALTER joined G.E. in 1948 at Knolls Atomic Power Laboratory after receiving a B.A. in 1943 and Ph.D. in Chemistry in 1948 at U. of California. He served with the Manhattan Project at Oak Ridge, 1944-46.

—— 190,000 NORTH CAROLINIANS CAN'T BE WRONG ——

Symphony: On Wheels Or On Stage

By BILLY ARTHUR

Approximately 190,000 North Carolinians heard great music performed by their own N. C. Symphony Orchestra during the 10th season just ended, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Benjamin Swalin.

These professional musicians, under the direction of Dr. Swalin, took free music to more than 150,000 school children in the state, topping their last season's record of 142,000. In addition, the nationally-known orchestra played to a statewide audience this year of some 40,000 adults.

A total of 114 concerts were played in North Carolina during the 15-week tour, when the orchestra was literally either on wheels or on stage.

The full Symphony of 65 musicians played 17 adult and 22 childrens concerts, plus two television concert-programs, in its whirl around the state, while the Little Symphony, a basic group of 25 musicians, presented 30 adult and 43 children's programs.

Thus, as the first decade of the Symphony closed, the nonprofit N. C. Symphony Society Inc., looked back on an enviable and creditable record of having traveled 68,000 miles, performed for more than 500,000 adults and reached 1,203,000 school children with 664 concerts. Counties thousands, too, have heard the Symphony either on radio or television.

This season's largest single audience was at North Carolina College where 5,800 City of Durham and Durham County children attended a free concert.

PUBLIC SERVICE

Public service concerts were played for patients at the State Hospital in Morganton. Patients from the Orthopedic Hospital in Asheville attended one of the three free children's concerts there, and ambulatory patients at the Polio Hospital were present at the Greensboro concert. Caswell Training School children attended the Kinston performance.

Even as the tour progreased, there was no respite from music save when the musicians were aboard their chartered bus. Proficiency being Dr. Swalin's hallmark, the conductor held numerous rehearsals of the orchestra, plus rehearsals with the nationally and internationally famous soloists. In addition to its repertoire of difficult yet fine, and popular music, the Orchestra played with nine soloists and two choirs.

The N. C. Symphony 1955 book included an ambitious and extensive selection of symphonies, suites and other works from 18th century to modern times. Added to its own repertoire were the concertos and arias performed with the soloists and the premier playing of Benjamin Award Winner Theron W. Kirk's Adagietto.

Most famous of the soloists appearing with the Symphony this season was Tosy Spivakovaky, world-celebrated violinist. Spivakovaky and the Orchestra paid tribute to the 90th birthday this year of Sibelius by performing his Violin Concerto.

Also appearing with the Symphony this season were North Carolina's own accomplished pianist, Miss Carolina Taylor of Wadesboro and New York, and the talented Miss Derry Deane, violinist and concertmaster for the University of Illinois Symphony Orchestra.

NATIVE OPPORTUNITY

Miss Taylor's career is evidence of one worth of the Symphony Society — providing opportunity for native Tar Heel musicians to embark on a professional musical career. Miss Taylor was a Symphony auditions winner and thereby appeared first as soloist with the Little Symphony, then pursued her musical career, finally making her debut in New York Town Hall and appearing as soloist with the Full Symphony this season.

Miss Deane, too, rose from the ranks of the Symphony to soloist and is now working on her Master's Degree in music at Illinois University.

Five other auditions winners appeared with the Little Symphony this season — a practice that has made the North Carolina Symphony nationally famous, that is, playing more concerts free to school children than any other orchestra in the nation.

Because of its objective taking" music to all citizens the state — the Symphony Society receives an annual appropriation of $20,000. The N. General Assembly itself and wives of the members who compose the Sir Walter Cabinet were treated to special concerts by the Little Symphony this year.

EDITOR MARKHAM
. . . he 's got a big job ahead

Yack Editor Markham Has To Start Early

By JACK WIESEL

As this year's Yackety-Yack is being distributed, plans for next year's annual are already being developed.

Jack Markham, rising senior from Ponte Vedra, Fla., editor of the 1956 Yack, has been hard at work for the past six weeks preparing layouts, gathering photographs and getting all of the preparatory details of next year's Yack ready for his staff.

Markham, a history major, has had a long and varied career in the extra-curricular field. For three years, he has worked on both the Yackety Yack and Tarnation. He has served as chairman of the GMAB Film Committee for two years and as an orientation counselor for one. He is also a member of the Newman Club and has worked in the Swain Hall Photographic Laboratory for two years.

His most outstanding work, however, has been with the Yack. During his time on that staff he has done photography work, art designs, page makeup and has been co-editor of the "beauty section." According to Price Coursey, the representative of the engraving company which sets up the Yack, Markham ran during his sophomore year the most outstanding Yack beauty contest in a long time.

In addition to his "beauty" work, Markham has designed the activities section of the current Yack. He also took most of the pictures which were used in this section.

On the Tarnation staff, Markham has been an outstanding contributor of cartoons. He designed the cover used on the winter edition of the humor magazine. He has also aided in the photographic and page makeup departments of this publication.

Markham is a member of Sigma Nu Social Fraternity and the Order of the Old Well.

While in high school Markham was quite active on his schools yearbook. In addition to being assistant editor, he served on the art, photography and makeup committees.

"Next year's Yack will be different," said Editor Markham. "We will use different layout. Originality will be the keyword."

"We need staffers," he added. "There are many vacant positions yet to be filled."

APPROVED 65 MEASURES

What Legislature Did

By NEIL BASS

In action throughout the year, the Student Legislature has stamped approval on a total of 66 measures.

Of this figure, the Student Party is way out in front of the University Party in measures introduced and effected—42-17.

Five measures were placed on the Legislature agenda under joint sponsorship, and two were introduced directly out of committees.

A breakdown by sessions is as follows:

17th Assembly, Second Session: UP—7 measures passed, SP—23 measures passed;

18th Assembly, First Session: UP—7, SP—12;

18th Asembly, Second Session: UP—3, SP—5.

During the first two sessions the majority and minority representation figures were 38-12 and 28-22 respectively, with SP having the top hand.

Now in First Session of the 18th Assembly, the tables have been turned, and the UP has a plurality to the tune of 29-21.

Of the 42 measures the SP has run through legislative machinery, there are several instances of repetition.

THOSE WHO LED the '54-'55 student Legislature are Joel Fleishman (left), parliamentarian; Miss Caroline Davis, clerk, and Martin Jordan, speaker.

During the 17th Assembly, Frank Warren (SP) proposed a resolution favoring the lowering of student date ticket prices. The same proposal was offered by Lewis Brumfield (SP) during the 18th Assembly.

Miss Elsie Peterson (SP) introduced a resolution during the 17th Assembly opposing any raise in student tuition rates.

On Dec. 2, toward the latter portion of the first session of the 18th Assembly, Charles Hyatt (SP) came up with the same proposal.

Of the proposals the UP followed through until passage, three measures appear to have been the highspots. These were

(1) A resolution favoring the exemption of veterans from the physical education program (provided they passed the fundamentals test.)

(2) A bill establishing a committe to investigate gasoline prices in Chapel Hill, and

(3) A bill to establish a Band Improvements Committee (Later the UP introduced and got passed a bill to appropriate $1,100 to the University Band, only to have it vetoed by President Tom Creasy).

Of the proposals the SP used its majority to secure approval for, there are also three measures that stand out. These are

(1) A bill which established poll booths in every men and women's dormitory and various other places on campus;

(2) A bill calling for the establishment of two class free Saturdays per semester, and

(3) A resolution favoring the return of 50 percent of the profits from dormitory vending machines to the dorm social funds.

Congratulations Graduates!

Summer Planning Underway

Activities for the summer session are being planned by a joint operation committee of Graham Memorial and the YMCA.

The Summer Activities Council, which has been set up by GM and the Y, has organized a skeleton schedule of student events for this summer. The schedule has been set up in a flexible way, so students who are here this summer may have a hand in forming activities which interest them.

So far planned there are six free movies, watermelon festival (first term), return engagement of Polgar, the hypnotist, (Second term), and a lecture by George V. Denny, entitled "Give Your Mind A Chance" (first term).

In addition to these programs, there will be several productions presented by the Playmakers and the Music Dept.

According to Jim Wallace, Director of GM, "there will be no GM or Y program as such. There will be only one program in order to have a better over-all campus program."

Reactor Dedication

RALEIGH, May 20. (AP) — Dr. Willard F. Libby, a member of the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission, will be the principal speaker at dedication ceremonies Monday for North Carolina State's $650,000 nuclear reactor.

THE SOUTHERN HISTORICAL COLLECTION

The South's On File At The Library

By BARBARA WILLARD

Would you ever think that the good housekeeper would be the historian's greatest enemy? Well, she is, and a greater enemy even than fire, rats and carelessness, which destroy many valuable documents.

Although the Southern Historical Collection in UNC's Library is the "largest single collection of non-archival manuscript material relating to the South in the entire nation," according to Dr. James W. Patton, director of the Collection, you might still throw in the fisherman's angle—"you ought to see the one that got away."

Efforts to save Southern history from spring cleaning began before 1930, when the Collection was formally set up with Dr. J. G. de Roulhac Hamilton as the first director. Dr. Hamilton started out with very little money and an A-model Ford that could "climb any red clay hill in Dixie." He says that up until his retirement in 1948, he had driven "over a million miles throughout the South" on his acquiring trips.

There are now two and one-half million pieces in the Collection that have been salvaged from musty cellars, dusty garrets, storage rooms, outhouses, public buildings, attics and chicken coops. This material pertains to fourteen Southern states: Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri.

Whereas grandmother might treasure Uncle Henry's diary all her life, granddaughter Sally might not think so highly of it, and a valuable historical manuscript might go in the same waste can with today's newspaper. The Collection is designed to gather manuscripts from the Southern states and give them a waterproof, fireproof, ratproof home, where they can be used by many as the valuable reference they are.

Dr. Hamilton says, "It is difficult to make people realize the importance of preserving old manuscripts. They often say, 'Well, my ancestors weren't generals or senators.' They don't seem to realize, in many cases, what really makes history." Everyone that has a trunkful of Confederate money stashed away is a lead for new material.

UNWRITTEN HISTORY

"The letters of public men are, of course, welcome, but the letters of just plain folks are the authentic sources of information as to what people wore; what they ate; what they made; what morals they had; what religious beliefs, what politics and what family medical treatments they employed." Dr. Hamilton continues. "Along with that comes the history of the South that has never been written. We want the phoilosophy and the actual dives of our ancestors and not just an historical diet of dates and battles."

What happens to these documents? First, they are all opened and flattened. Next comes arranging them in chronological order. Then an assistant writes and analysis of the group and places it in front of the manuscripts.

There is no printed material in the Collection. It is all manuscripts or photocopies of manuscripts. There are account books, muster rolls, conscript orders, court dockets, order books of the Revolution, maps, travel records, old recipes, farm diaries, student records and letters of all kinds, such as from a Confederate soldier to his father.

One such letter from Civil War days reads, "I want you to send me a box of vituals and a dish of ogolio and that is a dish of different kinds of meat and send me some butter and some honey and potatoes and one pickle if no more and just as many things as you want and send me two or three plugs of San Perdue's tobacco and some apples if you have got any. I believe that is all I want." Has time changed things?

HISTORY—FLESH & BLOOD

Other letters of this period give eye-witness accounts of such battles as Vicksburg and Gettysburg; they give flesh and blood to history. An excerpt from another Confederate soldier's letter to Dad: "We had general review yesterday by Genl R E Lee Thare was a good many young girls out to see us and they saw a grand sight for thare was several thousand soldiers in three lines the girls are like the paper says they look at the means coat collars to see who has got the most stars and stripes and the one that got the most he the man for them."

Among the many phases of Southern history, the Collection covers three in greatest detail: (1) the social system of the old South, (2) the Confederacy and the Civil War, and (3) the plantation system and slavery.

One reason for the wealth of material on the Civil War, Dr. Hamilton explains, is that "there were no censors in the Civil War. The GIs of that day could write home about most anything they wanted and many of them wrote home about everything . . . things that would put the modern soldier in the guard house in short order . . . The censor today gets what future historians would like to have."

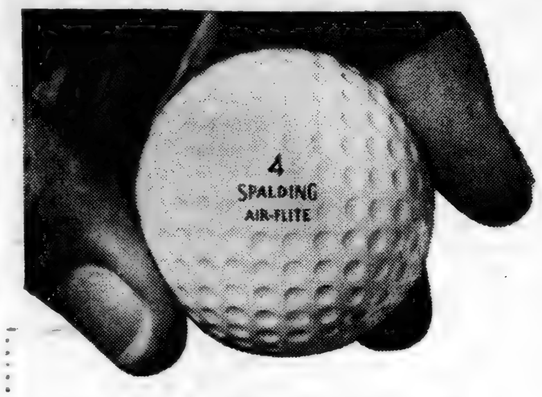
Dr. Patton, who became director in 1948, after Dr. Hamilton's retirement, has just returned from a trip to Virginia to seek out material. On this trip he obtained for the Collection, correspondence of Peter Hagner, third auditor of the United States.

Dr. Patton also showed me an old diary he happened to find in a book store in Virginia. He was not sure who had written it, but on examination it appeared to have been a farmer whose sons took produce to neighboring towns daily. There was a faithful record of the daily weather, and on Sunday, such records as "Brother Fortune preached. I slept. 22 to dinner, excepting the family." He closed the diary with "The year is 1869, is gone and we are spared to the close and should feel ourselves under renewed obligation to an alwise Providence for the blessings received and ask a continuance of the same." Then, as if to safeguard that "continuance," he had added "Rustin & Aspinwalls (chill & fever remedy)."

Dr. Patton says people are still not too willing to part with things they feel are too personal. In many cases, however, collections are borrowed and microcilmed with the owner's permission. Another feature that makes grandpa's diary a little easier to come by is that in return for an original diary, the collection will furnish the family with a certain number of type-written copies, in some cases.

SLIGHTLY DANGEROUS

Other problems that arise in securing material are getting the people to deliver once they have promised material and competition from other collections being started in the South. Generally, however, Southerners, once they realize the importance of such a collection, are glad to place their manuscripts there for public use. Dr. Hamilton says only twice were people ever rude to him—once when he knocked on the door in the midst of a domestic feud and another time, in a case of mistaken identity. Dr. Patton ended up in a hospital in December, 1951, on an acquiring trip, but it was the result of a wreck and not a staunch Southerner defending his great-uncle's blacksmith's financial journal.



UNC records from 1781 to the present time are on file, as well as records of the Di, Phi and other campus organizations. In connection with the University there are also faculty diaries, old love letters, minutes of Every aspect of past Southern meetings and student diaries. life is recorded in the Collection, which has been a valuable source for books, theses, dissertations and for anyone seeking a good old-fashioned recipe for corn-pone.

The South may have lost her place in the sun almost a century ago, but the Southern Historical Collection is seeing to it that she quickly regains it. They even have confederate money on file for the rise.

ASK EDWIN LANIER: HE'LL TELL YOU

If You Want To Work, Carolina's The Place For You

By HARRIET MORGAN

Suppose you were a Carolina student at the turn of the century and needed part time work. Chances are you would strike out on your own and maybe land a job as exercise boy at the local livery stable. Or, if our four-footed friends didn't suit you, perhaps you could sell wood to fraternity houses or fire a furnace in one of the University buildings. But those "good old days" are gone, and we say "thank goodness."

It's a far cry from firing furnaces to managing a golf course, but generations of Carolina students have done them all.

Now you can go about the business of job-hunting in a systematic way—and a way that saves a lot of preliminary footwork.

But how do you go about getting a job? Well, suppose you are a high school senior in a small eastern North Carolina town. You want to come to Carolina, but know it will be out of the question unless you can get outside financial help of some kind. Your first step after being accepted at the University is to write to Edwin Lanier, director of the University Student-Aid Service. You briefly tell him your situation and ask him for some information on what types of aid are available.

Lanier answers that there are at least three different ways that a student may get help. Of the three — scholarships, University loans and part-time jobs—you decide that a part-time job will fill the bill for you. You are surprised to find that there are so many types of jobs open to you and that last year over 500 students were working under the student-aid system.

JUST ABOUT ANYTHING

You could put books back in the stacks at the Library, serve at the cafeteria, usher at Morehead Planetarium, mail press releases at the News Bureau, develop and print pictures at the photo lab, do clerical work in an office, work at the information desk in Graham Memorial, or almost any other type of work that you can think of.

Lanier explains in his letter that in order to be eligible for student aid, an applicant must have a satisfactory academic record and show definite need. You know you have a definite need and you think your grades are good enough, so you fill out the application blank and wait for an answer.

Pretty soon you hear from Director Lanier. He wants you to come to Chapel Hill for an interview if you can, so you arrange to go. When you walk into the Student-Aid Service's office, you are amazed that the secretary knows your name, but she explains by saying that she fels she knows all the applicants after having studied their folders and pictures for so long.

In your interview, which may be with any member of the staff, you discuss what type of work you'd like and approximately how much money you would have to make.

A few weeks later you get another letter—this time saying that your application for a job has been accepted and the service has found work for you that meets your need.

It hasn't always been this easy to get work. The Student-Aid Service has come a long way in its 30-year history, and like most large organizations, it has had its share of growing pains. Many different methods were tried and discarded before the present system finally evolved.

In 1915, for example, a boy wanting work applied to a member of a four-man faculty committee for a personal interview. Each man talked to a different group of boys, and afterwards and groups went into a huddle over which boys should get the jobs.

There were only a few jobs open to students then—the dining hall, known as commons, and the Library. Naturally, there were not enough jobs to go around, so many boys had to get along the best way they could.

Pretty soon, the faculty saw the method of not having all the committee members familiar with each case had very few advantages and many disadvantages. It was "a body with four hands, none of which knew what the others were doing."

THE FIRST OFFICE

Along about 1921 the enrollment of the University was growing and the faculty saw this as another factor in the need for more help. It was then that the self-help program as such was formed. H. F. Comer was the father of this first office, which was housed in the YMCA building. The program grew rapidly, and about a year later, Edwin Lanier was hired as a full-time assistant.

Under the new system, students made formal applications to the Self-Help Work Committee which met and studied the applications. Then the students who needed work most were given the available jobs.

In the mid 1930s the service expanded again. This time three committees were formed: the Self-Help Work Committee, the Scholarship Committee and the Loan Fund Committee. These groups functioned more or less independently until 1940 when they were joined together in the Student-Aid Committee. This setup, with a few changes, is the one which operates today.

Tarnation Editor Reflects On His Magazine

By RUEBEN LEONARD
1954-1955 Editor, Tarnation

Looking back over the past year's work on Tarnation, we see the few goals we accomplished and the many we didn't. Although handicapped by inexperience from the editor on down to the stamp lickers, the magazine did manage to survive its third year since reactivation in 1952.

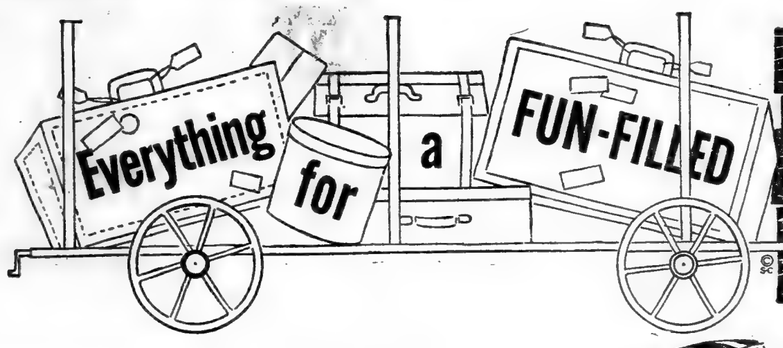
The staff, operating under the slogan "Risque but not Raunchy," strived to give the students at Carolina a mixture of humor containing irony, satire and comedy. The literati screamed "Old Black Tarnation" at our attempts at humor. The students screamed with both delight and disgust, and our parents just screamed.

Since the Tarnation is financed solely by student subscriptions, this year's subscribers suffered for the debts incurred by last year's staff. Tarnation started the year $440 in debt and had to sacrifice that amount of this year's funds. Although the magazine did better than break even it still finished the year in the red because of its old debt.

EDITOR LEONARD
. . . 'risque but not raunchy'

Student Legislature came to the rescue and appropriated $200 to help alleviate some of the financial burden. With the money from Legislature came the feeling that Tarnation had once again raised student interest to a peak where the continuance of the magazine was assured.

When the fist issue was printed in the fall, an attempt was made to sell the magazine in other schools in the state. About 500 copies were sold at Duke, 100 at State and 200 at WC. As is often the case, several complaints reached the administration. The administration called in the editor and asked him to please, please, tone the magazine down. After a lengthy discussion as to how many jails could be stacked atop the editor, the powers in South Building congratulated the editor on an improvement over last spring and sent him on his way.



The second issue, published in January, incurred no wrath from the administration, but was taken off the stands at Duke. Why the dullest issue of the year (494 copies sold in two and one-half hours) was taken off the racks we'll never know.

Over at State College a census showed that Tarnation was preferred two to one over a degree in engineering. At WC the magazine was moved from the Soda Shop shelves down to the Book Store and sold alongside Ribald Classics, Droll Stories etc.

The third and last issue of the year contained four extra pages and featured a parody on The Daily Tar Heel.

Dick Hudson Second In Big Four Hitting Race

O'Sullivan Trophy

The O'Sullivan Trophy for foul-shooting, which was presented Thursday night at the basketball banquet, was presented by sports publicist Jack Wade. The trophy is named for Mrs. Bill O'Sullivan, resident of Chapel Hill.

Dick Hudson, Carolina outfielder who posted a .267 batting average over the entire season, got most of his hits against Big Four competition, according to final batting stastistics for the Big Four.

Hudson was second in Big Four hitting, accordng to the figures, with a .409 average behind State's Jack Barringer, who posted a .437 medial against Big Four pitching.

Lowell (Lefty) Davis, Wake Forest pitcher, posted a 4-0 record to win the Big Four pitching title. Southpaw Davis also pitched the most innings (39⅓), allowed the most hits (43), gave up the most runs (20) and struck out the most batters (34). He issued only nine walks.

Lou Dickman of State and Jim Raugh of Carolina are the only hurlers other than Davis to pick up more than one Big Four win. Dickman's record was 2-2, while Raugh won two and lost three. Hal Turner of Duke, Bill Franklin and Sam Welsh of State, and Billy Johnson of Carolina all picked up one victory against no defeats.

Carolina's 20-2 blasting of Duke on the final day of the season saved the Tar Heels from finishing last in the Big Four. Wake Forest was tops with a 6-3 mark, followed by State (5-3), Carolina (4-5) and Duke (2-6).

Krepp, Drake Go For World Marks Monday

Carolina's sophomore backstroke sensation, Charlie Krepp, will try for world and American records at 200 meters and 220 yards to go with the four American marks he already holds Monday afternoon at 5:15 in the Indoor pool.

Krepp, new record holder at 500 yard, 500 meters, 440 yards and 400 meters, will be accompanied in the record try by teammate Phil Drake, who will be aiming for butterfly-breaststroke marks at the same distances. Drake set new American records at 500 yards and 500 meter searlier, and was to have tried for 400 meter and 440 yard marks when Krepp set his records, but was unable to do so because of an infected ear.

Freshman Mac Mahaffy will try to set a new frosh-University record in the 220 yard orthodox breaststroke Monday afternoon.

Officials for the trials will be Bill Meade, Bob Linker, Ham Strayhorn, Bob Colbert, Ralph Casey, Warren Heemann, Carl Blyth, Ed Shawley, Penny Martin, and Pete Higgins.

Grant Exhibition Set Here Today

Bitsy Grant, former national clay courts champion and U. S. Davis Cupper,will meet Atlantic Coast Conference singles champion Tom Bradford of North Carolina in an exhibition match here this afternoon on the university's varsity courts. The match will get underway at 2:30 p.m.

After the single competition, Grant, rated the top collegiate player in UNC tennis history, will team with Tar Heel ace Herb Browne to meet Carolina's Bobby Payne and Pete Green in a doubles match.

Browne was runner-up to Bradford for conference honors, and Payne and Green finished second to Bradford and Browne for the ACC's doubles championship.

Grant, an 11-time winner of the Southern Championship, began his climb to national tennis prominence more than 25 years ago as a UNC undergraduate.

Walker, Smith '56 Lacrosse Captains

By AL KORSCHUN

Goalie Thorne Walker and midfielder Sherwood Smith were elected co-captains to lead the 1956 team at the lacrosse team's post-season banquet held at Walt's Grill Thursday night.

Ronnie Current and Steve Trimble, the team's top two defensive mainstays during the past season; were also honored for their outstanding performances. Current was honored by the Southern Lacrosse Officials Association with an award that is given to that member of the team who showed the most interest, displayed outstanding sportsmanship, and made the greatest general contribution to the team. Trimble received the first annual Outstanding Player Award, a plaque which was donated by coach Art Greenbaum and which will be an annual award.

Defenseman Al Bryant also received the dubious distinction of having been penalized the most times during the year.

The four hour banquet was keynoted by Coach Greenbaum's talk on plans for next year's team which will be more experienced and improved. Greenbaum plans on having a six weeks fall practice session and also to begin spring practice earlier than last year.

TAR HEEL BOYS STATE HELD HERE

Watermelon Festival To Be Held June 24

The seventh annual watermelon festival will be held under the Davie Poplar on Friday, June 24, at 7:00 o'clock. The big event is under the sponsorship of the summer activities council, with Jean Marr and John Kerr heading the committee in charge of the arrangements.

The entertainment for the evening is of a wide variety. Chancellor House and the faculty band will provide part of the evening's music. More entertainment will be provided by Jim Wallace at the piano, probably treating the crowd to a rendition of his "University Hymn." Also a special attraction will be Jim Crisp and his combo with Murray Wall featured as vocalist.

The highlight of the evening will be the coronation of the Queen and King of the Watermelon festival. All fraternities, sororities, and dormitories are urged to submit their entries before the deadline on Monday, June 20th.

Community Sing To Have Fine Entertainers

On Sunday, June 19, at 9:00 P.M. there will be a community sing in front of Graham Memorial. Nancy Murray, the director of this activity, has obtained some fine entertainers to perform at the sing.

John Parker, Jr., is a guitar player who also sings. He is a sophomore, is a pre-med student, and is an experienced performer. Sandy Thomas will be another performer. He com-

Welcome Party Is Proclaimed Success

"The welcoming party held last Friday night was a big success despite the rain," stated Ray Jeffries, head of Student affairs.

The dance, held intermittently in the Y-Court, the Y-Building, and another nearby building, was somewhat hampered by the scattered flurries of rain, which kept the students moving from outside to inside and vice-versa between rains.

Serving as hostesses for the affair were: Sallie Cowles, Sarah Alice Jackson, Sandra Thornton, Hazel Crawford, Henri Van Order, Peggy Ward, Ruth Lott, Boo Fortier, & Ancy Hoover. Sallie Cowles and Woody Sears were co-chairmen of the event.

Five Women Graduate Counselors Appointed

The appointment of five women as graduate counselors in the undergraduate women's dormitories for the first summer session has been announced by the dean of women, Katherine Kennedy Carmichael.

They are Ethel Marcella Reed, Sylva; Ruth Marion Estes, Rocky Mount; Nancy Murray, Raleigh; Nancy Blair Eliason, Statesville, and Jeanne Straiton, Charlotte.

The graduate counselor serves as a liaison between the students and the Dean of Women's Office, as adviser to individuals in the dormitory and to the dormitory government. She works with the hostess to assure the physical and mental well-being of the dormitory. The women will also be graduate students in

Summer Enrollment Exceeds Expectations

Enrollment, which had been expected to be around 2400 for the Summer, has now exceeded the 2900 mark according to Dean Guy Phillips.

Contacted yesterday by telephone, Dean Phillips stated that enrollment for the first session now rests at 2939, some 429 over last year. Commenting further, Dean Phillips said that this year there is a decided increase over last year, especially on the undergraduate level and among women students.

Exact breakdown of the enrollment will not be available until sometime next week. However, it has been noted that the excess feminine enrollment has required that Stacy Dorm (usually a men's dorm), be converted into a women's dorm for the Summer.

Dormitories in use by the male students this Summer include: Joyner, Old East, Old West, Grimes, Connor, Steele, Ruffin, Mangum, and Manly, with Battle-Vance-Pettigrew being used temporarily.

Women's dorms in use this Summer include McIver, Kenan, Spencer, Alderman, Smith, Carr, and Stacy.

Alexander Dorm is being occupied by married students and their families this Summer, while Cobb and Whitehead are being used by the University Extension Service.

During the past week Aycock, Lewis, Everett, and Graham have been occupied by the boys attending Boys' State.

Program Endorsed By American Legion

The campus is covered with "Boys' Staters" this week. This program is conducted for the North Carolina Department of the American Legion, which sponsors these annual Boys' States, by the Institute of Government.

Roddey Ligon from the Institute of Government; Bob Byrd, his assistant, and 20 counselors have set up the program for the approximately 375 boys who are here. The boys have a full day beginning at 7:00 A.M. with breakfast at Lenoir until 10:00 P.M. and lights out. They hear speakers until 3:00 P.M. when they can take part in swimming or other forms of athletics.

Among the outstanding speakers at Boys' State are Albert Coates, Director of the Institute of Government; Fred Weaver, Dean of Student Affairs; James Powell, Director of the State Bureau of Investigation; George Barclay, Head Football Coach; Paul Robertson, State Commander of the American Legion; and Thad Eure, Secretary of State.

Each Legion Post chooses an outstanding boy to represent its district at Boys' State. The purpose of Boys' State is to better inform these representatives of the workings of local, state, and national government. The boys are dividing their dorms into cities, counties, and states, and are electing boys to fill the governmental and representative posts. Other activities of the "Boys' Staters" include an oratorical contest, "The Statesman" (their newspaper), softball games, tennis, and plans for a band.

At the ends of Boys' State, the two outstanding "Boys' Staters" will be chosen, and will represent North Carolina at Boys' Nation.

Summer Session Chorus Rehearsals Have Begun

Rehearsals for the Summer School Chorus began Monday evening at Hill Hall.

The Chorus, under the direction of Gene Strassler, is made up of mixed voices and is open to all students, faculty members, and townspeople.

High spot of the chorus' activities for the Summer will be a concert to be given July 12th at 8:00, and will feature Mass For Double Choir by Vaughn-Williams.

Anyone interested in joining the chorus is invited to attend the rehearsals, which will be held each Monday and Thursday evenings at 7:00.

EDITORIAL

The Summer School Weekly wishes to congratulate the young men participating in Boys' State on their selection as delegates and to commend the American Legion for this outstanding contribution to American self-government. Selection as a delegate to Boys' State bespeaks an outstanding high school record as well as excellent qualities of ability and character. Boys' State helps to meet a glaring need in our democratic society. For Democracy can survive only if it has an adequate number of people who know and care what is going on in the community, in the nation, and in the world, and who know enough and care enough to solve Democracy's problems and to defend her traditions and principles. Such people are the product of organizations like Boys' State. Congratulations, then, to these young men, and hearty thanks to the American Legion.

Organist Appointed By Music Department

The Music Department announces the appointment of Mr. John Shannon, organist from Charlotte, to teach organ at both the first and second summer sessions of the University. Mr. Shannon, who is scheduled to give an organ recital on August 2, is currently completing a degree in musicology. Before coming to the University he earned a Bachelor of Arts degree in music at Davidson College. He studied organ with Mr. Philip Gehring while at Davidson.

The appointment of Mr. Shannon will make it possible for more students and Chapel Hill residents to study organ this summer. Previously, many had been turned away because the Music Department could not accommodate them.

NCAA Tennis Contests Get Underway Monday

The NCCA tennis championships will begin here next Monday and run through Friday. Latest reports show that entries have been received from 26 schools totaling 63 of the nation's top players.

Neither the singles nor doubles winners will be here to try to regain their crown. Of last year's eight quarter-finalists in the singles, only four are returning. They are William Cranston of Yale, William Quillian of Washington, Richard Doss of UCLA, and A. Call of Southern California. These men were ranked sixth, fifth, seventh and eighth in the country last year, respectively.

Ham Richardson of Tulane, winner of the singles championships for the past two years, will not be here to defend his title. He will be playing in the Wimbledon championships in England, prior to entering Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar.

The Tar Heels will be banking on Tom Bradford, ACC singles champion, Herb Browne, ACC singles runner-up, Bob Payne and Pete Green.

The University of California at Los Angeles, winner of the team championship last year, will have its best players in competition. They will be led by Dick Doss, Jimmy Read and Joe Blatchford, who are considered to be among the West Coast's best players.

Other teams entering from the Western Conference, where the best collegiate tennis is usually played, poses, directs, and plays, and is a student of music in the Music Department here. He, too, has had previous experience.

But you, the audience, will need no experience—the words will be flashed on a screen, and the rhythm will be furnished by the performers—all you have to do is just sing the words. These community sings have been received with tremendous enthusiasm in former years, and it is hoped that the tradition will carry over this year.

Students Are Invited To Enjoy Facilities Of Graham Memorial

Jim Wallace, the Director of Graham Memorial, wishes to invite all of you new summer school students (as well as any of you old timers) down to the student union any day of the week between the hours of 9 a.m. and 11p.m. to enjoy the many pleasant services offered.

In addition to the usual parlor games such as cards, checkers, chess, etc., there are many novel services which can give a real lift to your daily routine.

As an example, you book-worm type critters will find a very comfortable furnished reading lounge, complete with Persian rugs and an up-to-date magazine rack with all of the popular periodicals.

If you suddenly should discover that you are tired of reading, then you can go into the snack bar where hot coffee and sandwiches are always available.

Next door, you will notice the very modern decor and, upon looking inside, see the 21-inch T.V. set (complete with antenna tuner) which will bring in all of the channels from the nearby cities, as well as our own WUNC-TV.

If, however, you are not a book-worm type critter, but fall more into the class of the "indoor athlete," then the basement of G.M. will become your own personal stomping grounds.

In this land down under, there are, in addition to a dance floor complete with a juke box, pool tables, ping pong courts, and soft drink dispensing machines. Also, when it comes time to clip your golden locks, you will find a complete barber shop which features the lowest priced haircuts in town.

Now perhaps you don't fall into either of the two above mentioned classes. Maybe you are just confused. If so, make use of the G.M. Information services. They can arrange trips in the travel agency, tell you where that cute chick in econ class lives (provided you can furnish her name) and give general information as to the location of a building or what's happening on campus.

All in all, if you take G.M. floor by floor, there are more facilities there for student recreation than in any other place around.

Jim Wallace says, "The doors are open." So, come on in.

Two European Travel Publications Available

Philadelphia, Pa.—Two new publications listing special reductions available to students traveling in Europe this summer are now being distributed by the United States National Student Association.

"Student Hostels and Restaurants" is a complete list of eating and lodging facilities available to students in the major university centers in Europe. Prices and facilities at each hostel and restaurant are listed in detail. The booklet is priced at 25¢ and may be ordered from USNSA, 1234 Gimbel Building, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, or through your student government.

Also available at the same price is the "Handbook on Student Travel" which includes information on travel facilities at reduced rates, summer courses and centers, student tickets to cultural events, and the addresses of the national student travel bureaus in each country.

Each USNSA member student government is being sent a number of International Student Identity Cards for 1955. These cards serve as the necessary proof of student status required to secure the special reductions listed in the "Student Travel Handbook." Additional cards may be ordered from USNSA.

'Messages From Space' Now At Planetarium

Now showing at the Morehead Planetarium is "Messages from Space". Shows are scheduled in the evenings at 8:30 on Saturdays, 11, 3, 8:30 and on Sundays at 3. 4. and 8:30. Admission price for adults is 60c, children 25c, and students 40c with ID cards.

Beginning Tuesday, June 27, and running through July, August and September will be "A Trip to Saturn." Special showings of "Messages From Space" are being held on June 16 and 17 for the boys and girls attending Boys' State and Girls' State Convention.

In the Rotunda Gallery there is a permanent collection of famous paintings given by Mr. and Mrs. Morehead. Among the pictures is a Rembrandt original acquired from the Louvre Museum, Paris, France. The picture was painted about 1632 and is a picture of Rembrandt's sister, Lizabeth.

In the North and South Galleries are featured Visual Thoughts in Three Medias—sculpture, oil paintings and photographs—by students Tom Puckett and Bob Malone.

An exhibit of Archaeological findings of ancient man in Europe is being shown in the basement.

The new cashier in the planetarium for the summer is Tish Harrer, a student from WCUNC and a math major. The former cashier, Mrs. Bunny Stone, has a new baby girl who was named Sandy Stone.

Chapel Hill Churches Plan Student Programs

by Larry McElroy

The churches of Chapel Hill have planned an interesting and varied program for the University students who are in Summer School. Students are encouraged to visit the church of their choice and to participate in these programs.

The Baptist Church's program for the students consists of the BSU Supper Forum, which meets at 6 P.M. on Sunday night, with the Reverend J. O. Cansler in charge.

The Canterbury Club, the student organization of the Episcopal Church, meets at 6 P.M. on Sunday for supper. The Reverend Robert W. Insko is in charge of this program.

The Methodist student program is divided into two parts. The program for undergraduates begins at 6 P.M. on Sunday night. A supper comes first, and this is followed by recreation. The program for graduate students, the "Over 21" group, begins at 6 P.M. on alternate Tuesdays. The group will meet on this coming Tuesday night. Those who plan to come are requested to call beforehand the Reverend Joe Savell, who is in charge of the program.

For the Second Session, the Methodists plan a joint program with the Presbyterians.

Presbyterian students are asked to gather at the "Y" Court at 6 P.M. every Sunday. There, cars will pick them up, and they will be taken to a Presbyterian home for supper. This Sunday, Dr. and Mrs. John Graham will entertain the Presbyterian students. The Reverend Harry E. Smith is in charge of the Presbyterian student program.

Miss Reed is serving as counselor in Spencer Hall. Miss Estes is counselor in Alderman Hall. Miss Murray is assisting in Smith Dormitory. Miss Eliason and Miss Straiton have assumed the counseling services for Stacy Dormitory which is housing undergraduate women during the first summer session.

Be sure to attend the Watermelon Festival June 24. Fun for all!

Summer Intramural Program Gets Underway Monday, June 20, With Softball And Tennis

The Summer Intramural program gets underway Monday, June 20th with softball and tennis. Golf and horseshoes also start next week.

Entries for softball close tomorrow. Play begins Monday, the 20th. Teams may be composed of anyone on campus with no restrictions as to eligibility, except that players may participate on only one team. Prizes will be awarded to the winning team.

Tennis entries will close tomorrow at 4 o'clock. It is to be a single elimination tournament in both doubles and singles. Each match will be two out of three sets except the semi-finals and finals, which will be the best three out of five sets. Each player must furnish a new can of balls before the first match. The winner will take the unused can as his prize. Other prizes will be awarded to winners of the tournament.

Golf will be open to all students, with an entry fee of 50c per person. Participants must play a qualifying round of 18 holes before Wednesday, June 22nd. Players will then be divided into flights with trophies being awarded to the winner and runner-up of each flight.

Horseshoes can be entered by either calling or appearing at the Intramural office in Woollen Gym no later than 4:00 tomorrow afternoon. This will be a single elimination tournament in both singles and doubles. Play will begin Tuesday, June 21st.

The Intramural Office is located in 314-315 Woollen Gym. Its office hours are from 2 to 5 each day except Saturday and Sunday. The phone number is 9424.

NCAA Tennis

are the University of California at Berkeley, University of Southern California and Stanford.

Illinois, Michigan, Michigan State, Northwestern and Wisconsin will be representing the Big Ten. Al Kuhn, Jr., Big Ten champion, is the favored player from this conference.

Tulane, unable to have Richardson represent them, will be sending their number two player, Jose Aguero from South America. He is being heralded as "Richardson's heir apparent." Unbeaten in 25 singles matches, he has a victory over Big Ten champion Kuhn to his credit.

In the ACC, Duke and Maryland will have entries along with the Tar Heels. Duke will be featuring Buzz Hettleman, winner over Herb Browne in the regular season play, Bob Green, Lief Beck and Joe LaBauer. Maryland will enter only one man, Dave Friesbtat.

The draw and seedings will not be arranged until Saturday night when the NCAA tennis committee officially launches the tournament. Play will begin Monday and will last all week.

The complete list of entries: Arizona: Gary Peterson, Ellis Bryant; UCLA: Richard Doss, James Reed, Joseph Blatchford, Craig Garman; U. of California: Clifton Mayne, William Demas; Duke: Buzz Hettleman, Bobby Green, Leif Beck, Joe LaBauer.

Film Festival Starts Thursday, June 16

The Summer School Film Festival, sponsored by the Summer Activities Council and The Bureau of Visual Education of the Extension Division, will begin Thursday evening, June 16th, at 8:30 in Carroll Hall with its presentation of The Chaplin Festival, three groups of mutual comedies with Charlie Chaplin, produced in 1916 and 1917.

On June 23rd at 8:30, Pygmalion, based on the play by George Bernard Shaw, will be presented. It stars Leslie Howard and Wendy Miller.

At half past 8 on June 30th, the movie presentation will be Jascha Heifetz, a behind-the-scenes portrait of the violinist at home, working in his garden, playing tennis with his wife, and preparing for a concert. Also presented will be Trio, Life's widely-read photo-story on the great soloists, Rubenstein, Heifetz, and Piatigorsky, in rehearsals.

On July 7th, Rigoletto will be presented with costumed singers singing the best-known arias from the opera.

The July 14th presentation, Morning Star, shows the hazards encountered in a sheep drive from the Salt River Valley in Arizona to the home ranch in the White Mountains and closes with the 23rd Psalm, as scenes from the trip illustrate each phrase. The Major Religions of the World, also presented on the 14th, objectively surveys the origins, rituals, and symbols of the major religions of the world: Hinduism, Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedism.

The Film Series will be continued during the Second Session each Thursday night. Among the Second Session films are Macbeth, starring Orson Welles, and Open City, starring Anna Magnani. These films will be shown admission-free to all summer school students and guests.

King And Queen To Be Crowned At Annual Event

The annual Watermelon Festival will begin tomorrow night at 7 o'clock under the Davie Poplar. The program will get under way with over three hundred watermelons being served to the faculty and students, with Jim Crisp and his combo furnishing the music.

Beginning at 8 o'clock the first event will take place with Jim Wallace at the piano; next, the University Band directed by Chancellor House will give a strictly impromptu performance. Following Murray Wall, who will be the vocalist for the evening, a skit produced by Jerry Reese will be performed.

The next item on the program will be the watermelon eating contest between faculty and student teams. The committee in charge of the Festival announced the following members of the faculty to take part in the event: Miss Lila Ponder, Mrs. Rosemary Kent, Mr. Terrill, and Mr. Wadsworth. Additional team members are still to be announced.

The highlight of the evening will occur when the spotlight falls on the crowning of the King and Queen of the Festival. Pictures of the queen contestants will be on display in the Y-Court through today, and students may cast their votes for a nickel each. Five finalists will be selected from the contestants having the most votes, and these names with the King candidates' names will appear on a ballot in a final election to be determined by popular vote.

For the remainder of the evening there will be dancing in the parking lot behind Memorial Hall with Jim Crisp's Combo providing accompaniment.

The Watermelon Festival is in capable hands, the co-chairmen of the committee being John Kerr and Jean Marr. The remainder of the staff consists of Catherine Cobean, Carol Iobst, Marian Sutherland, John Riebel, Jim McIntyre and Ben Payne.

Make a point of taking part in the coming festivities, as the Watermelon event promises to be the outstanding social event of the summer session.

Amateur Photo Contest Announced

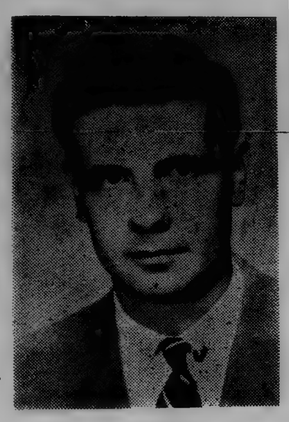
The Summer Activities Council and Graham Memorial are co-sponsoring a photography contest on the U.N.C. campus. The shots would depict interesting events on the campus. The best pictures will be used to compose a booklet which will be used to interest students in Summer School at U.N.C.

The contest rules are:

1. All photos must be original.
2. All work (developing, printing, and enlarging) must be done by the entrant.
3. The first-place picture will be awarded $15, and the second-place picture $10.

Graham Memorial has a darkroom which can be used and all students are urged to use these facilities.

Photos will be accepted from Monday, June 27th through Tuesday, July 12th. The three best pictures will be published each week in the Summer School Weekly, and from these the two best will be chosen.



For those who do not know how to develop their own film, two classes will be held, on Tuesday, June 28th, and Thursday, June 30th. These classes will meet in Roland Parker No. 1 at two o'clock on the two afternoons, and will be conducted by student amateur photographer Joe Latham.

Officers Are Elected For Drama Group

Officers for the Community Drama Group, which is sponsored by the Community Church of Chapel Hill, have been selected for the coming year. Elected were Walter Smith, chairman; Myra Lauterer, vice-chairman; Clara Richardson, librarian; and Pat Liston, publicity.

The group, which meets on alternate Sunday evenings to read plays, will continue to meet during the summer. The next meeting will be held Sunday, June 26 at 7:45 in the University Library's assembly room, when "The Male Animal," a comedy

ROY W. HOLSTEN

Holsten Named To New U.N.C. Post

Roy W. Holsten, Director of Student Activities at the University of North Carolina, has been named Assistant Director in the Office of Development Affairs effective July 15, 1955, Chancellor R. B. House announced today.

In his new position Holsten will be responsible for certain phases of the long-range development program for the University at Chapel Hill which is under the general direction of Charles M. Shaffer, Assistant to the Chancellor in the field of Development and Public Relations.

Holsten entered the University in September, 1946, and received his Bachelor's degree in English in March, 1950. Upon graduation he was employed by the Vick Chemical Company, Greensboro, North Carolina, as employment manager for the manufacturing division and editor of the Vick News. He returned to the University in February, 1952, as Assistant Dean of Students and was

Colloquiums Being Held Tuesdays

The first in the series of Tuesday night colloquiums was held June 14 in the Forest Theatre, sponsored by the School of Education. Mr. Nathan H. Yelton, executive secretary of the North Carolina Teachers' and State Employees' Retirement System, delivered the address on the "Proposals for Combining Social Security and the Teachers' and State Employees' Retirement System."

Mr. Yelton, a native of North Carolina from Mitchell County, was introduced by Dr. Guy B. Phillips, Director of the Summer Session. Mr. Yelton pointed out that as the Teachers' and State Employees' Retirement System now stands, teachers and state employees are not covered by Social Security, old-age and survivors' insurance. But he said that through the 1954 amendments to the Social Security Act, which went into effect January 1, 1955, and action taken by the State Legislature, teachers and state employees will be eligible to vote as to whether or not they wish to use a portion of the money which they pay into their retirement fund to obtain Social Security, old-age and survivors' benefits.

At present, the money in the retirement fund is invested in Government and municipal bonds, and this interest plus a supplement from the State amounts to about a 4% annual return. Under the new system the teachers and state employees would keep retirement benefits already amassed, and would use about 2/5 of the amount they pay into the retirement fund for Social Security, old-age and survivors' benefits. The rest would continue to go into the retirement fund.

The State, as their employer, would also contribute toward these Social Security benefits. The election is to be held on October 26, and in order to pass, a majority of the eligible employees must vote for it.

On June 21, Mr. Don Shoemaker, former editor of the Asheville Senti-

Bridge Lessons Given During Summer School

A student at Carolina need no longer be left out of the social whirl! Due to the great amount of interest evidenced in such a project, Bridge lessons are to be given during the summer.

The lessons, which begin next week, will be held in the cool Rendezvous Room of GM at 3:00 Tuesdays for elementary or beginning players, and 3:00 Thursdays for the advanced players.

The lessons are open to all summer school students at no cost to the student.

The classes will be instructed by Ray Clark and are sponsored by the Summer Activities Council.

Y-CABINET MEETING

There will be a meeitng in the Y-cabinet room Friday, June 24, at 4 o'clock to plan entertainment for children during the summer session. All interested students are urged to attend.

Summer Enrollment Shows An Increase

A slight increase in the percentage of North Carolinians enrolled at the University in Chapel Hill for the first summer term over that of 1954 is shown in a statistical report released by Chancellor R. B. House.

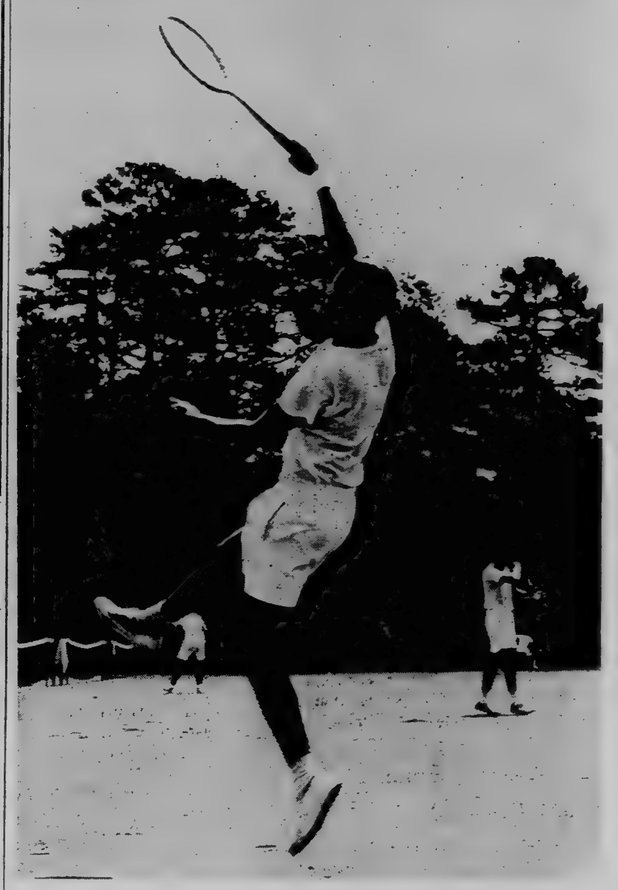
A breakdown of the total 2,939 registered indicates 2,453 students from North Carolina, or more than 83 per cent. Last year slightly less than 80 per cent were from in-state as reported by the Central Office of Records.

General College has the largest enrollment among the individual schools, with 909 students, followed by Graduate School with 753. A total graduate figure of 823 is reached when a number of professional school students are included.

Other registration figures include College of Arts and Sciences, 497; Business Administration School, 242; Education School, 172; and Law School, 73.

Out-of-state representation of students is wide and varied. Virginia leads with 80; followed by South Carolina with 77; New York, 44; Georgia, 43; and Florida, 39. All in all, thirty-four states and the District of Columbia have residents enrolled.

From beyond the boundaries of the States come 17 students from 12 foreign countries. Cuba and Puerto Rico lead with three each; India with two; and one student apiece from the Bahamas, El Salvador, Finland, France, Formosa, Hawaii, Iran, Saar and Venezuela.



Community Sing To Have Fine Entertainers

On Sunday, June 26, at 8:00 p.m. there will be a community sing in front of Graham Memorial. Nancy Murray, the director of this activity, has obtained some fine entertainers to perform at the sing.

John Parker, Jr., is a guitar player who also sings. He is a sophomore, is a pre-med student, and is an experienced performer. Sandy Thomas will be another performer. He composes, directs, and plays, and is a student of music in the Music Department here. He, too, has had previous experience.

But you, the audience, will need no experience — the words will be flashed on a screen, and the rhythm will be furnished by the performers—all you have to do is just sing the words. These community sings have been received with tremendous enthusiasm in former years, and it is hoped that the tradition will carry over this year.

Joseph Caldwell was the first president of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Cliff Mayne, University of California, makes a difficult return.

Among Those Pinned

Don Kurtz, Pi Lambda Phi, is pinned to Joyce Finger of Marion, S. C.

MARRIAGES

Martha Crowell and William Stewart will be married Saturday, June 25. The ceremony will take place at 8 o'clock in Hendersonville. Martha, a Delta Delta Delta, graduated this year with a major in English. They will live in Greensboro.

Henrietta Fisher and Cecil Fouchee were married on June 4. Dr. Fouchee graduated from Dental School last year, and they are at present living in Chapel Hill.

Sue Carter, Alpha Delta Pi, and Marty Jordan, Kappa Alpha, were married June 11 in the First Presbyterian Church of Concord. Marty Jordan graduated this year with a major in Industrial Relations. He was a member of the Golden Fleece, president of his fraternity, and vice-president of the student body. Sue graduated from Duke as a laboratory technician. They will live in Durham.

Shirley Simpson, Pi Beta Phi, will marry Allen Johnson, Kappa Alpha, June 25. Shirley is from Gastonia, and they will be married in the First Baptist Church. Allen graduated this year with a degree in English.

Alice Smith and Carl Barkley, both from Raleigh, were married June 4. Carl was vice-president of Kappa Alpha Fraternity. He was in the Naval ROTC and will be stationed at Norfolk.

Patricia Parnenter, Phi Beta Phi, was married on June 16 to Thomas York. The wedding was in Aiken, S. C.

Jesse Ashe, Chi Phi, and Lillian Davenport of Charlotte have set August 20 as the date for their wedding. Lillian attended WC for one year where she took a secretarial course. She is now employed by a Charlotte doctor.

Elections Are Held In Men's Dorms

During the past week elections have been held in the various men's dormitories to choose their Summer School presidents. These elections were held under the auspices of the Interim Council of the Men's Interdormitory Council.

Those elected president are as follows: Alexander, J. C. Golding; Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, Roy High; Connor, Charlie Todd; Grimes, John Faulkner; Joyner, Ed Warehime. Mangum, Ed Viser; Manley, Bu Foster; Old East, C. H. Brock; Old West, Zack Waters; Ruffin, Jac Angel; and Steele, Charlie Dunn.

In addition to the dorm presidents the members of the I. D. C. Interim Council will form the Summer School Men's Interdormitory Council. The men are Tom Bennett, Bob Harrington, Jack Hudson, and Al Laughinghouse.

Modern Dance Group Organized Last Week

The Modern Dance Group was organized Tuesday, June 14. Suzie Denton, who has danced three summers for the Rockettes in New York City, was made chairman of the group. They plan to take turns leading the group, thus giving each of the girls a chance at both participation and instruction. The group was organized with recreation being the main objective, and includes both beginners and advanced dancers. They have decided to meet every Tuesday and Thursday evening from 6 o'clock to 7:30 at the Dance Studio in the Woman's Gym.

Anyone interested in joining can go down to the Woman's Gym during one of the meetings, or may contact either John Riebel or Kirsten Milbrath at the Y.M.C.A.

Mrs. Price, the regular dance teacher at Chapel Hill, will be present at the meetings to give help and advice.

NCAA Tennis Championship Played Here

Seedings In Singles, Doubles Are Listed

The seventy-first National Collegiate Tennis Championships of the United States, under the auspices of the National Collegiate Athletic Association, is being held on the UNC campus courts, June 20 through June 25.

One of the prime goals toward which the competing schools are striving is the Ackerman Bowl. "The Ackerman Bowl is being put into competition this year by the University of California at Los Angeles to honor Mr. William Ackerman, coach of tennis at that institution. Mr. Ackerman will come to Chapel Hill to personally present the bowl."

The singles seeding are as follows: 1. Sammy Giammalva, Texas; 2. Clifton Mayne, Cal.; 3. Jacque Grigry, So. Cal.; 4. Jack Frost, Stanford; 5. Bill Quillian, Wash.; 6. Dick Doss, UCLA; 7. Jose Aquero, Tulane; 8. Pancho Contreras, So. Cal.; and 8. Bill Cranston, Yale.

The doubles are as follows: 1. Jacque Grigry-Allen Cleveland, So. Cal.; 2. Dick Doss-Joe Blatchford, UCLA; 3. Pancho Contreras-Joaquin Reyes, So. Cal.; and 4. Sammy Giammalva-Johnny Hernandez, Texas.

Jim Beatty Runs Fast Two-Mile

Jim Beatty placed second in one of the fastest National Collegiate Athletic Association two-mile runs since its inception 35 years ago.

Beatty placed second with a time of 9:07.8 to Ken Reiser, who came in first with a 9:04.5.

In the race Jim started off rather quickly and maintained a 15-yard lead throughout most of the first half. After that the pack caught up with him and for the next few laps the field remained the same with Jimmy running sixth. At the start of the last lap, Reiser took the lead which he maintained for the rest of the race. At the last curve Beatty started passing the pack, but was unable to recapture the lead.

According to Coach Dale Ranson, "Beatty's two-mile run is the best of any person in this part of the country (the ACC and Southeastern Conferences). In fact, his time, 9:07.8, would have won all but five of the tournaments."

Coach Ranson went on to say that, "Jimmy did a treemndous job, and hme is confident that Jimmy will go in to 9 minutes next year." He concluded by saying that Jim is not only good, he is great.

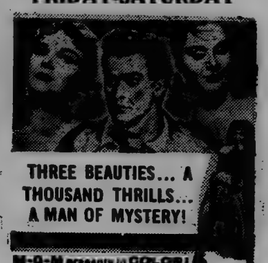
Dr. Henderson Elected President, Shaw Society

Dr. Archibald Henderson, retired professor of mathematics of the University of North Carolina, has been reelected president of the Shaw Society of America.

Dr. Henderson is the official biographer of George Bernard Shaw, and has written a number of books on the famous man of letters.



The election was held at the Grolier Club at New York City. Other officers who were elected were Richard Aldrich, Felix Grendon, Leonard Lyons, Maxwell Steinhardt, and Gene Tunney, active vice-presidents; honorary vice-presidents were Katherine Cornell, Samuel Goldwyn, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, and Thomas Mann.

The society voted to hold celebration in New York City next year in honor of the centenary of Shaw, which is also the time that Dr. Henderson's new biography of Shaw will be published. The new biography is called "George Bernard Shaw, The Man of the Century."

First Film Series Program Is Given

Last Thursday night in Carroll Hall the first of the Summer Activities Council sponsored Film Series presentations was held, A Charlie Chaplin Festival.

According to John Riebal of the "Y," approximately three hundred people turned out for this first showing.

All students and faculty members are encouraged to attend these free movies, to be held at eight o'clock each Thursday night in Carroll.

This week's presentation is to be "Pygmalion," based on the play by George Bernard Shaw and starring the late Leslie Howard, whom many of you will remember from the movie "Gone with the Wind."

Harrington Ineligible

Bob Harrington, the first and only male president of a woman's dormitory here at U.N.C., has been denied a seat on the Women's Residence Council.

The W.R.C. is composed of the sorority house managers, representatives from the women's dorms, and the presidents of the women's dorms.

Bob, when reached for comment, said that he was terribly disappointed that he couldn't serve on the W.R.C., but that he wished them a very successful summer in every way.

Bob will serve on the Men's Inter dormitory Council this summer, and he is also a member of the I.D.C. Interim Council.

ENGAGED

Robert Pfaff, Chi Psi, is engaged to Irene Raines from Woman's College.

Dr. Cecil Pless is engaged to Grace Gordon, Chi Omega.

James Seely, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, is engaged to Margret Cheatam of Henderson, N. C.

George Bennette To Give Recital June 28

The campus will be honored with the presence of George Bennette, the accomplished young pianist, on June 28th in conjunction with the Piano Clinic sponsored by the Music Department and SAC which will begin here on June 27th.

Mr. Bennette was born in Enfield, North Carolina, and received his secondary education at the Raleigh School for the Blind in Raleigh, and graduated from high school in Greensboro. He received his Bachelor of Music from Oberlin College in 1951, where he was awarded the Pi Kappa Lambda citation for being the outstanding student at Oberlin. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Pi Kappa Lambda at Oberlin.

At the University of North Carolina, Mr. Bennette received his Bachelor of Arts Degree in 1952, and continued his studies in New York at the Juilliard School of Music where he received his Master of Science degree. He has been on a scholarship at Juilliard for the past year, and will go to London in the Fall to study at the Royal Academy as a result of his having been awarded a Fulbright Scholarship.

Mr. Bennette's program will include some selections from Bach, Ravel, Chopin, and many others. We are indeed fortunate to have such a talented musician visit this campus.

3,000 Attend Watermelon Festival Friday Night

Bob Harrington Elected President Of Summer School Student Council

The Summer School Student Government Board held its first weekly meeting Tuesday night, June 21, in the Woodhouse Conference Room of Graham Memorial. Student Body President Larry Walker presided. The Board passed Bob Harrington's bill setting up a Summer School Publications Board, a resolution endorsing the Watermelon Festival, and elected Bob Harrington chairman of the Student Council and secretary of the Student Government Board. Members of the Student Government Board are Bob Allison, Bob Harrington, Jack Hudson, Larry McElroy, Bob Ferrell, Frank Warren, Ed Lipman, Bill Formyduvall, and Larry Walker.

The Board appointed to the Graham Memorial Board of Directors: Pat Oliver, Ken Clark, Bob Harrington, Frank Warren, Bill Formyduvall, and Larry McElroy.

Carolina Playmakers To Present Comedy

The Carolina Playmakers production of "The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker," a comedy, by Liam O'Brien. will be presented in the Playmakers Theatre, Thursday and Friday, July 7 and 8, at 8:30 P.M. John W. Parker, director, says the rehearsal period is well under way with the following cast: Baxter Sasser, from Carrboro, as Pa; Les Casey, from Chapel Hill, as Ma; Manly Wade Wellman, from Chapel Hill, as Grandpa; Barbara Bounds, from Chapel Hill, as Aunt Jane; Jude Harrison, from Newton, as Kate; Paul Gaston, from Fairhope, Ala., as Wilbur Fifield; Carl Williams, from Charlotte, as Dr. Fifield; Taylor Williams, from Robersonville, as Quinlan; and James Hager, from Harmony, as the Sheriff. In addition there are ten children in supporting roles.

An interesting sideline is that two of the ten children in the cast are Mike and Dee Casey who "belong to" Mrs. Les Casey who has the feminine lead as Ma Pennypacker.

"The Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker" is a comedy whose plot revolves around a man, Mr. Pennypacker, who has two wives, living in different cities—neither of whom know about the other. The resulting complications are obvious, and make for a good evening's entertainment.

Tickets for this summer production of the Carolina Playmakers went on sale at the Business Office, 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard, Thursday, June 30.

Fall Pre-registration On July 7 And 8

Pre-registration for the Fall semester will be on July 7 and 8. Registration for the second summer session will take place on July 18. Students wishing to register or preregister are asked to go directly to their adviser's office on the above dates.

Attention, Candidates For Graduate Degrees

All candidates for graduate degrees for the August Commencement should come by the Graduate Office, 202 South Building, and fill out a diploma card.

Planetarium To Present 'Trip To Saturn' Show

The greatest show OFF earth opened Tuesday night at the Morehead Planetarium.

It's the Planetarium's annual summer excursion out of this world, this year "A Trip to Saturn," an all-new exciting production which will run from June 28 through September.

In the comfort of the Planetarium's air-conditioned chamber, patrons will take a simulated trip in a nuclear powered space ship through millions of miles off earth. So realistic are the improved sound effects this year that one has the sensation he is actually moving through space at a phenomenal speed.

This summer the base of operations will be the moon from which the space ship will explore the outer world, buzz Mars, pass through the asteroid belt, and land on Titan and Enceladus which are satellites of Saturn.

Passengers will be thrilled over their explorations of a whole new world and excited by the full rich colors of the heavenly bodies. Talented artists have contributed new settings and the able Planetarium technicians have done their usual excellent job to provide a show chock full of exciting realism.

An expanded schedule of presentations will go into effect when "A Trip to Saturn" opens. Shows will be presented nightly at 8:30 with matinees Saturdays at 11 a.m., 3 and 4 p.m., and Sundays at 2, 3 and 4 p.m. Additional performances will be presented on request of large groups.

Swimmers To Attempt Four New Records

Phil Drake and Charlie Krepp, UNC's top varsity swimmers, will try to set four American records in an AAU sanctioned record trial Saturday at 6:00 p.m.

Drake, winner of the 200-yard butterfly breaststroke at the NCAA championships last March, will try to better the American records in the 200-meter and 220-yard butterfly. Drake was the number one man on the NCAA All-America team in the butterfly event released last month.

Krepp, who was placed on the All-America team in both the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke, will try to better the backstroke records at 200 meters and 220 yards.

Both Krepp and Drake, along with other members of the Summer team, will go to Los Angeles next month to participate in the National AAU outdoor championships.

Officials for the record trials will be Jack Lowder, Art Mackler, Bob Colbert, Carl Blythe, Henry House, Ralph Casey, Dick Jamerson, Ham Strayhorn, and Joe Hilton.

Square Dance To Be Held Friday, July 8

There will be a square dance on Friday, July 8, on the patio of Woollen Gym. The dance will feature sets of eight people who will learn the more intricate steps of square dancing. Mrs. Beth Oken will call.

Chancellor House and King Hugh Lefler congratulate Marie Woody upon her ascension to the throne as Queen of the Watermelon Festival.

Room Reservations Are To Be Made For Second Summer Term

Jim Wadsworth, Director of Housing, has announced that the dorm managers will distribute room reservation forms for the next session next Monday night. According to the Housing Office, Battle-Vance-Pettigrew will definitely be closed next session. All students should be sure to fill out their registration forms in order to make sure their room will be reserved. There is a possibility that more dorms will be closed.

Football Tickets On Sale To Student Wives Now

Students whose wives will be living in Chapel Hill next fall can now buy student wives' football tickets, according to Vernon Crook, Business Manager of the Athletic Association.

July first is the final date that priorities will be permitted. All alumni, faculty and employees of the University can now apply for season tickets to the home games.

After the first of July, the general public may apply. In order to get good seats, get your application in the mail as soon as possible.

The home schedule as released by the Athletic Association is as follows: Oklahoma, Sept. 24; Maryland, Oct. 15; Tennessee, Oct. 29; Notre Dame, Nov. 12; and Virginia, Nov. 19.

Special features next fall include High School Band Day on October 29, in which over two thousand high school musicians will render a band program at half-time, and Homecoming Day on October 15 with the homecoming displays and the crowning of the homecoming queen.

Faculty Club Luncheon To Be Held July 5

Professor Frank R. Strong, dean of the College of Law at Ohio State University, will speak on "Pre-professional Education" at the luncheon meeting of the Faculty Club in the Carolina Inn at 1:00 p.m. on Tuesday, July 5. Dean Strong is a visiting professor in the School of Law of the University of North Carolina for the first summer session.

Graduate Student Committee Plans Picnic And Dance

The Graduate Student Committee has planned a Graduate Picnic Dance, Saturday, July 9, from 6:30-10:00. A picnic supper will be served on the lawn of McIver from 6:30-7:30, and dancing will follow from 8-10 in the parlor of McIver Dorm. Music will be furnished by a combo.

All graduate students are urged to attend. Admission is free.

An invitation is extended to faculty members. Last summer over 400 graduate students enjoyed this event and we hope to repeat the successful evening.

The committee wishes to extend thanks to the Summer Activities Council, the Y staff, and Graham Memorial for their help in planning this event. Members of the committee are: Edna Sydnor, chairman; Charlie Todd, Burt Goldman, Ruffin Blaylock, Jane Todd, Paul Gaston, Lu Overton, and Bill Reeves.

Student Directories Are Now Available

The biggest bargain of the year is now available to the students and faculty members in the form of the Summer School Student Directory.

As the Directory was partially subsidized by the Summer Activities Council, it has been possible to offer it for sale for the nominal fee of only fifteen cents.

Besides the usual alphabetical listing of campus names and addresses, this summer's Directory has the student's year in school, whether or not he will be here both sessions, as well as his home address and phone number.

The directories are on sale at the information desk in G.M. and in the office at the "Y."

Variety Show Planned

All persons interested in producing a variety show are invited to the first committee meeting which is being held in Roiand Parker Lounge No. 1 on Tuesday, July 5th a,t 4:30 o'clock.

If you would like to help produce this show, or have talent, or friends who are talented, plan to attend this meeting.

Faculty Noses Out Students In Contest

The Watermelon Festival, which was held Friday night in front of Davie Poplar, came off without a hitch. The three co-sponsors of the festival—the Summer Activities Council, YWCA, and YMCA—are to be congratulated on its smooth operation.

The Festival began at 7 o'clock with free watermelon for everyone, and a contest to see who could eat the most—the faculty or the students. (Needless to say, all 400 of the watermelons were gone at the end of the contest.) The eating contest was won by the remarkable faculty, but it was close. Dean Katherine Carmichael came through when all looked dark for the faculty and won the deciding point by being the "most amusing while eating watermelon."

Marie Woody of Durham—Alderman Dormitory's contestant — was crowned Watermelon Queen, and Hugh T. Lefler—another one of our remarkable faculty members—was crowned King. The four other finalists in the beauty contest were: Helen Ervin, Jackie Van Hook, Sarah Kelly, and Ann Onley.

After the contest, the crowd moved to the B. A. parking lot where Jim Crisp and his combo entertained, providing round and square dance music.

Men's Interdormitory Council Holds Election

Last Wednesday night the Summer School Men's Interdormitory Council elected its officers at its first meeting of the summer. Elected president was Bob Harrington, who is also chairman of the Student Council. Charley Dunn was elected vice-president, C. H. Brock, secretary, and Ed Warehime, treasurer.

Tom Bennett, a long-time member of the IDC Court, was named that body's chairman for the summer while Roy High was elected court clerk. Also named to the IDC Court were Jack Hudson, Al Laughinghouse, and John Faulkner.

Bill Foster, president of Manley Dorm, was named chairman of the IDC Court Investigating Committee. Jack Angel and J. C. Golding were elected to that committee.

The purpose of the Summer School IDC is to represent the dormitories to the administration, to maintain suitable dormitory conditions, particularly in regard to discipline, and to provide a social program for the dorms during the summer sessions.

According to the IDC president, Bob Harrington, dorm rules and regulations will be rigidly enforced. All infractions will be looked into and the culprits will be brought before the IDC Court.

Grail To Sell Class Rings In Y-Court Tuesday

The Grail will sell class rings next Tuesday, July 5, in the Y-court from 9 till 3. Mr. Lee Blackwell, L. G. Balfour representative, will be here to help in taking orders. This will be the only time rings will be sold this term.

One of the first benefactors of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was Benjamin Smith, later governor, who donated 20,000 acres of land to the University in 1789.

Sunday Services At Chapel Hill Churches

The churches of Chapel Hill have outlined an interesting and varied Sunday night program for the University students in their congregations.

At 6 P.M. the Baptist Student Union will meet for supper. Evening worship is at 8:00 with everyone invited. The Reverend J. O. Cansler is in charge of the Baptist Student Union.

The young people's group of the Episcopal Church, the Canterbury Club, will meet at 6:00 for supper. The speaker will be the Reverend Robert W. Insko. At 6:30 on this Thursday night, the Canterbury Club will gather for a hayride.

The Westminster Fellowship of the Presbyterian Church will have a supper meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Wynn, and the Reverend Harry Smith will speak on "The Marxist View of Man." Presbyterian students are requested to gather at the "Y" where transportation will be provided to the Wynn residence.

The Methodist student group, Wesley Foundation, will meet at 6:00 for supper. Following this, the Reverend Morton Kurtz will speak on "Christianity and Migrant Labor."

The Community Church of Chapel Hill will hold its regular morning service at the Forest Theatre. Chancellor R. B. House will be the speaker. The service will begin at 9:30 A.M. At approximately 9:05 A.M., two preludes by Mendelssohn as performed by Albert Schweitzer, will be played. In case of rain, the services will be held in Hill Hall.

Modern Dance Group Still Has Vacancies

The Modern Dance group which meets on Tuesday evenings at six o'clock in Woollen Gym still has room in the class for people who are interested in getting some exercise, learning to dance, or continuing their dance studies.

Outdoor Pool Is Open Six Days A Week

Like to swim? Well, the outdoor pool is open for you to splash around.

The pool is open from 12 noon to 6 o'clock on Monday to Friday and from 2 to 5 on Sunday. Children are allowed from 12 to 1 and from 3 to 4 each day.

Townspeople can purchase tickets from the University cashier in the basement of South Building.

For those who can't swim, or who feel they need lessons, Ralph Casey is conducting swimming lessons, both for children and adults. For further information regarding these lessons, contact Mr. Casey in his office at Woollen Gym.

Beach Parties, Pinnings, Marriages, Local Events

Beach Parties: Delta Sigs at Myrtle, K.A.'s at Myrtle and Pawley's Island, Sigma Chi's at Myrtle, and the Kappa Sigs at Myrtle.

Locals: Weiner roast and beer party by the Kappa Sigs last Thursday, and a mint-julep party this Wednesday; PiKA's at Hogan's last Friday night; Theta Chi's will be broiling steaks at Hogan's Saturday night. The Tri-Delts were entertained Thursday by the PiKA's and Sigma Nu's.

Pinned: Jeanette Uzzell, Chi O, to Bob Shelley, DKE; Sally Patterson, Tri-Delt, to Homer Yadkin, SPE at U. Va.; Nancy Franklin, Chattanooga, to Bob Allison, Phi Delt; Virginia Harriss, Chi O, to Billy Armfield, SAE.

Jane Cocke, vice-president of the Tri-Delt house, is going to attend the national convention of that sorority in Ohio.

Married: Sally Liggett, Tri-Delt, to George Smith, Zete, on June 15. The couple are now making their home in Durham. Robert L. Kurtz, Pi Lamb, to Diane Burg, June 5, at the St. Moritz Hotel, New York.

ADPi Sorority Buys Rosemary Street House

Alpha Delta Pi sorority last week purchased Mrs. I. W. Rose's home at 411 East Rosemary Street which will be extensively remodeled into a chapter house.

Mrs. H. C. Cranford, Jr., of Durham, president of the sorority's housing corporation, stated that the house will be more than doubled in size by the remodeling program, which is expected to begin in August and to be completed in December or January.

Architect James M. Webb of Chapel Hill and his associates are designing the new addition and planning remodeling of the present structure. When completed the house will comfortably accommodate 24 coeds and will have ample social and recreational facilities for the chapter's 56 active members.

The University of North Carolina was provided for in the first constitution of North Carolina, which was drawn up in 1776.

Some of the 3000 attending the Watermelon Festival square dance in the Business Administration parking lot.

Gordon Blackwell To Lecture At Oxford University Five Weeks

Dr. Gordon W. Blackwell, Kenan Professor of Sociology in the University, will give a series of lectures at Oxford University in England during five weeks this summer. He and Mrs. Blackwell are scheduled to sail from New York on the Queen Elizabeth on Wednesday, June 29.

Dr. Blackwell was invited earlier in the year to serve as one of the lecturers in the Fulbright sponsored conference on American Studies which will be attended by 60 professors from British universities. His general topic will be American Social Institutions. Other lecturers will include Barry Bingham of the Louisville Courier and Professor Van Woodward of John Hopkins University.

The Blackwells will spend several days in Cambridge where he will give one lecture. They will have a week in London and a week in Paris, returning on the Queen Elizabeth with arrival in New York on August 30.

Two collections of mounted individual photographs of several University of North Carolina classes have been donated to the North Carolina Collection of the Library here.

Miss Sallie Foard MacNider of the library staff donated a collection of pictures of the Class of 1904. The Rt. Rev. J. Kenneth Pfohl of Winston-Salem donated a collection which included members of the Classes of 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1901.

UNC Graduate Student Gets Fulbright Award

Mary Evelyn Stringer, graduate student at the University of North Carolina, has received notice that she has been awarded a Fulbright grant for 1955-56 for the study of 15th century panel painting at the University of Freiburg.

Miss Stringer, the daughter of William Stringer of Moberly, Mo., was graduated Phi Beta Kappa from the University of Missouri, and has taught since 1947 at Mississippi State College for Women, where she is now assistant professor of art.

She is presently a candidate for the M.A. Degree at the University of North Carolina, in the field of art history. Her thesis is being directed by Dr. Clemens Sommer, professor of art at the University of North Carolina.

Miss Stringer was also awarded a Danforth grant for further study, but had to decline it because of the Fulbright award.

Her paintings have been exhibited in New Orleans, Norfolk, Va., and in the Southeastern Annual at Atlanta. She is a member of the Mississippi Art Association and the Southeastern Art Education Association, and is listed in "Who's Who in American Art."

Other students in the University's Art History Department who have received awards are John Schnorrenberg of Asheville, who has been granted a second-year scholarship at Princeton where he is working towards his Ph.D. in Art History (M.A. in 1953); Joseph Bolt of Sarasota, Fla., now professor of art history at the University of Alabama, who received a Southern scholarship to complete his work towards the Ph.D. degree at Harvard; and Edward Bryant of Lenoir, (M.A. UNC, 1954), who is currently completing a year's study in Italy in the field of art history under a Fulbright grant.

Supervisor-Teacher Relationship Discussed By Dr. Harold Adams In Talk Last Tuesday

Public school teachers heard themselves cast in the role of students last Tuesday in an address given by Dr. Harold Adams, prominent Kentucky educator and visiting professor at the UNC Summer Session.

In outlining a plan of what he considered an effective school supervision program and ideal relationship between supervisors and teachers, Dr. Adams advocated a "cooperative approach by teachers and supervisors in which supervisors are teachers of the teachers" with each looking toward the common good of the classroom pupils.

"All teachers—even the best—must be supervised," he said, "because teaching techniques are continually changing, and learning processes are creating new demands on teaching."

Next week's colloquium will be devoted to a discussion of "The High School Testing Program" led by three prominent North Carolina educators. The following week a film of new educational practices in France will be shown.

NOTICE

This paper will not be published next week. Copies of "What's Going On" will be placed in all dorms, fraternities, Y-court, and Graham Memorial. Consult them for the week's activities.

A new assistant professor has been named in the School of Journalism. William S. Caldwell, a native of South Dakota and a graduate of the University of Minnesota, will join the UNC staff in September.

Graduate Picnic And Dance Is Huge Success

Approximately 300 graduate students attended the graduate dance and picnic held on the McIver lawn and in the main parlor Saturday night. The picnic, starting at 6:30, was threatened by rain but the threat was short lived and the picnic continued until 7:30 P.M.

The dance started at 8:00 with music furnished by Jimmy Johnson and his band.

The dance was well attended and lasted until 10:00 P.M.

The members of the committee who made this event such a social success are: Charlie Todd, Burt Goldman, Ruffin Blaylock, Jane Todd, Paul Gaston, Lu Overton, Bill Reeves, and Edna Synder, Chairman.

Welcome Party Slated For Second Term Students In GM

The Summer Activities Council plans to open the second session of summer school with a big party in Graham Memorial. There will be refreshments served in the lounge and will be dancing in the Rendezvous Room. The plans are well underway to Welcome everyone on Monday night, July 18, at 7:30 p.m. The committee in charge of the party is under the leadership of Peggy Ward and Woody Sears as co-chairmen.

International Relations Club Is Organized

At the beginning of the summer session the International Relations Club, an organization of American and foreign students at U.N.C., was organized under the auspices of the Summer Activities Council. The purposes of the I. R. C., according to its chairman, Bob Harrington, are to provide an organization where stuqents from all lands can exchange ideas, customs, and aspirations; and to maintain an organization that will provide fellowship for the international students here on campus.

The members of the I. R. C. are: Helen Carapetian, Jim McIntyre, Bill Wolf, Charlie Iralu, Ram Desikan, Claude Shotts, Carolyn Teachey, Shirley Scarborough, F. S. McArthur, Barbara Still, Charles Howell, John Riebel, and Bob Harrington.

June 29, the I. R. C. presented a program of film slides of Ceylon and India which were shown by Mr. Erwin Danziger, a former Carolina students who has been at the University of Ceylon as a Fulbright Scholar during the past year. At this presentation Mr. Danziger commented on the slides and answered questions. At the conclusion of the program the guests looked over some of the pamphlets that he had brought back from Ceylon. The meeting was attended by over one hundred townspeople and students.

The I. R. C. hopes to have several more programs before the end of summer school. Plans are currently being made to have an International Open House July 29, a program on Latin America, and an International Students picnic.

All students who are interested in joining the I. R. C. and helping to plan these programs are urged to contact Bob Harrington at 404 Joyner or the Y. M. C. A. office.

Auditions To Be Held For N. C. Symphony

The North Carolina Symphony Society will hold its annual auditions for vocalists, instrumentalists, and child artists in Asbury Hall, East Campus, Duke University, Durham, September 16-17, Dr. Benjamin F. Swalin, director, announced today.

Vocalists will audition Friday afternoon, September 16, beginning at 3 o'clock.

Instrumentalists will be heard from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. on Saturday, September 17.

Child soloists will audition Saturday morning at 11 o'clock.

The following is a list of the piano concertos for adult auditions: Bartok—Concerto No. III; D'Indy—Symphony on a French Mountain Air; Mozart—Concerto in E flat major (K.271); Rachmaninof—Concerto No. III; and Saint-Saens—Concerto No. II.

Soloists should provide their own accompanists for auditions. Instrumentalists are required to play from memory a concerto on the approved list for the 1955-56 season. Vocalists should be prepared to sing arias and lieder from the Orchestra's current repertoire list.

All applicants will be judged by an Auditions' Committee. Winners will be features as soloists with either the Full or Little Symphony during the 1955-56 season.

Each applicant may secure an application blank, auditions' list and a set of conditions by writing the North Carolina Symphony Society, Box 1211, Chapel Hill. All applications must be postmarked by September first.

Gene Strassler Will Direct

The Summer School Chorus will present a concert of choral music in Hill Hall tonight at 8 p.m. under the joint sponsorship of the Department of Music and the Summer Activities Council.

Gene Strassler, graduate student from Apollo, Pennsylvania, is directing the chorus, composed of both faculty and students.

Soloists will include Mrs. Martha Fouse, Chapel Hill secretary and housewife; Miss Roberta Dixon of Raleigh, UNC music students and Everett Hall, UNC professor of philosophy.

Mrs. Fouse had leading roles in campus musical productions during the past year—"The Marriage of Figaro" and "Show Boat." Miss Dixon also appeared in "Show Boat," in addition to serving as president of the Women's Glee Club.

Mr. Hall has been active in choral work for many years, singing with the Stanford University Chapel Choir and recently with the Chapel Hill Community Church choir.

The accompanists are Lila Ponder and Lillian Piebernik.

The major work of the Summer Chorus concert will be the "Mass in G Minor" for solo and double chorus, by the contemporary English composer, Ralph Vaughan-Williams.

Director Strassler explained that the composition, written in 1922, has had few performances in this country, "a fact which in no way reflects upon its musical merit."

The chorus will also present a polyphonic setting of "Psalm 65" by the French Huguenot composer, Claude Goudimel. A small choir will perform "Five Songs on Old Texts" by Paul Hindemith, a teacher of composition and theory at Yale University until his recent retirement, and "one of the most influential of the modern composers," according to Mr. Strassler.

George V. Denny, Jr. Moderates Town Meet

Mr. George V. Denny, Jr., founder of the "America's Town Meeting of the Air," and a Carolina graduate, arrived in Chapel Hill yesterday for a short visit and a lecture in Carroll Hall. His speech on "Give Your Mind a Chance" indicated "Some practical ways to train your mind to give you the right answers."

He stated that "Until we release our minds from our self-imposed slavery (listening largely to congenial views), and seek to understand principles of human relations in universal terms just as the physical scientists have done, we cannot expect our minds to give us the right answers when we try to think about our common problems."

Campus Leader Gets Government Position

George F. Warren, Jr., long a leader in Student Government on this campus, has accepted a position with the Federal Government. His primary job will be to prepare and man the country's defenses.

He will be working directly with the Armed Forces and will receive his assignments from the Pentagon in our nation's capital.

Warren was noted for his outspoken views against a certain campus literary organization and for his ceaseless struggle to better conditions for the little man.

Warren's last word was for all men to band together for the common good, to recognize the common enemy, and to strive for all things good.

Larry McElroy will continue Warren's research in Syntheses of Pyrimidopyrimidines and Activity of Pallidized Charcoal Catalysts in conjunction with three well known beer manufacturing concerns and several of the local purveyors of fermented malt and hops.

Plans Being Made For IRC Open House

According to Bob Harrington, Chairman of the International Relations Club, the I. R. C. is planning to present an International Open House Friday, July 29, from seven to nine o'clock that night.

The first planning meeting for the Open House was held last Wednesday afternoon. At that time it was dtcided by the planning group to assign special jobs to individual members.

Jim McIntyre was assigned refreshments, Challie Iralu—invitations, Helen Carapetian—talent, Ram Desikan—display, Carolyn Teachey and Bob Harrington—publicity.

All students and townspeople are invited to attend the Open House which will feature displays of foreign lands, a talent show, music, and refreshments.

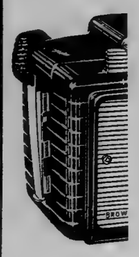
The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill was forced to close for five years during the Reconstruction Period, from 1870 to 1875.

In 1859 the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill had the second largest student body in America.

Men's Interdormitory Council Holds Meet

Last Wednesday night the Men's Interdormitory Council held its second meeting of the summer. The meeting presided over by President Bob Harrington saw several important measures discussed.

The most important of these was the discussion concerning thefts that have recently occurred in the men's dormitories. It was announced that the thefts were being looked into by the I. D. C. Investigating Committee.



According to Tom Bennett, I. D. C. Chairman, this matter is an Honor Council offense which could lead to a convicted student's expulsion from the University. Harrington urged that all dormitory residents keep their doors locked when they leave their rooms in order to prevent any repetition of the thefts.

Also discussed at the meeting were proposed dormitory parties. Several dorm Presidents said that they hoped to have parties in the near future if their dorms' residents were willing to chip in to help pay for them. Also plans were made to have an I. D. C. Watermelon Party in August if funds could be procured. This event would be open to all dorm residents and their dates.

As one of the last orders of business the lack of fire extinguishers in the dormitories was discussed. It was agreed that this was a dangerous

Postgrad Dental Course Underway At UNC

Dentistry for Children, a five-day post-graduate course, will get underway at the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry in Chapel Hill Monday, July 11, with Dr. William W. Demerrit as director.

A second course in the same area has been set for July 18-22, as part of the UNC Dental School's post-graduate series conducted throughout the years.

A limited number of the state's practicing dentists attend the courses, which include both lectures and laboratory work, to keep up-to-date on latest trends in dental practice and equipment.

Educators At University Of North Carolina Cite Need For State Testing Program

A state-wide testing program in public schools and early years of college will help the students by pointing out their weaknesses, and the institutions, by showing areas of needed study, three North Carolina educators said in the weekly Tuesday Night Colloquium.

Three views of testing were presented by the speakers: Dr. W. D. Perry, director of the UNC Testing Service; Dr. Allen S. Hurlburt of Raleigh and Chapel Hill, assistant state superintendent of public instruction; and Dr. Dennis H. Cooke, president of High Point College and the N. C. College Conference.

Dr. Cooke emphasized that a testing program "is not intended to compare and rate high schools nor to determine which are strong and which are weak, but to determine the areas where the high school graduates are weak, with the view of correcting and strengthening these weaknesses."

Major areas in which college freshmen are weak, Dr. Cooke said, are reading and vocabulary, writing and spelling, arithmetic problems and computation, and especially, "in written and spoken English grammar and composition."

The panel explained that annual fall testing beginning in the fourth grade would be the ideal pattern for a testing program, but a less extensive compromise program would provide testing every fourth year, followed by remedial work.

Dr. Perry noted that public school personnel, "who are responsible for children's education in total development, need a program of measurement and evaluation, and an outlook of the pupil's overall education, not merely his yearly experiences."

Selection of high school graduates who will best profit from college education will be an important benefit of a state testing series, Dr. Cook pointed out. "The institutions will be able to identify seniors deserving scholarships," he added.

Presiding at the program was Dr. Gordon Ellis of the UNC School of Education, which sponsors the Tuesday Colloquiums. The July 12 program will include a film on French education reforms, and a discussion led by Dr. W. Carson Ryan of UNC.

First Summer Session's Last Square Dance Held

The Square Dance held last Friday night on the Patio of Woollen Gymnasium was the last such dance of the first session to be sponsored by the Summer Activities Council. Previous dances followed the Welcome Party and the Watermelon Festival.

In spite of the rainy afternoon and evening, a crowd of more than 70 dancers turned out for the occasion. The weatherman co-operated by holding off the rain until the dance was over. Mrs. Beth Okun did a fine job of calling, and everyone enjoyed the variety of dances.

Because of the enthusiasm shown, it has been decided to hold Square Dances every Friday night during the second session of Summer School. Present plans are that they will be held on the Patio of Woollen Gym. Chairman of arrangements is Ed Warehime of Durham.

situation that should not be allowed to exist. It was decided to have the I. D. C. President look into the matter.

Before closing the meeting Harrington appointed two committee chairmen. Named chairman of the Social Committee was Charlie Dunn, the I. D. C. Vice-President. Jack Angel, President of Ruffin Dormitory, was chosen Publicity Committee chairman.

Morehead Planetarium Displays Art Exhibit

An exhibition of 27 water colors, pencil and wash drawings and oils and pen sketches by Geoffrey Jenkinson, English-born artist now residing in Thomasville, opened in the Morehead Art Gallery here this week coincident with acceptance of his third work for display by the Royal Academy Art Gallery in London.

This is the second exhibition at the Morehead Art Gallery by the young artist who has been in this country only since 1950. Nationally recognized in England and accorded the honor of having a painting hung in the Royal Academy at the age of 21, Jenkinson's work has yet to be recognized in the U. S. to the extent that it has in his native land.

English newspapers have carried a story about 29-year-old Jenkinson and published a three column picture of his newest painting.

Now a member of the designing department of the Thomasville Chair Co., Jenkinson is showing in the Morehead Gallery a number of North Carolina scenes, including Lake Lure, Blue Ridge Mountains, a mountain valley, and an impression of Randolph County.

Jenkinson's trademark is the minute detail and depth of field in his paintings. They and his sketches show a keen insight of both the metropolitan as well as the rural scene.

A quiet, unassuming person, Jenkinson devotes most of his spare time to artistic endeavors. His latest honor from the Royal Academy was paid to an English subject, "The Thames Clyde Express Leaving at St. Paneras." It has prompted critics to say that he has achieved greater fame in the Royal Academy than any artist in this country, and possibly in his native land.

SAC To Present Variety Show July 13

The Summer Activities Council at U.N.C. will present a variety show of college talent Wednesday night, July 13, at 8:00 p.m. in the Forest Theatre. Admission will be free. In the case of rain or snow the show will be held in Memorial Auditorium.

Boots Bennett, Norfolk, Virginia, will be Master of Ceremonies, and will also lead the audience in several songs.

Featured among the acts will be: Boots Bennett on the piano, Jerry Reece, Andrews, N. C., in a skit, Louise Keen, Mt. Olive, will dance the Charleston, Elsie Harris, Mt. Airy, will do a ballet, Pat Gregory, Benson, song and dance girl, Joan Moser, Swannona, folk singer, Ulysse Lancaster, Sewanee, Tennessee, will play the guitar and sing.

The nurses will feature an eight woman combo on washtubs, dishpans, washboards, and bedpans. Starring: Mary Lou Norwood, Morehead City; Barbara Hedberg, Charlotte, N. C.; Margaret Davis, McDonald, N. C.; Francis Fowler, Durham; Shirley Guenthner, Washington, D. C.; Ann Page, Buckannon, W. Va.; and Doris White, Greensboro, N. C.

Everyone is cordially invited. Arrangements are being made by a committee composed of: Chairman, Walt Geddie, Rocky Mount; Anna Windley, Washington, N. C.; Jean Marr, High Point; Nell Scott, Goldsboro; Susan McLamb, Goldsboro; Marv Porter, Hendersonville; Bill Formyduvall, Bladenboro; and Bill Cyr, Butner, N. C.

Although a state institution, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill did not receive state appropriations for almost a hundred years after it first began operating, in 1795.

AAU Plans Cancelled BY CH Swim Club

Ralph Casey, coach of the Chapel Hill Swim Club, said last night his team will not go to the National AAU outdoor swimming meet next week because of polio reports in the Los Angeles area.

Casey said he understood the incidence of polio was high in the area and that he "just would rather not take a chance."

He said the action followed a call from one of his team's parents regarding the polio reports.

Casey said he checked with the Orange County Health Department and with doctors who believed the trip might pass without incident.

He said he did not believe trials for his team might be arranged on the East Coast because it might set a precedent and cause other teams to request the same arrangement.

Casey's squad included Charles Krepp, Baltimore, runnerup in the 220-yard backstroke at the AAU meet at Yale in April; and Phil Drake, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., No. 1 in the NCAA butterfly competition.

Others members are Lee Holmes, Ft. Meade, Md., distance; Gene Coggins, Philadelphia, sprinter; Tony Schiffman, Greensboro, distance; and Barry Goldwater, Staunton Military Academy, orthodox breast stroke.

Goldwater is the son of U. S. Sen. Barry Goldwater (D-Ariz).

Casey's squad has been practicing four hours a day for the past five weeks.

Interdenominational Picnic Held Sunday

On Sunday night at 6:00 the students from the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational-Christian churches sponsored an interdenominational picnic. Everyone met at "Y" Court and walked down to Battle Park for the picnic supper. After the picnic, there was singing and fellowship followed by a student led worship service.

The chairman of the food committee was Amy Fisher of the Baptist Student Union and the chairman of the worship committee is Ancy Hoover of the Westminster Fellowship and the fellowship committee is headed by a representative of the Wesley Foundation.

The advisers for the picnic were Rev. James Cansler, Rev. Joel Savell, Rev. Richard Jackson, Rev. Harry Smith and Mr. John Riebel of the Y. M. C. A. staff.

New Chairman Is Named For SAC

As the second session of summer school opens, the S. A. C. will make a change in part of the officers. Bill Formyduvall who has been co-chairman with Hazel Crawford for the first session has resigned his position and for second session, Woody Sears and Hazel Crawford will head the S. A. C. Bill and Hazel have headed a very lively and enthusiastic council during the first session and the activities which have taken place during this first session have been under their capable leadership and coordination. Bill will continue his job as editor of the Summer School Weekly during the second session and everyone is looking forward to the fine activities that have been planned for the second session under Bill and Hazel's leadership. Woody Sears and Hazel Crawford are hoping that anyone who is interested in working on the committees under the Summer Activities Council will attend the meetings of the council each Tuesday afternoon at 5:00 in the Roland Parker Lounges of Graham Memorial.

Dr. Franz Polgar To Give Performance Wednesday, July 27

Second Session students will be treated to "America's Greatest One Man Show"—Dr. Franz Polgar. With fascinating hypnotic feats and uncanny memory stunts, Dr. Polgar has packed Memorial Hall for the last fifteen visits to the Carolina campus. In his show "Miracles of the Mind" he tries mass hypnosis (you might see one of your favorite professors hypnotized), takes those under his control on a plane trip, puts glasses on some of them that have the amazing quality of allowing the person to see through cloth, and many other items. He has been known to find his check by mental process after it had been given to someone in the audience.

For an evening of fun, plan to see this mental wizard which is sponsored by the Summer Activities Council on Wednesday, July 27th, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

University To Offer New Television Course

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will offer POLITICAL SCIENCE c41 TV, THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES, over Station WUNC-TV, Channel 4, on Tuesday and Thursday evenings each week, beginning July 19, and continuing through August 25, 1955. The exact time will be announced later. Dr. David Geeting Monroe, Professor of Political Science in the University at Chapel Hill, will conduct the course.

Political Science c41 TV is a basic course describing the government of the United States and directs attention to: the constitution makers and their work; federalism as a more perfect union; the brotherhood of states; freedom in America; nominations and elections; political parties and pressure groups; the Congress—structure, powers, lawmaking procedures; the Chief Executive and the practices of leadership in a Democracy; the federal judicial system—organization, jurisdiction and work; the federal administrative hierarchy—its composition, authorities and procedures; the federal government and business; and the conduct of foreign affairs.

Through the combined resources of the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction and WUNC-TV, courses may be taken either with or without semester hour credit. Those desiring to take the course for credit should take and satisfactorily complete the correspondence course, Political Science c41. It is comprised of 25 written assignments and a written final examination, and carries three semester hours of undergraduate credit.

The TV course may also be taken independently of the correspondence course; however, no credit will be given. So that the student may secure the maximum benefiit from the programs, course materials may be obtained, and an unsupervised final examination taken and graded, as a means by which the student may check his own progress. Further information concerning fees, course materials, textbooks, and schedule of programs can be obtained from Miss Mary Henry, Head of the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction, Abernethy Hall, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

A spokesman for the Photo Contest stated today that the deadline would be extended another month in order to give more time for entries to be made.

The contest rules are:

1. All photos must be original.

2. All work (developing, printing, and enlarging) must be done by the entrant.

3. The first-place picture will be awarded $15, and the second-place picture $10.

Graham Memorial has a darkroom which can be used and all students are urged to use these facilities.

Entries should be turned into Graham Memorial Office for display.

Free Movies Have Been Well Attended

The movies that have been sponsored by the Summer Activities Council and The Bureau of Visual Education have been well attended by the students this summer.

For those interested in a short "objective survey of the origins, rituals and symbols of the major religions of the world today—namely, Hinduism, Buddhism, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism," this week's movie on Thursday night at 8:30 in Carroll Hall gives forth with this in MAJOR RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD. Also, at 7:15 p.m. there will be a special showing of the 40-minute film "Heidie" for the children. (Grownups invited also).

Still another movie is in the offering this same night with the showing of "Morning Star," which portrays "the hazards and hardships encountered in a sheep drive from the Salt River Valley in Arizona to the home ranch in the White Mountains. Closes with the 23rd Psalm as scenes of the trip illustrate each phrase."

Arnold Borden, a native of Goldsboro and resident of Morehead City, has been appointed librarian of the General College Library of the Library of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

IRC Announces Open House Friday, July 29

The International Relations Club, an organization of American and foreign students here at Carolina, will sponsor an International Open House next Friday, July 29. The Open House, which will be held at the Graham Memorial Student Union Building, will begin at seven o'clock in the evening and will last till nine o'clock.

According to Bob Harrington, IRC Chairman, final plans are being made for the Open House which will be the second program sponsored by the IRC this summer. At the end of June the IRC presented a program of film slides on Ceylon and India which was attended by over a hundred townspeople and students.

The International Open House will feature displays of articles from foreign lands, an International Students' talent show, music, and refreshments. The Open House will also offer an opportunity to meet students from other countries.

All students, faculty members, and townspeople are invited to attend the Open House. Anyone who would like to help plan the program for the Open House is urged to attend the last planning meeting of the IRC which will be held next Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

Dr. Franz Polgar To Present Performance

Dr. Franz Polgar, "America's Greatest One Man Show," will appear in Memorial Hall on Wednesday, July 27th at 8 o'clock.

With his fascinating hypnotic feats and uncanny memory stunts, Dr. Polgar has packed Memorial Hall for the last fifteen visits to the campus.

In his show "Miracles of the Mind," he tries mass hypnosis, takes those under his control on a plane trip, puts glasses on some of them that have the amazing quality of allowing the person to see through cloth and many other items.

He has also been known to find his check by mental process after it has been given to someone in the audience.

For an evening of fun, plan to see this mental wizard Wednesday night. The program is sponsored by the Summer Activities Council. Admission is free.

CAMPUS CHATS

By Woody Sears

(Editor's note: This is the first of a series of articles based on interviews with foreign students attending school here in Chapel Hill.)

Helen Carapetian, a native of Tehran, Iran, is one of the many foreign students here on the campus. Armenian by blood, Iranian (Persian) by birth, Helen is a singularly attractive, olive-skinned young lady whose vivacity immediately draws you to her, and though she has been here but a scant nine months, her command and pronunciation of the English language is amazing.

An old hand at being interviewed and quizzed by new friends, Helen quickly warmed up to the interview and spoke quite frankly and candidly about all the questions asked of her. When asked that old standby, what she thought of her new surroundings, she smiled and said that there were just so many things she liked that it would be practically impossible to pick out any one thing that she liked best. Then she added, "I just like it here so very much . . .", and that seemed to sum it up. But put on the spot when asked if there were anything in particular that she did not like, she parried tactfully by replying that there were so many things that were completely new to her that she hesitated to make any adverse comment.

". . . I just like it here so very much . . ."

She had noticed, however, as do many newcomers to our country, that our young people seem to grow up faster than they do in other countries, though this growth is not necessarily accompanied by maturity. She noted further that many of our "trashy" magazines of the "true love" variety and some of our movies were turning many people outside our shores against the United States, and that this adverse publicity is being used with some degree of effectiveness by the Communist propagandists. Helen also said that many of her people had gotten a bad impression of our youth from some of our young soldiers who were in their country. She said that she was so young herself at that time her recollection was more than slightly fuzzy. She added, however, that the Iranians come closer to being pro-U. S. than they do to any other country.

School life here at Carolina is not completely strange to Helen since she attended Flora Macdonald College on a scholarship before coming here, where she is enrolled as a sophomore in the School of Medical Technology. Though mathematics is her first love, she was encouraged by her father, who is an interpreter with this government's embassy in Tehran, to study something of a more practical nature, and since there is such an acute shortage of trained medical personnel in her country, med tech was a logical and worthy choice.

Helen does not consider herself an exceptional student, but, due to the rigorous nature of the Iranian system of education, she must be amazingly well prepared to handle college-level work. Before entering school in this country she had had six years each of math, chemistry, and physics. And she is only nineteen years old. While their school system has twelve years of primary and secondary education even as ours, it is different in the course load that the students must carry, an average of twenty courses per year (twenty-three her senior year). This does not leave the time for folly that our system does, for not only are the schedules much heavier, but if a student fails only one of the twenty courses he must repeat the whole year, not just the one course. On the college level the students are a very select group, for the government gives entrance exams that only one out of ten prospective students pass.

Those students here who are having a hard time with French or Spanish might be interested in knowing that in Helen's home four languages are spoken: Armenian, Persian, Turkish, and Russian.

Upon arriving in this country, Helen said, she spent her first fifteen days at Flora Macdonald in the infirmary because she couldn't get used to the food. When asked if she had

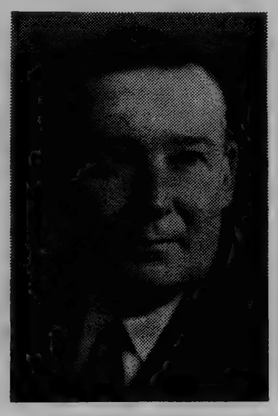
Purks Named Acting Prexy In Gordon Gray's Absence



By Bob Colbert

Dr. James Harris Purks, Jr. became the acting president of the Consolidated University on July 15, following the appointment of President Gordon Gray as assistant secretary of defense for international security affairs. Dr. Purks has been Provost of the University since January 1954.

The Board of Trustees refused to accept Mr Gray's resignation at their meeting last month, and instead granted him a leave of absence, appointing Dr. Purks acting president.

Born in Bartow, Georgia, Dr. Purks attended high school in Madison, Georgia, before entering Emory University, where he was awarded his B.S. degree in 1923. He received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees in physics at Columbia University in 1925 and 1928 respectively.

Dr. Purks taught mathematics one year at Georgia Tech, and later returned to Emory as assistant professor of physics, rising to full professorship by 1938, when he was named dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. He was acting dean of the Graduate School from 1943-47 and Director of the University Center in Georgia from 1948 to 1950.

Dr. J. Harris Purks, Jr.

In 1950, he joined the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation which was started by J. D. Rockefeller, Sr. in 1902.

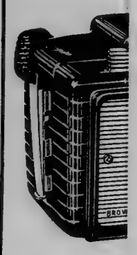
He is presently holding down two positions, that of acting president and provost, but expects to distribute the job of provost to personnel of the three divisions of the University.

When asked if he had any guideposts which he followed, he replied, "Avoid the big rocks in the road: don't swerve into the ditch in order to miss the small ones; steer along charted course with firm but relaxed hands on the wheel; try to take difficulties in stride."

In discussing the scope of his new position, Dr. Purks commented, "I spent a number of happy years teaching freshmen and sophomores, and when acting as dean of a college of Arts and Sciences. I've always respected North Carolina for its leadership in things educational, and now have come to love the state and its people."

Dr. Purks was married to the former Mary Pearce Brown of Gainesville, Georgia, in 1932. They have one son, Jimmy, 18, who entered the University as a freshman this summer.

Dr. Purks is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi scientific society, American Physical Society, Chi Phi social fraternity, and the New York Southern Society.



The closing question of the interview with Dr. Purks was, "What do you think the University has the greatest need for this summer?" Dr. Purks' reply was, "What do you want me to say, 'Air Conditioning?'"

First Square Dance To Be Held Tonight

The first Square Dance of the Second Session will be held tonight at 8:15 p.m. on the Terrace of Woollen Gym.

Beth Okun will be the caller. Ed Wharehime is in charge of arrangements. Sponsored by the Summer Activities Council, the event is open to any and all who like to participate in this form of recreation. There is no charge.

EDITORIAL

As new students come to Carolina for the first time and as the old students return for the second session of summer school, we feel that this is an opportune time to examine the value of the many activities that are broadly grouped under the title of extracurriculars. Most students—new and old alike—take the rather selfish attitude of "What's in it for me?" when they examine the extracurriculars. Of course such students are entirely justified in taking this outlook, for after all the primary purpose for coming to college is to get an education.

However, getting an education does not necessarily mean just going to classes or doing the homework assignments. Becoming educated also entails becoming well rounded and perhaps more important still, learning how to live and work with other people. This is where the extracurriculars come in to supplement the academic side of your education. This is the answer to the question of "What's in it for me?"

6:00—Wesley Foundation Supper Group. Methodist Church.

Second Session Starts With Welcome Party

The Second Session of Summer School started with a party in the Rendezvous room of Graham Memorial on Monday night from 7:30-9:30. There were refreshments and dancing.

The heat was no hindrance to the evening's entertainment after a fan was set up. The party was sponsored by the Summer Activities Council under the co-chairmanship of Woody Sears and Peggy Ward.

A COOL TRIP TO SATURN

On the luxurious, completely air-conditioned inter-planetary space ship the Wanderer, members of the University community have an opportunity to take a quick trip to Saturn and other places of interest in the far reaches of outer-space.

Reclining in their chairs in the air-conditioned main lounge, the passengers listen to soft music from one of the World Network's stations as they await the departure. Ship Commander Capt. Tomas requests fastening of safety-belts for the blast-off. Finally, the Captain gives the order and the control tower operator starts counting off the remaining seconds. "Three . . . two . . . one . . . zero," and the Wanderer is on its way.

The first stop is made on the Moon so that the passengers will get an opportunity to get a look at a typical space station with all its technical apparatus, such as the solar-mercury power generator and the oxygen reclamation units. The next stop is on Titan, one of the major satellites of Saturn, from which the passengers get a chance to see the rings of Saturn and the cold but beautifully austere landscape which is typical at 800 million miles from the sun.

During the entire trip, the passengers are made aware of the things which they are witnessing by the absorbing narration of a trained, well informed guide who points out all the things of general interest.

The Morehead Planetarium is the only one of its kind on a college campus anywhere in the whole country, and according to widely travelled jurist and businessman Judge Alfred Nippert of Cincinnati and Asheville, it is "better than the European planetaria and better than those in Chicago and Los Angeles." These shows are well worth attending, for they are entertaining without a compromise of scientific scruples.

According to Harvey Daniel of Chapel Hill, one of the three narrators for the Planetarium shows, the lectures are flexible enough in their nature as to allow some degree of variety, which prevents them from becoming stereotyped. Therefore, the audience always feels that the lecturer is vitally interested in the subject matter and is not burdened with trite idioms and repetitious monotony in the lecturer's presentation.

The most fascinating part of the show is seldom realized by the audience, for they see without a full realization of just what it is they are seeing. The technical story behind one of the Planetarium's productions is an amazing account of native ingenuity on the part of the staff technicians. The perforated-steel dome of the Planetarium allows the use of sets behind it which gives a three-dimensional effect to the audience, of five speakers gives the stereophonic sound effect. Other than the obvious stage sets, much work goes into the behind-the-scenes activity, especially in the control room, where the engineer must work all the lights, the tape recorder, and several projectors.

Part-time engineer Bill Padgett, a student here, said that the engineer must be capable of moving and thinking quickly so that the various effects are perfectly coordinated. According to Padgett's account of technical end of the productions, A. F. (Tony) Jenzano, the Planetarium manager, must be a veritable genius when it comes to creating unusual effects, using materials already on hand. Several of these "gimmicks" are the stroboscopic radar screen, the nuclear mass spectroscope, and the revolving chart-graphs, all seen in the ship's cockpit.

All the films and tapes used in the Planetarium shows are made here on the campus by the staff of the Communications Center. The models for the films of the different planets and landscapes were made by Marjorie Beshara and Bill Gully, and all information in the lectures is checked and verified by Dr. Morris Davis of the Physics Department.

It would be an evening well spent to take "A Trip to Saturn" on the good (space) ship the Wanderer. Flights leave nightly at 8:30, Saturdays at 11 a.m. and 3 and 4 p.m., and Sundays at 2, 3, and 4 p.m.

Community Church Announces Schedule

The Community Church of Chapel Hill has released its schedule for the second summer session.

Morning services will be held each Sunday at 9:30 a.m. in the Forest Theatre. In case of rain, in Hill Hall.

On Sunday, July 24, Dr. Raymond Adams, UNC Professor of English, will speak on the Power of Dullness.

The rest of the summer schedule is as follows:

July 31—Dr. J. Neal Hughley, Professor of Economics, North Carolina College.

Aug. 7—Dr. Preston H. Epps, Professor of Greek, UNC.

Aug. 14—Dr. Almonte C. Howell, Professor of English, UNC.

Aug. 21—Dr. Raymond Adams.

On Sunday, July 24, the second program of "Music Under the Stars" will be presented at 8 o'clock in the Forest Theatre. The feature presentation will be a high fidelity recording of Cesar Franck's Symphony in D Minor.

A spokesman for the Photo Contest stated today that the deadline would be extended until August 1, in order to give more time for entries to be made.

The contest rules are:

1. All photos must be original.
2. All work (developing, printing, and enlarging) must be done by the entrant.
3. The first-place picture will be awarded $15, and the second-place picture $10.

Graham Memorial has a darkroom which can be used and all students are urged to use these facilities.

Entries should be turned into Graham Memorial Office for display.

Library Closed Sundays

Due to the limited budget for student assistants, the Library of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will be closed on Sundays for the rest of the summer months. The regular Sunday schedule will be resumed in the fall.

First Aid Course To Start August 1

The Standard First Aid Course of the American Red Cross will be taught beginning at 7:00 p.m. on Monday, August 1, in Room 309 of Howell Hall. This course will be taught for the official certificate by Mr. Art P. Schlagel, P. O. Box 854, Telephone 9-9298.

The course requires 22 hours of class work and will be taught from 7 to 9 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday beginning August 1 and ending August 25. The course is taught free and the only cost is the textbook available at the Book Ex in Steele Basement at the cost of $0.62.

Anyone above the age of 15 is invited to join this class.

All candidates for graduate degrees for the August commencement should come by the Graduate Office, 202 South Building, and fill out a diploma card.

OVER THE HILL

With Charles Dunn

When one thinks of weather, — thinks of Chapel Hill, and when one has a column to grind out in about ten minutes he thinks of both Chapel Hill and weather. It has been said that if you don't like the weather in Chapel Hill just wait around a couple of hours and it will change.

And such was the case in town the first of the week. One hour it was raining and the next hour the sun was shining . . . just like April showers in July. As one lady in town said "before the rain everything was so dry (lectures?) and hot (classrooms?), but after the rain everything was so fresh and colorful again."

Kapers from Kenan . . . During the first session of summer school, one of the so-called Carolina Gentlemen was dating a summer coed. The coed was just a little worried about her roommate, also a summer coed who was likewise dating a Carolina Gentleman. First coed decided that she had better find her roomie, and first Gentleman suggested that they would possibly be down in Kenan stadium. So off they went to the stadium and needless to say they didn't find the second coed and her date. Could be that the reason was the second coed and her date didn't have the services of a car. Suggestion: next time try the Arboretum where there are over 500 different kinds of plants.

Kapers continued . . . The fellow looked at the girl in the moonlight. She was beautiful. He took her hand, and put his other arm around her shoulders. He had an irresistible urge to kiss her and he did . . . on the cheek. She sighed and snuggled a little closer in his arms. This was all the encouragement that the lad needed and he leaned over to kiss her on the lips. She moved restlessly, and said, looking into the rear-view mirror, "oh, I bet my hair looks a mess!" Thus ended a beautiful romance.

A certain couple was walking across campus the other day. The prettier one said "and where did you and he go last night after you carried us in?" The fellow didn't answer, and the coed phrased the question other way "Did you-all go get a last night?" The fellow replied, we are on the wagon." "Really?" the girl questioned, "and where did you-all go on the wagon?"

Dean's List Announced At UNC Nursing School

Dean Elizabeth L. Kemble of the University of North Carolina School of Nursing has announced the dean's list for the 1955 spring semester.

A total of 21 students were listed, 16 being from North Carolina and five being out-of-state students.

The North Carolina students and their home towns are Deane Coats and Elizabeth Morris, both of Concord; Mrs. Martha Cline, Chapel Hill; Sara Blaylock, New Bern; Mrs. Geraldine Snyder Laport and Winnie Williams, both of Fayetteville; Mrs. Mary Anderson Leggette and Mrs. Donna Blair Booe, Winston-Salem; Sarah White, Guilford College; Mary Williams, Greensboro; Mrs. Janet Merritt Littlejohn, Chapel Hill; Elizabeth Sumner, Asheboro; Myrtle McAnally, Reidsville; Sally Robeson, Laurinburg; and Sally Winn of Henderson.

Miss Blaylock's grades were perfect, being all A's.

Out-of-state students and their home towns are Ramelle Hylton, Clearwater, Fla.; Sharon Warrington, Bethesda, Md.; Marjorie Staub, Westfield, N. J.; Carolyn Taylor, Martinsville, Va.; and Sara Price, Buckhannon, W. Va.

CAMPUS CHATS

grown to like it, she said "I have to eat, don't I?" Fried chicken has become her favorite dish, but she added that here it had to be "Southern-fried."

About her contemporaries, Helen, in typical girl fashion, says of the boys, "I like them just fine." But of the girls whom she has gotten to know better, she said that she was a little disappointed that they didn't have the interest in other peoples that she had seen in girls from other lands. She noted further that all our people are prone to be a little unappreciative of the wonderful life we lead here, and the almost unlimited opportunities that are available to us.

On the topic of Bermudas, Helen said that she hadn't quite been able to accept them yet. "On the girls where the legs are pretty, all right, but on the boys . . ." Completely fascinated by TV, her favorite shows are Gobel's, Gleason's, Lucy's, and all the comedians.

Helen says that she would very much like to stay over here, but she is looking forward to next fall when her mother is coming over for a visit so that she can get, besides the obvious things, a chance to hear the news of all her old friends, and find out what's going on at home.

Helen, who is living in Alderman Dorm, has been accepted and her potential recognized by all who have met and talked to her. U.N.C.'s cosmopolitan atmosphere is greatly complemented by our visitor from Iran. Miss Helen Carapetian.

'Y' Announces Addition To Student Directory

The YMCA has announced that it is compiling a supplement to the student directory which should be ready in about two weeks.

Anyone who has changed his address since the first session of summer school is requested to drop by the Y on Saturday or Monday so that it can be corrected in the supplement.

Men's Intramural Program To Get Underway With Softball, Tennis And Golf Competition

The men's intramural program, under the direction of Bill Williams, will get under way with softball, tennis and golf.

Entries for softball close today. Play will begin Monday, July 25th. You may enter a team composed of anyone of the campus. No restrictions to eligibility whatsoever, except that a player may play on only one team. Get players that are willing to play whenever games are scheduled. Anyone may organize a team. Prizes will be awarded to the winning team.

Tennis is open to all and is a single elimination tournament in both singles and doubles. Matches will consist of 2 out of 3 sets except in the semi-finals and finals which will be 3 out of 5 sets.

Each player will buy a can of tennis balls before his first match. At the start of the match, one can of balls will be opened and used. After the match, the winner will take the unused can of balls. This process will be used throughout the tournament. Prizes will be awarded to the winners.

Open to all, the entry fee for golf will be 50 cents per person. Play 18 holes to qualify. Players will then be divided into flights. Trophies will be awarded to winner and runner-up of each flight. See Ed Kenney at Finley Golf Course for further details. Qualifying deadline is Monday, August 1.

For any further information contact Bill Williams at the Intramural office, 314 Woollen Gym, or call 9424.

Gerrard Hall Still Serves Students After Nearly Century And A Half Existence

By Robert H. Bartholomew

Compare it with the Morehead Planetarium or the modern buildings of the new School of Business Administration and you'll admit that Gerrard Hall is not an imposing structure.

Yet this little, unpretentious building, located in the center of the campus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, is rich in history and tradition. No less than three Presidents of the United States have spoken from its platform, the last being President Andrew Johnson in 1867.

Aside from Johnson, other United States Presidents who have spoken in Gerrard Hall were President James Knox Polk, a native of North Carolina and an alumnus of the University of North Carolina, who spoke in 1847 at the UNC Commencement exercises, and President James Buchanan in 1859.

Engraved in a stone, set in the brick of the east side of the building is "Gerrard Hall, 1822; To do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

Gerrard Hall was begun in 1822 along with a program to renovate the other three buildings that then composed the University of North Carolina. The money to begin the project was borrowed, and the officials of the University anticipated that it would be repaid by money they would receive from the sale of land in Tennessee that belonged to the University.

During the early history of the building, it was used chiefly as a place of worship and for that reason was known as New Chapel. It later became known as Gerrard Hall.

Even today it is used as a chapel by the local Catholic Church. During the past five years it has been used as a chapel by the Lutheran, Jewish, and Episcopalian congregations.

Although begun in 1822, Gerrard Hall was not completed until 15 years later, in 1837. In 1832, New Chapel, or Gerrard Hall as it became known, was still not completed due to the lack of funds.

On June 20, 1832, the University Board of Trustees appointed a committee headed by Professor William deB. Hooper to raise money to complete the building. The committee sold an abandoned grammar school which was owned by the University, but still more money was needed.

It was at this point that the committee began to eye a tract of land given to the University by Major Charles Gerrard of Edgecombe County, who was a native of Carteret County.

Gerrard had given upwards to 14,000 acres of land in Tennessee in 1797, specifying that one tract of some 2,560 acres should forever remain the property of the University.

Gerrard wanted this land held for sentimental reasons because it was granted him by the State of North Carolina for his services in the Revolutionary War. However, in 1833 the University was so hard pushed for funds that it appointed lawyers to look into the matter of this tract of land that had been held for 35 years to see if it could be legally sold.

The tract of 2,560 acres brought only $6,400, although the land was supposed to be particularly fertile. It was at this time that a resolution was passed, reading in part, as follows: "Resolved, Therefore that $2,000, part of the purchase money of said land shall be applied to the finishing of the new Hall at the University, and that the same shall be called by the name of 'Gerrard Hall'."

The money for the Gerrard tract of land finally came to the University in 1835, and in January, 1836, the Board of Trustees ordered Dr. Elisha Mitchell to have the structure completed. The building was completed in time to hold the 1837 graduation exercises in it.

A reporter for the "Raleigh Register" wrote of the new building, "a commodious building, with large galleries, just completed with becoming good taste and good style."

At one time there was a large porch, with massive columns, on the south side of the building, but this was removed years ago.

Gerrard Hall was remodeled the first time in 1874 when the shingle roof was replaced and the windows repaired.

The interior was renovated in 1879, when pews were substituted for the old wooden benches that were in the building.

In 1900 both the interior and the exterior were worked over. A new roof was put on and chairs replaced the pews. The front and back doors were walled up and new doors were cut in the ends of the building.

Finally the building was declared unsafe for public meetings, and it was being considered to wreck the historic structure. In 1939 a federal grant of money was made for its repair, this being $10,000, and at the same time the State of North Carolina put up $13,000 for the project. These two grants saved the building.

Today, nearly a century and a half after New Chapel, or Gerrard Hall, was started, it again serves as a meeting place and a place of worship, carrying out the original plans of the founders of the University of North Carolina.

Women's Phys Ed Department Offers Activities Program

The Women's Physical Education Department is offering as a part of the Student Activities Program during the second session, courses in golf, modern dance, swimming, and folk and square dancing.

These activities are open to all students who may be interested (and not already registered in other physical education classes.) All those interested in joining a class should get in touch with Miss Price at the Woman's Gym immediately.

Pine Room Open

The Pine Room, located just beneath Lenoir Hall, will be open Sunday through Friday, from 11 am to 12 midnight.

Sandwiches, snacks and dinners are available. There is also room for dancing.

Institute To Address Bar Associations

Staff members of the Institute of Government of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill are delivering a number of talks before various North Carolina Bar Associations during this week and next concerning the legislation adopted by the 1955 General Assembly.

The program is under the sponsorship of the Committee on Continuing Legal Education of the North Carolina Bar Association, which is headed by Spencer Bell of Charlotte.

Institute staff members who are presenting these talks are Robert E. Giles and Philip P. Green, Jr.

The following schedule has been arranged for the talks:

Monday, July 18, County Courthouse, Wilmington, 8 p.m. The program was in charge of W. Allen Cobb.

Tuesday, July 19, County Courthouse, Greenville, 4 p.m. Frank M. Wooten, Jr., had charge of the program.

Wednesday, July 20, Masonic Building, Rocky Mount, 8 p.m. The presiding officer was Robert M. Wiley.

Thursday, July 21, place of meeting to be announced, Fayetteville, 7 p.m. The program is under the direction of F. M. Averitt.

Monday, July 25, County Courthouse, Asheville, 7:30 p.m. Charles L. Marler has charge of the program.

Similar talks have already been given at Winston-Salem, Charlotte and Raleigh.

YWCA To Have New Office Hours

The Y.W.C.A. will have new office hours beginning Monday, August 1. Mrs. Kirsten Milbreath, the Y.W. secretary will be leaving Monday for a two month trip to visit her home and family in Norway. In her absence for the rest of the session, the office will be kept open in the morning by members of the Y.W.C.A. group under the supervision of group president, Hazel Crawford. All persons wishing to contact the Y.W. on business are asked to direct their communications to Miss Crawford.

YDC Rally To Be Held Tomorrow

Transportation will be available to the UNC Young Democrats who plan to attend the YDC statewide rally tomorrow at Sen. Kerr Scott's Alamance County farm. Carolina YDC leader W. E. "Dub" Graham announced that the group will meet in the Law Building lounge at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

Wesley Foundation Is Holding Series Of Meets

In conjunction with the Presbyterian students, the Wesley (Methodist) Foundation is holding a series of meetings here at the Methodist Church. This group includes both graduate and undergraduate students and will meet for supper and a program at six o'clock on Sunday evenings.

The theme of this series of joint meetings is "Christianity and the World in Revolution". At last week's meeting they discussed the "revolution" using "You Can See It Now", a radio-type script as the basis for the discussion.

This Sunday the group will use "Lost in the Stars", a recording of the musical adaptation of Alan Paton's novel, Cry the Beloved Country, a story depicting the "revolution" in South Africa as the basis for the discussion.

Everyone is invited to attend this series of discussions.

First Square Dance Is Termed Success

The first square dance of the second session held last Friday night on the terrace of Woollen Gym was called a success by the approximately fifty people who attended.

The most obvious thing missing was boys. There were about fifteen extra stag girls just waiting around.

Led by Mrs. Beth Okun, the group did all sorts of dances, from everybody in one circle to eight people to a square. The dances are all explained in detail by Mrs. Okun before being attempted, therefore no previous experience in square dancing is necessary.

The dances are sponsored by the Summer Activities Council and are held every Friday night at 8 o'clock on the east terrace of the Gym. Admission is free and dress is informal. Let's try to make an even split tonight.

'Music Under Stars' Next Sunday Evening

Sunday evening, July 31, at 8:00 p.m. the Community Church of Chapel Hill will sponsor another program of "Music under the Stars" in the Forest Theater. A recording of "The Wooden Prince" by Bela Bartok will be played. This recording, loaned by Kemp's Music Store, is by the New London Symphony directed by Walter Susskind.

First Aid Course Is Offered By Red Cross

Students and residents of Chapel Hill and surrounding areas are being offered a first aid course by the American Red Cross. The opening class of the Standard First Aid Course will be held Monday, August 1, in room 309 of Howell Hall. An official certificate will be received upon completing the course. Mr. Art P. Schlagel, P. O. Box 854, telephone 9-9298, will be the instructor.

The classes will meet Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 7 to 9 P.M. The course will end August 27, requiring 22 hours of supervised work.

There will be no charge for the course, except the cost of the book. The book can be purchased at the Book Ex in Steele Basement for $0.62.

Anyone above the age of fifteen is eligible for the course.

Summer Registration Well Above Last Year

The total registration for both sessions of summer school this summer has been well above last year's enrollment for the same period.

For the first session the enrollment this summer was 2940 as compared with 2510 for last year. This session the enrollment has dropped to 2271, but it is still above the 1919 here for second session last summer.

Saturday classes this session will be held this Saturday, July 30, and three weeks from this Saturday, on August 20.

The session will end with exams which will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, the 23rd and 24th of August.

I.D.C. Holds First Meet Of Second Session

The Men's Interdormitory Council held its first meeting of the second session Wednesday, July 20. I.D.C. President Bob Harrington gave several reports to the council. It was announced that fire extinguishers were being placed in the men's dorms and the empty ones were being refilled.

Plans for dorm parties were discussed. It was proposed that they be on a dollar matching basis. The Summer Activities Council has agreed to put up a dollar to match every dollar collected in the men's dorms for parties. Plans for an I.D.C. Watermelon Feast were discussed. Charlie Dunn, I. D. C. Social Chairman, was requested to prepare a budget for the proposed watermelon feast.

A motion to have the dorm presidents appoint representatives to the S. A. C. from their dorms passed unanimously. It was agreed that this would bring the men's dorms into closer contact with the projects sponsored by the S. A. C.

As a final point of business, the I. D. C. Court Investigation Committee was enlarged. J. C. Golding was named the new Chairman of the committee. Also on the committee are Jack Angel, Charlie Todd, and Ed Viser. In other reorganizations, C. H. Brock and Ed Warehime, were appointed to the I. D. C. Social committee.

Photo Contest Entries To Be Moved To GM

A spokesman for the Photo Contest stated that the display of the entries will be moved from the Information Office to the Main Lobby of Graham Memorial tomorrow. Approximately 25 pictures have been entered. More entries needed.

The judging will be done August 1 and prizes awarded.

Student Directory Is Now On Sale

A new addition to the Student Directory of last session is now on sale at the "Y". The new supplement contains the name, campus address, and home address of all the new students here for second session as well as the names and new addresses of all first session people who listed an address change.

This supplementary edition of the Directory is on sale at the nominal price of five cents per copy.

The International Relations Club, an organization of American and foreign students here at Carolina, is sponsoring an International Open House today. The Open House, according to I.R.C. Chairman Bob Harrington, will feature articles from nearly twenty countries throughout the world.

These articles such as pipes from Germany and clothing from India will be put on display at 7:00 tonight in the main lounge of Graham Memorial. Background music will be played during the open house which will be representative of the different lands which the displays represent.

An international students' talent show which will last about thirty minutes will be presented. The talent will feature songs and dances of foreign lands such as Chinese opera. Refreshments of the American variety will be served to really make the open house International.

Several International Open Houses have been held during the past few years which were very interesting, and this one should prove to be no different in that respect. All students, faculty members, and townspeople are cordially invited to attend the Open House and to enjoy the program while having an opportunity to meet students from other countries.

John Shannon To Give Organ Recital

John Shannon, graduate student in Musicology, will give an organ recital in Hill Hall Tuesday, August 2nd at 8 o'clock.

Mr. Shannon, who received his B.A. in Music from Davidson College in 1954, will play works by Schink, Buxtehude, Balbastre, Back and Schroeder.

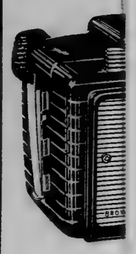
This recital is being sponsored by the Music Department and the Summer Activities Council. Admission is free and the public is cordially invited.

Press Book Sold Out; 2nd Printing Underway

Officials of the University of North Carolina Press announced yesterday that the first printing of "Hiroshima Diary" has been completely sold out, and that the second printing would be available this week.

The book was to go on sale August 6. Press officials said the entire first printing had been sold a month before that date. A second printing is now underway and is expected to arrive in Chapel Hill Tuesday, July 26.

"Hiroshima Diary" was written by Dr. Michihiko Hachiya, who was director of the Hiroshima Communications Hospital on the day the atom bomb was dropped on that Japanese city.



The book was translated and edited by Dr. Warner Wells, who is assistant professor of surgery at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine.

Dr. Wells is a native of Durham, was graduated from the Duke Uni-

WE STUDY ON SUNDAY

Recently the University Library has been forced to close on Sundays due to lack of funds with which to pay the student employees. We feel that this is, to say the least, a deplorable situation.

Here at Carolina we have hundreds upon hundreds of undergraduate students who have assigned work which can be prepared only through the use of a library. Many of these students have part-time jobs during the week, and they depend on their weekends to catch up on their back work.

A university is often judged by the amount of research work done by its faculty and graduate students. Quite obviously, the faculty and graduate students must depend on their weekends to do this necessary work since they are engaged in classroom work themselves during the regular weekdays.

A great university is composed of three things. The first is an open-minded faculty. The second is an open-minded student body. The third is an open library. We have the first two here at Carolina. We hope that we shall soon have the third.—B. H.

A CHALLENGE

A challenge means different things to different people, but basically it is an intriguing idea because it represents an opportunity for the discovery of something.

Here, then, is an opportunity for the discovery of something new. It is a challenge to the student body to do something for itself, each as an individual.

This is the challenge: sometime when you have nothing else to do, go to Graham Memorial and take a tour of the building. Call it an inspection tour, if you will, but look around in all the rooms and see if somewhere in G.M. there isn't something that is of real interest to you. To those who accept this challenge there is a good chance that they may find something there that will add a great deal to their college life as a whole, and make their stay here a more pleasant one.

The sole purpose for the existence of the Graham Memorial Student Union is to serve the students. The service that was intended was the provision of extra-curricula activities so that the students would have a clean, wholesome medium for expending excess energy and breaking the monotony of the school routine.

Graham Memorial Director Jim Wallace and his assistant, Jim McIntyre, are very anxious to give the students the types of activities which will appeal to the most of them, but since few seem interested in anything, it makes it hard to plan. Wallace said that they have obtained a bigger budget for next year and that he and his staff would like to see the activities expand with the budget. It is the aim of the G.M. staff to meet the needs of the students, but first they must know what the students want. A good Student Union can be a great asset to the school, as it has been proven in various schools throughout the county. "We have been hampered by a lack of funds since the beginning," said Wallace, "but now that we have the money to work with, we want to put Graham Memorial on the level with the best in the country, but we can't do it without student cooperation."

With as many facilities as are offered to the student in G.M., there should be something to appeal to everyone. All one has to do is to take the time to come in and look around. This challenge is to encourage the student to try to help himself and to take advantage of the facilities he has already paid for with his activities fee. No one will be asked to sign anything or to volunteer for any type of work, or to commit himself in any way.

Graham Memorial is one of the participants in the Summer Activities Council which sponsors extra-curricular activities during the summer. Also, they maintain an emergency locator service for students, mimeographing service, and ride serv. . .

There are facilities for pool, ping-pong, dancing, and all sorts of parlor . . . For between-meal snacks they have a coffee machine, a sandwich machine, and soft drink machines. In the ultra-modern T.V. room there is a brand new T.V. set, and the Rendezvous Room is being improved. And the cheapest haircuts in town are found in G.M.'s barbershop.

These are just a few of the services and facilities offered by Graham Memorial, and when student participation and interest warrants it, these services and facilities will be expanded to keep abreast of student needs. Therefore, if the student body will meet G.M. half-way, it is almost a certainty that Graham Memorial will develop into one of the most functional and progressive student unions in the country.

Now the question: Can the students meet the challenge to help G.M. help them?—W. S.

Bermuda shorts seem to have really taken hold on the campus. Not even a cold day goes by when you don't see students hurrying to class in the things. And it does make a lot of difference in class. A person would be surprised at just how much cooler those things are, and just how much more attention can be paid to the instructor by the wearers on these hot mornings. However we can see the things worn only for comfort; that is without the socks. From observation it appears that those long socks would be as hot or even hotter than long pants.

Anyway you look at it, it seems that this type of shorts is here to stay . . . at least in Chapel Hill. It will be several more years before they are accepted throughout the state. To an extent, Bermuda shorts are like integration: it's going to take time for them to be accepted in the South. But both will come. Some of the armed services are planning to adopt them for summer uniforms, and who knows, within several years the R.O.T.C. students on campus may be drilling in the things.

One of the fellows came back Sunday night from a weekend at home and with his favorite girl friend. Various questions were asked about the weekend, home, the family and what was going on. His reply to all was "Boy, did she have on a pretty dress today!"

Southern girls are said to have a peculiar talent for getting men to fight for their love. Almost any night this summer you can find two fellows dueling in any and sometimes all of the beer houses, drinking beer after beer, to the amazement of some young lady. The contest is to see who can drink the most beer, and still be the more sober. The prize of course is to carry the young lady home (?).

Even Gimghoul Castle is said to have had its beginning in a duel over the affections of some fair maiden.

The custom of Southern Women getting men to fight for their love, dates back to the American Revolution. According to author John Hyde Preston's book on said war a group of marriageable daughters up on the Potomac signed a stern pact "not to permit the addresses of any person, be his circumstances and situation in life what they will, unless he has served in the American armies long enough to prove by his valour that he is deserving of their love." No wonder we won that war.

UNC Medical Man Gets Research Grant

Dr. Carl E. Anderson, associate professor of biological chemistry and nutrition, University of North Carolina School of Medicine, has received a grant of $13,200 for research from the Life Insurance Medical Research Fund. Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, dean of the Medical School announced today.

Notification of the grant came from Dr. Francis R. Dieuaide, scientific director of the fund.

The grant is for a study entitled "The Chemistry and Metabolism of Acetal Phosphatides," and extends over a two-year period. The chemistry of the acetal phosphatides is incomplete and their function in animal tissues is unknown. This study is designed to isolate members of this fatty aldehyde-containing group and learn more of its function and effect on body tissue.

Assisting Dr. Anderson, the principal investigator in this research, will be two other UNC personnel: Claude Piantadosi, graduate student in biochemistry and pharmacy; and Dr. Claude Yarbro, instructor in biological chemistry.

Landing Ship 1068 Named Orange County

Orange County has now joined the ranks of U.S. counties for which naval vessels have been named, according to word received by Navy ROTC officials at the University.

Col. R. C. Burns, professor of naval science, reported that the Secretary of the Navy has announced that Landing Ship Tank 1068 has been renamed the U.S.S. Orange County (LST 1068).

Ceremonies were held for the renaming earlier in the month at Pier A, Long Beach, Calif., the vessel's home port. A 330-foot craft, the U.S.S. Orange County is commanded by Lt L. Thompson, U. S. Navy.

At present three North Carolinians are serving aboard the vessel: SN Jimmy J. Birke, Winston-Salem; EN) Joseph N. Fuller, Elm City; and YN3 Larry W. Morris, Littleton.

The U.S.S. Orange County was first placed in commission in early 1945, and was used during World War II as a supply vessel in the Pacific Islands. From 1946-50 she was in mothballs in the decommissioned Pacific Reserve and was placed in action for the Korean War.

Phil Drake Holds Many Swim Records

by Bob Colbert

"Gee, Bob, I don't know all the records I hold." These were the words of Phil Drake, 19-year-old sensation of the UNC and Chapel Hill swimming teams Not conceited, just being truthful, Phil revealed that it would take about fifteen minutes to just think of some of them.

The number one man on the National Collegiate Athletic Association All-America team in the butterfly breaststroke, Phil is the first UNC swimmer ever to win an NCAA championship. In Oxford, Ohio, last March, Phil beat all opposition in the 200-yard butterfly breaststroke.

The butterfly breaststroke is a new event, started about two years ago. It features an overwater recovery of the arms and a double-action kick, keeping the feet together and undulating the body.

Since its inception, Phil has rewritten his share of records, including six in two days on July 20 and 21.

In AAU sanctioned time trials, which means that the swimmer, event and names of officials are advertised in the newspapers at least three days before the trial, Phil bettered the existing records for 100 yards, 100 meters and 110 yards long course, and 200 meters and 220-yards short course.

Long course is any pool over 25 yards long, while short-course is any pool up to 25 yards.

Of his six records last week, five were American and one was a world record. American records are the fastest time swum by any American citizen. World records are the fastest time swum by anyone. He now holds the world record in the 220 yeard distance.

Through a quirk in the rules, Phil picked up two extra American records last week, the 100 meters and 200 meters. If a swimmer swims a longer distance but his time is better than the existing record for a shorter distance, he is credited with the shorter distance record. That's how Phil picked up the 100 and 200 meters records. He was timed at a longer distance, 110 yards and 220 yards respectively, however his times were better than the records of the shorter distance and he will be thus credited with the records.

Phil, from Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, was a member of the All-American team while in high school. He holds the Atlantic Coast Conference records for the 200-yard breaststroke and 440-yard freestyle events.

The son of a retired doctor, he plans to enter law school at the University of Florida, and thus left Chapel Hill last Friday to enroll at the University of Florida as an undergraduate for the fall semester.

When he breaks a record, he doesn't do it by just a tenth of a second, he really cracks it. He lowered the world record for the 220-yard distance by four full seconds. The previous record was 2:30.2. Phil's new record is 2:26.1.

In his last meet swimming for UNC and the Chapel Hill swim club in High Point last Saturday, Phil swam the distance in 2:40.8 to set a new meet record for the 200 meters butterfly.

And so it goes, the 6 foot four inch 190 pound flash will continue to rewrite the record books as long as he is swimming. Although ineligible to swim for Florida next year, Phil plans to return to competition for Florida in two years.

When asked about Phil's capabilities, Coach Ralph Casey replied, "He gets better all the time."

Bright Economic Outlook Is Forecast

A generally bright economic outlook of high production and consumption along with "a continuing price level rise during late 1955 and early 1956" was forecast by three North Carolina business executives who spoke Monday at the sixth annual Business Management Institute in session this week at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill.

George W. Dowdy, Charlotte, General Manager, Belk Brothers Company; O. Arthur Kirkman, High Point, executive vice-president, High Point, Thomasville and Denton Railroad Company; and L. K. Fitzgerald, Greensboro, president of Mooresville Cotton Mills and vice-president of Burlington Industries, Inc., served as a consultant panel on "Management's Job."

Fitzgerald appeared in the place of J. Spencer Love, Burlington Industries chairman, who was unable to participate as scheduled.

Dr. Robert G. Seymour, Institute leader from University of Illinois, who conducted the Monday morning session, pointed out that "a peculiar market situation now exists in the United States: the era of the 'deal' in automobiles, appliances and many other goods.

"No longer are we in an era of one-price psychology," he said, noting that the discount situation is the major problem facing auto dealers at present.

The possibility of over-production was mentioned by the speakers, who agreed that the increase in automobile and steel industry wages is following the same pattern as in past years, and will be felt "down the line" in other lines of business.

Among the chief factors cited by the speakers as upholding the economic strength of the southern region, and North Carolina in particular, were large consumer purchasing; the construction boom "which in turn sparks a furnishings boom"; and North Carolina's continued growth in population."

Kirkman noted that "the best tobacco crops in 20 years" are being predicted by agriculture authorities and that recent furniture markets showed "the best spirit ever."

Dowdy suggested that quotas on importing textitles may be the only answer to tariff changes in which Japanese goods can enter the United States and undersell competing local brands. "The whole country is not dependent on any one industry, but such a situation can have great influence on a particular region's economy," he said.

Hope of improvement in textile sales, which are going as well as last year," was presented by Fitzgerald, who reported that, on the whole the textile industry has recovered from the decline which began several years ago.

On the national economic scene there is "no indication that our consumer credit organization is overextended," Dr. Seymour said, adding that the savings situation is at the best level in history.

A temporary lull in credit appli-

ZBT Leads Fraternities In Scholastic Averages

Zeta Beta Tau led the fraternities in scholastic averages for the second straight year, according to figures released by the Dean of Student Affairs Office.

They were on top for both semesters and ended the year with a 2.499 average.

In computing averages, A is 1.00, B is 2.00, C is 3.00, D is 4.00, F is 6.00. Excused absences and incompletes are not computed.

Alpha Delta Pi finished number one in the sorority rankings. Although they slipped to second for the Spring semester computations, their overall average was enough to nose out the Tri-Delt's.

The sorority and fraternity averages were as follows:

	Sororities	Avg.
1.	Alpha Delta Pi	2.203
2.	Delta Delta Delta	2.221
3.	Pi Beta Phi	2.252

Southern Railway Offers Cash Prizes For Winning Essays

The Southern Railway reports cash prizes totaling $1,500 are being offered by the New York Railroad Club for winning essays on selected railroad subjects.

To qualify, you must either be employed by a railroad or you must be a transportation student. Full details may be obtained by writing to John Burry, Executive Secretary, New York Railroad Club, Inc., 30 Church Street, New York 7, N. Y.

The closing date for submitting essays is October 1, 1955.

Notebook Collection At University Library

A selection of notebooks kept by students at a number of schools in different periods of history is now on display at the Southern Historical Collection of the University Library.

One, a copy book, was kept by Julia Pickens at Salem Academy in 1830 at Winston-Salem. Miss Pickens was the daughter of Alabama's Governor Israel Pickens, who also at one time was a North Carolina congressman.

Also exhibited is an arithmetic book kept by William Lenoir, who was a captain in the American Army during the Revolutionary War and later a major general in the North Carolina Militia.

Another book contains the lectures of UNC Professor F. W. Simonds on physiology and hygiene. This book, dated 1880, is in the handwriting of Edwin A. Alderman, who later became president of the University.

The chemistry lectures of Dr. John P. Emmet of the University of Virginia are contained in another book, which is dated 1828.

Dr. William A. Smith's lectures on slavery at Randolph Macon College in 1852 are found in one of the notebooks. Dr. Smith was a strong advocate of slavery.

The collection contains a Latin notebook that was kept by Ernest Haywood, who was a UNC student at the time the book was written in 1887.

The oldest book in the group is a ciphering book which was kept by Martha Ryan in 1781.

Historical manuscripts are on permanent display at the Southern Historical Collection and are changed periodically.

Economic Outlook

cations about six to eight months ago was reported by Kirkman, who explained that a flood of applications came in June, mainly for home construction loans, with few refinanced loans, and no G.I. loans.

Small business failures in the United States during the first quarter of 1955 totaled "around 3,000," Dr. Seymour said, terming this "not excessively high," though higher now than immediately after the war, when it was pretty hard to fail."

Owner-managers of small businesses in different parts of the state are participating in the week-long institute. At their first morning session they studied general management areas, such as planning, policy making, and fundamental self-analysis.

Psychiatric Social Worker

Miss Frances Maynard has joined the staff of the Psychiatric Center, University of North Carolina Memorial Hospital, as psychiatric social worker. She received her undergraduate degree from the University of North Carolina, and has completed graduate studies at Tulane University and the New York School of Social Work, Columbia University.

A native of North Carolina, she has previously held a position with the Family Service Agency in Greensboro. She resides at the Village Apartments, Franklin Street.

Drama Group To Hold Meetings In GM

Because the Library will be closed on Sundays for the rest of the summer the Community Drama Group will hold its meetings of August 7th and 14th in the Grail Room on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

At the next meeting Sunday night Baxter Sasser will direct a reading of Paul Green's Negro folk play "In Abraham's Bosom". Anyone who is interested in reading the play ahead of time may obtain a copy from Stella Lyons' newstand in the Post Office.

Students and townspeople who are interested in reading or listening to plays are invited to come and take part.

Tommy Sumner Wins In Photo Contest

Tommy Sumner, from Asheville, was named the winner of the Student Activities Council annual summer photo contest, according to Al Laughinghouse, chairman of the photo judging committee.

Judges for the contest were Roland Giduz, Jim McIntyre and Al Laughinghouse.

Photos were judged on the basis of originality, subject, composition and finished product.

The second place winner was Willie Brinkhous of Chapel Hill.

Sumner will receive the first prize of $15.00 while Brinkhous will get $10.00.

Honorable mention went to Fred Powledge of Raleigh.

Want A Job? Contact Placement Service

If you expect to graduate at the end of the summer school, and you want a job, contact the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall.

Only a few employers will visit the campus during the remainder of the summer to interview graduating seniors, but numerous jobs are reported to this office by mail and telephone. In order to take advantage of these opportunities, students must complete registration with the Placement Service. You are eligible for registration if you have attended the University at least two semesters.

The Placement Service in Gardner Hall is the source of job opportunities in business, industry, and government. Teaching positions are handled by the School of Education.

Entering the Armed Forces doesn't mean that you shouldn't plan now for a job when you complete your service. The Placement Service, under the direction of J. M. Galloway, has found jobs for thousands of U. N. C. students and alumni over the seven years of its operation.

Going To Greensboro?

If you are driving to Greensboro or beyond any time soon, you are asked to take a few pounds of clothes collected in the Clothing Drive last May with you. The clothing is to be taken to the office of the American Friends Service Committee.

Last May there was a drive on the campus for "Books and Clothing for Korea." The books have been sent to Korea through the courtesy of the Asia Foundation; and the clothing is to be shipped by the American Friends Service Committee.

The YMCA needs transportation to Greensboro for the clothes. Inquire at the YMCA if you are headed in that direction.

Three Hundred Attend I.R.C. Open House

Last Friday night the International Relations Club, an organization of American and foreign students here at U.N.C., held an international open house at Graham Memorial. This event, one of the most successful of the summer activities, was attended by over three hundred students, faculty members, and townspeople.

Sixteen tables of articles from over twenty foreign countries were placed on display in the Main Lounge. The articles ranged from beautiful handwoven Spanish mantillas to tiny hand carved elephants from India. Music and refreshments completed the display portion of the program.

The last part of the program was an International student's talent show which was attended by a hundred and twenty-five people. The talent show featured Charles Kim's and Arturo Irizarry's songs, Meiling Dai's Hawaiian dances, and Chinese Opera songs and narrated by Tien Chi Chen.

According to I.R.C. Chairman Bob Harrington, several more events are being planned by that organization. These events include a program on Latin America and an international student's picnic.

Life Mag Film Strip Now On Display

A new Life Magazine film strip, based on its popular series "The World We Live In," is now on display at scientific galleries of the Morehead Planetarium here.

This latest strip is titled "The Age of Mammals", and shows in full color the scientific paintings of mammals which are known and those which are believed to have lived on the earth since its creation.

Variety Show To Be Presented August 10

The Summer Activities Council will present a Variety Show Wednesday, August 10 in the Forest Theater at 8 o'clock. In the event of rain, the program will be given in Memorial Hall.

The program includes a humorous monologue, a nurses' combo, Johnny Wooten's combo, several skits, a solo, and a Charleston rendition.

Students taking part in the program are Ed Guien, New York; Ken Callendar, Greensboro; Sylvia Yelton, Bakersville; Charlie Kim, Los Angeles; Walt Geddie, Rocky Mount; Anna Windley, Washington; Louise Cooper, Graham; Johnny Wooten, Kinston; Bud Levin, New York; Jerry Rosenblum, New York; Marv Porter, Hendersonville, and a group of student nurses.

Tom Brame of Durham will be the master of ceremonies.

Admission is free and everyone is invited to attend.

Promotions, New Faculty Members Here

The appointment of several new faculty members and promotion of some present personnel to higher rank here at the University was announced today by Chancellor Robert B. House following approval by President Gordon Gray and the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees.

Eight new staff members are included on the list, along with 33 promotions in both the General University and Division of Health Affairs.

David Phillip Dobson is joining the School of Dentistry as associate professor of prosthodontics. A native of New Hampton, Iowa, he holds D.D.S. and M.S. degrees from the State University of Iowa.

He comes to UNC from the Naval Dental School, Bethesda, Md., where he headed the Full Denture Section. He is a member of American Dental Association; American Denture Society, and is a diplomate of the American Board of Prosthodontics.

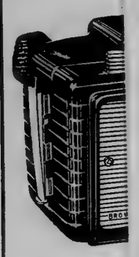
Lawrence Slifkin, new assistant professor in the Department of Physics, comes from University of Illinois, where he has been research associate and research assistant professor since 1950.

Born in Bluefield, W. Va., Dr. Slifkin received his B.A. degree from New York University and M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton University, where he was teaching assistant. An author of many articles for professional publications, he holds membership in the American Physical Society and the Society of Sigma Xi.

Robert Alfred Miller, who holds three degrees from UNC, has been named assistant professor in the School of Library Science. A Flushing, N. Y. native, he completed his A.B., M.A. and B.S.L.S. degrees here and has served as summer session instructor for three years. He is a member of the American Library Association and Phi Beta Kappa.

Named as assistant professor in the Department of Classics was Charles Henderson Jr., who just completed his Ph.D. degree here in June. A native of Lynchburg, Va., he holds an A.B. from Davidson College and his M.A. from UNC. Since 1950 he has been an instructor at New York University, and prior to that time taught at UNC while doing graduate work.

Henderson belongs to a number of scholarly and professional organizations, among them the American Philological Association; Mediaeval Academy of America, and Renaissance Society of America.



Drury William Wall will join the Department of Mathematics this fall as assistant professor. Born in New Orleans, La., he received B.S. and M.S. degrees from Tulane University and the Ph.D. from University of Michigan.

Apoointed assistant professor in the Department of Botany was Clyde Ritchie, a native of Cincinnati, Ohio, who holds A.B. and M.A. degrees from UNC, and his Ph.D. from University of California. Since 1953 he has been instructor at University of Illinois. He is active in professional groups and has written extensively for botanical publications.

William Stuart Caldwell is joining the School of Journalism as assistant professor. A South Dakota native, he attended University of Minnesota, re-

HONOR AND THE SYSTEM

During summer school, as during the regular fall and spring semesters, there is a certain amount of stealing, lying, and cheating. All of these actions are violations of the Honor System which we have here at Carolina.

Our Honor System is over a half century old, and it is the corner stone of student self government as well as the Carolina way of life. During all of the years that we have had the Honor System it has worked well, and it has exerted a tremendous influence for good on the students who have come to Carolina.

Of course there have been violations of both the Honor System and the Campus Code throughout the years. However, in the past few years there seems to be much less respect for the Honor System than before. Also, there seem to be more violations of the Honor System in recent years, some of which are not even reported. This has lead many people to say that the faculty has the honor and students have the system.

It is indeed very unfortunate that we have students here at the University who would break faith with the group and steal from their fellow dormitory residents or cheat on an examination. We hope that for the rest of summer school and in the coming school year there will be a reawakening of the honor which is inherent in the Carolina Way of Life. Remember the Honor Code, and see that it is honored.

STREETS ARE TO DRIVE ON

In the July 28th edition of the Chapel Hill News Leader there appeared an editorial entitled "A Campus is to Walk On." The author of this editorial deplored the fact that "valuable pieces of campus ground have one by one been taken away from the walker and turned over to the gas burner."

This seems to be the general attitude of all those people who are still living in the horse and buggy days. However, the horse and buggy days have come to an end, and we for one, are very happy about it.

The author of the News Leader editorial admitted that walking is "out of date" but he seemed to feel "it will not harm students, professors, trustees, and the administration to do a bit more walking from parked car to office and classroom."

Quite obviously the News Leader's editorial writer does not fall into any of the four categories that he named, or he would know that the students, professors, trustees, and administrators are already walking quite a distance from their parked cars to the classrooms and offices around the campus.

However, the author does pose one very important problem when he asks the following question, "If so much of the campus must at this stage be given up to car owners, what will be left when the University has twice the present number of students, professors, and administrative people?"

This is a question that is bothering the trustees, the administration, and the student leaders. Two solutions have been offered to the problem. One solution is to build more parking lots, and the second solution is to ban either freshman students or all undergraduate students from having cars.

Although the second solution would solve the traffic problem, it would only create a transportation problem for the students who are deprived of their cars which they need.

This brings up the question of "Why do students need cars here at UNC?" Many of the students and most of the professors and administrative people need cars to bring them to the campus from places such as Carrboro, Glen Lennox and the other surrounding areas. Some students need cars for their part-time jobs, and most all of the students would like to have cars to go home in and to date in.

Thus we are brought back to the first solution offered to the traffic problem which is to build more parking lots. This can be done without depriving people of their inherent right to walk over the campus. After all, the streets on the campus were made to ride on, and if the campus is to walk on, there are many areas where streets and parking lots do not exist such as a goodly portion of Kenan Woods. And of course there is always the Coker Arboretum for those desiring to walk or commune with nature.

Personally we prefer cars.

APATHY AMONG THE STUDENTS

Last Friday night the International Relations Club presented an international open house which was attended by over three hundred people. This program drew one of the largest crowds of any event that has taken place this summer. It was certainly a worthwhile and educational program, and we were gratified to see the enthusiastic reception with which it was received.

However, there was one thing that distressed us very much, and that was the poor attendance of the undergraduate American students at the open house. Although many American students attended, the vast majority of the people there were foreign students, faculty members, and townspeople.

This points up one of the major problems confronting our University today, and that problem is the apathy of the student body. This apathy is not merely limited to such events as the open house sponsored by the I. R. C., but it is also extended to concerts, panel discussions, and debating societies. This complete disinterest in the cultural and extracurricular opportunities offered here at the University is reaching alarming proportions.

The reason for this apathy is not readily apparent to us, and thus we can offer no solution to the problem posed by the indifferent students on campus. We can only hope that the student body will wake up to reality and realize the value of these cultural and extracurricular opportunities that are being offered for their benefits.

The Play's The Thing

by Woody Sears

Two outstanding groups of thespians are in the midst of producing plays here on the campus at present.

First, and possibly the more unique of the two groups is The Junior Carolina Playmakers. This group is comprised of twenty-five youngsters of high school age who are here on campus enrolled in the special class for high school students in Dramatic Art. Only four of the group are from North Carolina and some of these young men and women have come from as far away as upstate New York and Mississippi.

Producing a play is only a small part of the work done by these aspiring thespians. They follow a carefully planned program of classroom instruction and laboratory work which will provide them with training in Voice and Diction, Acting, Playwriting, Dramatic Literature, and Stagecraft. The work that they are doing will count toward a high school diploma, giving them one unit of dramatic art credit.

Along with the formal classroom training, they will obtain practical experience in acting and stage production provided through rehearsals and performances of major and experimental productions of the Carolina Playmakers and the Junior Carolina Playmakers.

Instructors for the group are: Samuel Seldon, Chairman, Department of Dramatic Art, UNC, Consultant and Lecturer; John W. Parker, Business Manager, The Carolina Playmakers, Director of the Summer Session for High School Students; Louise Lamont, Head of the Lamont School of Creative Dramatics, Chapel Hill, Teacher of Acting; Josephina Niggli, Professor of Dramatic Art, W.C. of UNC, Teacher of Playwriting; Harvey Whetstone, Technical Director (Summer Session), The Carolina Playmakers, Teacher of Stagecraft; William O'Sullivan, Star of "Almanac," TV Station WUNC, Teacher of Voice and Diction.

The group is now working on a full length production, the rootin', tootin' melodrama of the gay 90's, "Deadwood Dick." The play is based on the "64 Dime Novels" by Edward L. Wheeler. Tom Taggart has fashioned a gay 90's melodrama that has all the elements that make those blood-and-thunder melodramas of Grandma's day so hilarious: long-lost daughters, stolen gold mines, kidnapped heroines, and hairbreadth escapes.

The play will be presented on Friday and Saturday nights, Aug. 19 and 20 in the Playmaker Theater. It promises to be wonderful entertainment, and a packed house would be great encouragement for these talented youngsters.

The second group in action now is the regular Carolina Playmakers group which is working on three short one-act plays. These delightful little plays were written last session in John Parker's Playwriting class, and were chosen as the three best out of eleven which were submitted. These plays were written and will be directed by grad students in the School of Dramatic Arts.

The first is entitled "An Angel Came Walking," written by Carolyn Kimzey Sumner of Brevard, and directed by Ruth Hubbard Young of Salisbury. It is a folk-fantasy concerning a mountain boy who is in love with one of a set of twins. The two girls want a double wedding and it leads to all sorts of difficulties. This mountain fantasia is literally peppered with beautiful poetical lines and wonderful homespun philosophy, some of which are set to original ballad music.

The second play is a farce-comedy entitled "Ladies of Lee." It was written by Norman Becker and will be directed by Jack Conner of Iowa Falls, Iowa. This hilarious comedy concerns a tree . . . which Robert E. Lee was supposed to have slept under. The Ladies of Lee want to make a shrine of the tree, but unfortunately it stands in a lot on which the town mayor wants to erect a library. This fresh little plot carries the cast through an amusing series of misadventures to a wonderful surprise ending.

The third play is a timely thing called "Board Meeting," by Ruth Hubbard Young and directed by Martha Rankin, teacher at Huntington College, Montgomery, Ala. The setting for this drama is the meeting of the Purple Mountain School Board. This little mountain community is faced with the problem of a lack of adequately prepared teachers, a lack of facilities, and the new, omnipresent problem of desegregation. The problem of the plot arises when the school principal says that he sees no alternative but to hire Dorothy Long, a highly qualified teacher with an A rating from the State of New York. The problem is that she is a Negro. Raw emotion is the keynote of this tense dama.

It is easy to see that these three plays will offer top-flight entertainment, supported by wonderful casts of students and townspeople, and written, directed, and produced by budding young artists with imagination as well as talent.

These plays will be presented in the Playmaker's Theater on Thursday and Friday nights, August 11 and 12. There will be no admission charged.

Don't miss this opportunity to get an awful lot of something wonderful for nothing.

JAMES DEREL MONTEITH

Burlington Industries Scholarship Awarded

James Derel Monteith of Sylva, rising junior at the University of North Carolina, has been awarded the first Burlington Industries Scholarship given here, it was announced today by Chancellor Robert B. House and Prof. D. D. Carroll, chairman of the Faculty Committee on Scholarships and Student Aid.

The scholarship, which is valued at $1,000 covering two years, is made possible by the Burlington Industries Foundation, which announced in May the creation of a four-fold aid to education program.

Seven institutions selected for the program to date are the University in Chapel Hill, N. C. State College, Clemson, Georgia Tech, and the Universities of Tennessee, South Carolina and Virginia.

The scholarship's value, $500 a year during the recipient's junior and senior years, will be matched by the Burlington Industries Foundation with a gift to the institution itself.

Monteith, who has attained honor roll status since admission at UNC, was selected on a basis of "leadership, scholarship and financial need," Carroll said.

A graduate of Sylva High School, where he was an outstanding athlete, Monteith has been prominent in student activities here, in addition to providing a good part of his expenses through self-help work. He is a member of the executive committee of the Men's Interdormitory Council, member of the Student Legislature and the Publications Board, and is counselor for the orientation program.

During the past spring he was selected by Phi Beta Kappa as the outstanding scholar in the rising junior class, for which he automatically receives a stipend of $100.

Football Round-up Tourney August 18

The sixth annual Football Round-up golf tournament will be held on the University of North Carolina's Finley course Thursday, August 18, it was announced by Director of Athletics Chuck Erickson.

The Atlantic Coast Conference is joining in co-sponsoring the event which each fall brings together coaches, writers and photographers in a final golf fling before the opening of pre-season football practice.

Winners last year in the 18-hole medal play three-division tournament, were Bob Brooks, Raleigh News and Observer; A. E. Finley trophy (press and radio); Red McIntosh, N. C. State, William Muirhead trophy (coaches, athletic directors, trainers); Charles Kraft, Mount Olive, Nello Teer trophy (press photographers).

In addition to the big awards, there are smaller prizes for low net scores and other playing distinctions.

The tournament and all-day party has become an outstanding sports-social event of the late summer season in football circles of this area.

A barbecue supper will be served on the clubhouse grounds after the tournament when prizes will be awarded.

UNC Radio Series On National Network

The University of North Carolina radio series American Adventure was broadcast over the National Broadcasting Company network beginning last Thursday evening, according to an announcement from Earl Wynn, Director of the Communication Center.

Dr. Harris Purks acting president of the University when notified of this news said: "I am very pleased to learn of this recognition of the work of the Communication Center and the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures of the University of North Carolina by the National Broadcasting Company."

Written by John Ehle and directed by John Clayton, both of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Picture faculty, the series dramatizes 13 incidents in American history which illustrate basic values and characteristics of the American people.

The programs were broadcast over 77 educational radio stations throughout the United States last year. They won the Freedoms Foundation award and a first award in the Ohio State competition. One of the programs was selected as America's entry in international competition for the Italia Prize.

The first program of the series illustrated the spiritual equality of man through a story about a slave boy and the master who befriended him. The second program dealt with a Tennessee mountain woman who is forced by the Government to give up her family homestead when land is cleared for the TVA lakes in Tennessee.

The series was produced by the Communication Center on grants-in-aid from the Educational Television and Radio Center.

Student Group To Meet Sunday Night

The combined Methodist-Presbyterian student series of Sunday night discussion groups will meet again this Sunday night at 6:00 at the Methodist Church.

The topic for this week's discussion will be "The Answers." It is a dramatic reading reflecting the needs which precipitate revolution and describing two answers which have been offered to meet these needs: Christianity and Communism.

The public is invited to attend and participate in these discussions.

WUNC-TV Telecasts Connie Direct From Weather Bureau

By DORIS WEAVER

The most talked-about gal since "Hazel" swept in a new era in communications this week — an era of getting the straight facts to the people direct from the experts in an emergency.

While "Hurricane Connie" crawled up the coast, professional TV announcers stepped out of the picture on a widespread television hook-up, in favor of United States Department of Commerce Weather Bureau Meteorologists.

The staff of the U. S. Weather Bureau at Raleigh-Durham Airport by-passed sleep to keep a weather eye on teasing Connie, and to report her behavior in almost play-by-play fashion to the people of the State.

"Call out the crew!" came an early morning message from the University of North Carolina Director of Television Duff Browne to the WUNC-TV studio from the Weather Bureau at Raleigh-Durham Airport via inter-communications radio. This was Wednesday morning.

Within an hour, all crew members were present and accounted for, and on their way to man their various stations. Engineers quickly loaded the mobile unit bus with remote equipment and headed for the Weather Bureau. Office personnel was busy cancelling all programs for the evening.

"We'll aim for a 1 p.m. sign on," Director Browne said, and the word was passed along by radio to studios in Raleigh and Greensboro, and to the transmitter on Terrell's Mountain near Chapel Hill. However, technical difficulties slowed the starting time to 1:30 p.m.

As cameras were being set up in the main room of the Weather Bureau, other TV stations in the area were being contacted. By 1:30, three stations were ready to pick up the telecast, and another joined at the time of the second telecast at 2:00.

None of the Weather Bureau forecasters had been on television before,

Two of the rootin'-tootin' characters from "Deadwood Dick," which will be presented by the Junior Carolina Playmakers tonight and tomorrow night in the Playmakers Theatre, are James Hager of Harmony and Penny Fuller of Lumberton.

Junior Carolina Playmakers To Present "Deadwood Dick" Friday And Saturday

The Wild West comes to life this Friday and Saturday night in the Playmakers Theatre as the Junior Carolina Playmakers present "Deadwood Dick," a dashing melodrama of the wild and wooly West, the type Grandfather used to read.

The Junior Playmakers are a group of talented high-schoolers who are on campus this session studying Dramatic Arts. The production of "Deadwood Dick" will be the result of their studies in writing, acting, and play production. These young thespians do a professional job in making their characters live for the audience and each other.

"Deadwood Dick" was a Robin Hood of the Black Hills created by the imaginative pen of the little known writer, Edward L. Wheeler, who started the series of stories in 1876 and ended fifteen years and sixty-four stories later. Playwright Tom Taggart has taken the best of these sixty-four stories and written a delightful melodrama which involves all the favorite plots of the "old-timey" Westerns.

Director Louise Lamont guides her talented cast through hilarious plot situations such as the discovery of long-lost daughters, stolen gold mines, kidnapped heroines, and hairbreadth escapes. Mrs. Lamont says that these plays were known as melodramas because they were accompanied in their action by incidental melody. This show is no exception, with members of the cast singing such numbers as "The Curse of an Aching Heart," "My Mother Was A Lady," "She's More to Be Pitied Than Censured," and "The Dreary Black Hills." Authentic to the last detail, the piano sounds exactly like one of the old saloon up-rights.

The action of "Deadwood Dick" takes place in the Man-Trap Saloon which is owned by that lady of dubious virtue, Calamity Jane. An idea of the action might be gotten from the titles of some of the scenes: The Abduction of Rose Blossom, The Sin of Molly Lovelace (the sheriff's wife), The Kiss Auction, Dick Wanted, Dead or Alive, The Hairbreadth Escape, and The Devil Claims His Own.

Though this play is based on a series of old Western stories, remember that it was written by a modern playwright for modern audiences. Some of the lines are simply terrific, rivaling "The Moon Is Blue" in their naughtiness. This isn't a Roy Rogers type story, but rather it is a delightfully risque story designed for a mature adult audience. Not only are some of the lines extremely funny, but the play is spiced with a very suggestive adventuress, a drunken father who brands his baby girl with a red-hot poker,.. and a few illegitimate children thrown in for good measure.

The scenery, by Harvey Whetstone, is so real in its appearance that one feels that he is really sitting in the Man-Trap Saloon. The authentic costuming is being handled by Bob Snead with such effectiveness that the characters look as though they were taken straight from an old tin-type. Harvey and Bob both hold positions with the regular Playmaker organization.

This show, "Deadwood Dick," will be presented in the Playmakers' Theatre this Friday and Saturday nights, the 19th and 20th of August. The tickets are 75 cents each and are on sale at Ledbetter-Pickard's or the Playmaker office in Abernethy Hall.

Don't miss this fine entertainment and a chance to encourage these talented youngsters.

Dancing And Refreshment

The Summer Activities Council has announced that it will sponsor a Final Fling splash party tonight at Kessing outdoor pool. Dancing will be held from 8 to 11 and the pool will be open for swimming from 8:30 to 10:30.

According to Ken Callendar, chairman of the committee, refreshments will be served and a combo will play danceable music.

Other members of Callendar's committee are Jane Todd, Henri VanOrder, Jack Warner and Dick Hart.

Dress will be very informal. In the event of rain, the program will be cancelled.

Wadsworth Says Move Your Belongings Now!

According to Jim Wadsworth, Housing Director, the nineteen men's dormitories will be opened August 23 and 24. All male students who will be living in dorms next fall are requested to move their belongings into the rooms they will be occupying next fall on these two days.

Even if someone is currently living in your room, make every effort to get your belongings moved in by the time the dorms close at 4:30 pm on the 24th.

The dorms will reopen on September 8th.

Saturday Classes

Just a reminder . . . we have classes in all departments tomorrow, Saturday, August 20th. Don't forget to show up with the usual shining faces.

A SUMMER SUCCESS

As we review the summer and the activities that have been presented for our benefit and enjoyment, we realize that the Summer Activities Council deserves a vote of thanks from the students for the fine job that it has done.

The S.A.C. presented many special events as well as weekly events. Among the special events were the Watermelon Festival, a lecture by George V. Denny, welcome parties, and a presentation of Dr. Polgar. The weekly events featured ballroom dance classes, bridge instruction, movies, square dances, and "Music Under The Stars".

Other special events were presented by the Music Department, the International Relations Club, and the Playmakers. All of the members of these organizations spent many hours working on these events, and their hard work paid off in good entertainment for us.

This successful summer of fine entertainment will be topped off by the Final Fling Party sponsored by the S.A.C. to be held tonight. We're hoping to see you there.

WUNC-TV Telecasts

and holding open house on TV looked like a potential threat to getting their real job of compiling forecasts done under stepped up pressure.

"Tell you what," agreed Charles Carney, Director of the Weather Bureau, "you get Bill Long to get the information to the public by television, and we'll go along with the idea."

Bill Long is a graduate of State Cllege with a degree in Meteorology. He did the weather summary for WUNC-TV last winter. Naturally, Weather Bureau officials wanted information to be accurate and up-to-the-minute, so they required that the master of ceremonies be an expert.

WUNC-TV had little trouble contacting Long, since he is studying at the University of North Carolina this summer.

Throughout the three-day period of telecasting, Weather Bureau forecasters took turns before the cameras at half-hour intervals.

Clumps of camera cables leading into the building from the bus outside, the possibility of bumping into a giant camera at the turn of an elbow, and the constant jangle of the telephone in the same room with microphones did not seem to faze them.

Clerk Stenographer Mary Bowers comemnted with a smile, "I haven't done a thing in two days but answer the phone. One woman wanted to know when she should make reservations at a hotel. She said she always stays in a hotel during a hurricane."

Climatologist Albert Hardy explained the equipment used to gather weather reports during a lull in telecasting on Thursday. He was informally dressed in a blue sports shirt, to which was pinned his name and title. This system was used by Weather Bureau staff and WUNC-TV workers alike to save time and confusion.

He was standing beside a teletype machine, so he began with that. "The reports come in on this machine from all over the country," he said. "It's in code to save time. Forecasters take this information, decipher it, and compile it into reports for pilots and ordinary land dwellers as well.

The machine is used for both sending and receiving reports.

From the teletype, he moved to a large desk where Chief Aviation Forecaster A. B. Elam was marking codes from the teletype on a map of the United States.

About this time a squall of rain pumped against the long window and needles started bouncing on the Observers Console beside Mr. Elam's desk. Meterologist Ralph Evans noted the changes and ran across the room to the teletype, where he started tapping out the message.

"The Observers Console shows the weather right here in this area now. When there's a sudden change like this, we put it on the teletype right then," explained Mr. Hardy.

There was another sudden change, as Forecaster Bill Chappell opened the door and let in a blow of wind and rain before slamming it. Almost immediately a girl from the TV station came running down the hall shouting, "Bill . . . Bill Chappell . . . are you Bill?" Then as Chappell came dripping into the room . . . "You're on. They want you on radio." Chappell made no answer as he dashed down the hall.

And on into the night and the next day. There was no let-up as the Weather Bureau kept the public posted on dangerous Connie. Television crew members took only enough time to have coffee and barbeque sandwiches taken out by wives, in the bus.

Wesley Wallace and Richard Burdick, members of the WUNC-TV staff, introduced forecasters on television. Mr. Burdick caught up on his reading between telecasts.

Members of the Weather Bureau staff are: Charles Carney, Director of the Bureau and Chief Forecaster; Forecasters William Chappell, Sam Duke, and Paul Bowers; Aviation Forecasters A. B. Elam, Chief; Julian Posey, Don Reynders, D. B. Stone, Ralph Evans and Bob Schoner; Climatologist Albert Hardy; Clerk Stenographer Mary Bowers; and Trainee Ronald Pearson.

Money Comes To UNC From Strange Sources

By ROBERT H. BARTHOLOMEW

The University of North Carolina was provided for in the North Carolina Constitution of 1776, and actually chartered in 1789; however, at neither time did the founding fathers grant any money for the operation of the infant school.

True, there were certain gifts made in 1789 when the charter was granted, but they amounted to little at that time. One was "arrearages due from Sheriffs and other officers" prior to January 1, 1783.

Another such gift was that escheats were granted, especially concerning land warrants that had been voted to Revolutionary War soldiers. This meant that if the soldier did not claim the land, the tract became the property of the University of North Carolina.

Escheat simply means the reverting to the State of unclaimed property and money.

Today, this sounds like it may have been an excellent source of income, but it wasn't. Even if the titles to these lands granted the soldiers were clear—and they weren't—the lands were mostly located in the wilds of Tennessee, and were practically worthless, selling for only a few cents an acre.

However, these early escheat laws did lay the foundation for the modern system of escheats, which brings in thousands of dollars each year to the Consolidated University of North Carolina. The income from this money goes into a scholarship fund for needy students at UNC, N. C. State College and the Woman's College in Greensboro.

At the present time, the escheats fund of UNC stands at nearly $2,000,000. To show the growth of this fund, it is interesting to note that at the end of the 1947 fiscal year there was less than $500,000 in the fund.

This money is invested by financial officers of the University and brings in about $70,000 a year.

Escheats for the University are handled by Kemp S. Cate, who became escheats officer in 1937. He is a native of Orange County, being born on a farm a few miles from Chapel Hill. He has studied law and accounting, and the knowledge of both are important in his job.

In the event of a bank failure and deposits for which the liquidators cannot find owners, the money becomes the property of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

The length of time that elapses before the escheat takes effect is governed by law.

However, it should not be presumed that this money or other unclaimed property is lost if the rightful owner would ever show up to claim it. Such money or property may be claimed at any time after it has been escheated to the University by its rightful owner or the heirs of the owner. Even the statute of limitations does not apply to escheats.

Another source of money for the escheat fund is unclaimed deposits with public utilities. There are large numbers of people and business firms who move from a town and never claim meter deposits placed with gas, water and electric companies.

Many of these utility deposits are as much as $100. Unclaimed utility deposits in North Carolina last year amounted to $6,651.13, and this sum was escheated to the University. This sum does not include escheats from two of the State's largest utilities that have not yet reported.

The largest single amount of money to come to the University was in 1948 when Cates collected $275,598 from railroads operating in North Carolina. This case ran for four years and came about through an overcharge of fares by the companies.

The railroads concerned raised their fares from 1.65 cents to 2.2 cents per mile, and maintained the 2.2 rate until they were restrained by the courts.

The case finally went to the United States Supreme Court, and the Court backed the State in the matter.

Technically, the money might have been refunded to the travelers who paid it, but to qualify the travelers would have to present ticket stubs or other legal evidence. Since this was considered an unending job that would nearly be impossible, the money was escheated to the University.

At the present time Dr. Blackwell Robinson of High Point College is working on a history of the UNC escheats, which will cover the period from 1789 when the University was chartered up to the present day.

Dr. Robinson, a native of Goldsboro, received his doctor's degree in history here in 1953, and is the editor of the revised "North Carolina Guide."

An example of how property escheats to the University may be shown in this manner: suppose John Jones of Wayne County, farm owner, dies leaving no heirs or will.

Cates will be notified by the clerk of court of Wayne County of what has happened and then make arrangements to go to Goldsboro to look into this matter.

At Goldsboro Cates would make every effort to locate an heir of the dead man. Failing in this, he would advertise in a local paper for four consecutive weeks as required by law.

If no heir appeared after the ads had been run, Cates would then ask the judge of Superior Court for a declaratory judgement. If the judge thinks Cates has presented sufficient evidence that there is no heir to the property, he will sign the judgement. After the judgement is signed, Cates will advertise the property for another four weeks, this time for public sale. If he receives a fair offer, the property will be sold and a deed will be issued to the purchaser. The income from this money will eventually find its way into the hands of a deserving North Carolinian for educational purposes.

Final Discussion Group Meets Sunday Night

The final discussion group of the combined Methodist-Presbyterian church groups will be held Sunday night at 6:00 at the Methodist Church.

The topic will be "The Mission of the Church in a World of Revolution." The speaker will be Dr. R. J. McMullen, who was a Presbyterian Minister in China for 35 years.

Shown above is hard-running Ken Keller, who has been named to Coach George Barclay's mid-summer starting eleven. A senior this year, Keller is a halfback from Aliquippa, Pa.

Tentative UNC Starting Team Comprises Nine Lettermen, Two Sophs

There likely will be many a switch and experiment before the University of North Carolina's gala football opener here on Sept. 24 with terrific Oklahoma, but a tentative Tar Heel starting lineup lists nine lettermen and two sophomores.

This is shown on a working chart prepared by Head Coach George Barclay and his aides following spring practice and the Blue-White scrimmage game.

"It may be changed before we have our first scrimmage," emphasized Barclay. "Much will depend upon the condition of the candidates when they report. Also the early drills may show that some of the players may be greatly improved and others have gone back."

The two sophomores are Don Marquette at quarterback and Buddy Payne at end. The quarterback spot is very questionable as to its starter. Len Bullock, last year's regular, is due to be back but it has been reported he may not play football this season. Doug Farmer, a junior nonletterman, is a candidate. And Marquette will get stern competition from two other sophs, David Reed and Buddy Sasser, any one of which could claim the starting role.

Barclay mailed invitations this week to 49 candidates to report for preseason practice beginning Sept. 1.

Number Of Changes In University Faculty Announced By Chancellor Robert B. House

A number of resignations and leaves of absence in the faculty of the University of North Carolina were announced by Chancellor Robert B. House.

Richard Dooley, dean-elect of the School of Business Administration, now on leave at Harvard, has resigned and will not return to the University in September, 1955.

Dr. Floyd Stovall, professor in the Department of English, has resigned effective September, 1955, to accept the Edgar Allan Poe Professorship of English at the University of Virginia.

Dr. Dwight W. Bissell, associate professor in the School of Public Health, resigned as of July 1, 1955.

Dr. Harry Smith, assistant professor in the School of Public Health, resigned as of July 1, 1955.

Leaves of absence have been granted to:

Dr. Urban T. Holmes, professor in the Department of Romance Language, who is recommended for a Kenan leave of absence for the fall semester of 1955. He will study abroad.

Dr. Clifford P. Lyons, professor in the Department of English, who is recommended for a Kenan leave of absence for the spring semester of 1956. He will do advance work in Shakespeare at the Folger Library in Washington.

Dr. Wayne A. Bowers, professor in the Department of Physics, who is recommended for a Kenan leave of absence for the spring semester of 1956. He will be at the University of California during this leave.

Dr. Robert Shankle, associate professor in the School of Dentistry, has been granted a military leave of absence until April, 1957.

Dr. Wassily Hoeffding, associate professor in the Department of Statistics, who is recommended for a leave of absence for the fall semester of 1955, will do research in statistics at Columbia University, New York.

Dr. Sterling Stoudemire, professor of the Department of Romance Language who is recommended for a leave of absence for the spring semester of 1956, will do research in Spain.

Dr. H. A. Bierck, Jr., associate professor in the Department of History, who is recommended for a leave of absence for the academic year of 1955-56, will accept a faculty fellowship provided by the Ford Foundation.

Dr. Eugene R. Long, associate professor in the Department of Psychology, who is recommended for a leave of absence for the academic year of 1955-56, will accept a faculty fellowship provided by the Ford Foundation.

Dr. Wilton Mason, associate professor in the Department of Music, who is recommended for a leave of absence for the academic year of 1955-56, will accept a faculty fellowship provided by the Ford Foundation

Dr. Thomas M. Stanback Jr., assistant professor in the School of Business Administration, who is recommended for a leave of absence for the academic year of 1955-56, will accept a research appointment grant by the National Bureau of Economic Research.

Dr. John E. Dykstra, professor in the School of Business Administration, who has been recommended for a leave of absence for the academic year of 1955-56, will accept an exchange fellowship with the Scott Paper Co.

UNC Motion Picture Division Lends Realism To Current Planetarium Space Excursion

By BILLY ARTHUR

University of North Carolina technicians have scored again, this time in creating an illusion that one is aboard a nuclear powered space ship hurtling through the outer world at a phenomenal rate of speed.

To achieve it the entire facilities of the WUNC-TV motion picture production unit were employed, and the technical skills of its unit combined with those of the Morehead Planetarium.

The result of the cooperation: as "Nosey Nelly," the space ship, zooms off on "A Trip to Saturn," the excursionist-audience at the Planetarium views the heavens on the ship's "tele-video-scope." Before their eyes the rotating earth is left behind, and the ship approaches the moon, then Titan and Encaladus which are satelites of Saturn, and then finally Saturn itself. On the return trip, he views the approach to earth and the movement gives the illusion that he is actually aboard a space ship and seeing the heavens in their full, rich color.

How was the illusion made? First, Planetarium Manager A. F. Jenzano, Chapel Hill, and William E. Gulley, a native of Greenville, director of the WUNC-TV motion picture production unit, detailed every desired effect, considered the photographic problems of rotation, focus, parallax and lighting, and weighed them against astronomical exactness and public appeal.

The Planetarium's chief technician, John T. Brittain, built a 14 by 30 foot cyclorama of coffin cloth to portray the black of night. Onto that were stuck more than 2,000 white Seventeen are lettermen. Twelve lettermen are lost from last year, including fullbacks Marshall Newman and Don Klochack who had more eligibility but will not be in school.

The very tentative mid-summer starting lineup lists Will Frye and Buddy Payne at ends; Jack Maultsby and Roland Perdue at tackles; John Jones and Bill Koman at guards; George Stavnitski at center; Ron Marquette at quarterback; Ken Keller and Ed Sutton at halfbacks; and Don Lear at fullback.

Barclay commented "I'm anxious to get started. I think the boys will make a better showing this year from all indications this summer, they're anxious too."

"Our schedule is tough," he continued, "but we like tough opposition. It's more of an incentive for the boys."

The complete roster also subject to change, is as follows:

Ends: Lettermen Will Frye, Norman Lane, Darden Livesay, Larry Muschamp, and non-lettermen Doug Malone, Buddy Payne, Vince Olen, Charles Robinson and Paul Pulley.

Tackles: Lettermen Roland Perdue, Jack Maultsby, John Bilich, and non-lettermen Tom Maultsby, Phil Blaser, Dick Smith and Tom James.

Guards: Lettermen Bill Koman, Wilson Shoulars, John Jones and non-lettermen Jack Lineberger, Hap Setzer, Bill Woods, Glenn Daughtry and Jack MacKeown.

PETE IVEY

Pete Ivey, Executive Editor of the Shelby, N. C. Star, has been appointed director of the News Bureau of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He succeeds the late Robert W. Madry, who died last April. Ivey will assume his new duties Sept. 1.

Ivey To Take Over News Bureau Sept. 1

A widely known 42-year-old North Caorlina newspaper editor has been appointed director of the University of North Carolina News Bureau.

Chancellor Robert B. House announced that Alfred Guy (Pete) Ivey, now executive editor of the Shelby Star and formerly associate editor of the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel, will take over the office Sept. 1.

Ivey will succeed the late Robert W. Madry, who served more than 30 years with the bureau as its only past full time director.

Madry died last April 8. Since that time the bureau has been in charge of Jake Wade, University sports publicist, who was not a candidate for the permanent appointment.

Ivey, a native of Rocky Mount, is a University alumnus, class of 1935. While in college he was editor of the Carolina Buccaneer, a student humor publication, prolific writer for the Daily Tar Heel, campus newspaper. As a student he was widely known as a humorist and after dinner speaker.

Later he was the director of the Graham Memorial Student Union and managing editor of the Alumni Review.

In 1938, Ivey joined the staff of the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel and worked, progressively, as reporter, feature writer, columnist, promotion manager, editorial writer and associate editor.

During World War Two he served as Public Relations Officer in the army. As lieutenant he handled general publicity and later as captain was Chief, Technical Information Branch, ASF, in charge of the New York and Washington offices. In this assignment he had a wide range of duties pertaining to public relations.

Immediately after this he was associated temporarily with the Special Services Division of the Veterans Administration at Washington. He organized 35 newspapers in Virginia hospitals, these being edited and published by the patients under his direction. Ivey also at one time was public relations representative with the Seaboard Air Line Railway.

In 1951 he won a Nieman fellowship at Harvard University and was granted a leave of absence from the Winston-Salem papers to study there a year.

Ivey left Winston-Salem several months ago to take over his current post with the Shelby Star. His writings at both Winston-Salem and Shelby, especially those in a humorous and human interest vein, have been widely quoted.

He is married to the former Helene Gores of Weaverville, N. C. They have two daughters, Sarah Lane, 9, and Helene Roemer, 6.

UNC Motion Picture

map tacks, straight pins and thumbtacks of different sizes to simulate the stars. Then Mrs. Marjorie Beshers, a Chapel Hill artist, painted in some galaxies with aluminum paint.

When the lights were turned on, the effect was a night sky with thousands of individual stars and galaxies.

The next problem was to photograph a rotating earth and moving planets against that backdrop to give the audience the impression it was actually viewing them in the night skies. But the moon, earth, planets and satellites had to be built to scale and into sizes that would not be out of proportion as the camera approached or moved away from them. Too, they had to appear to be in motion. That was achieved by moving the camera and dolly in arcs as it approached and departed from them.

For the planets, Planetarium technicians used selastic, a material that softens in a solvent so that it can be molded into any desired shape, then permitted to harden. Mrs. Beshers added the color.

When presented on the "televiewer", the earth and moon and planets are lighted by a man-made sun, without shadows or spotlight distraction.

"This is what we have needed in all of our space trip shows and others, too, and it is far superior to any commercial product that we have ever used or I have ever seen," Jenzano commented. "It is admirable that here on the campus we are able to produce such a movie in full color that equals a conceivable Hollywood product."

He was highly complimentary of the cooperation and skills of the motion picture unit: Gulley, who directed and did the camera work; Robert Champion, a native of Kannapolis, who was production assistant; and William E. Warnock, who was the lighting technician.
